Nevada and the other States should not forfeit a single penny of highway funds. And if we are ever to lose money, it should not occur on reconciliation—a bill to reduce the budget deficit. It should only occur after careful deliberation on a highway bill. This body should follow the normal legislative process, particularly on such a contentious issue.

Congress will address this issue next year. For the sake of fairness, let us wait until then to change formulas and other provisions of the highway bill. I support my colleague's point of order and urge all of my fellow Senators to do so as well.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I support the 95 percent highway reallocation provision included in this reconciliation package by the Finance Committee.

The way in which funds are allocated under the Federal Aid Highway Program today is completely and totally unfair.

The States that need highway funds the most—ones with heavy interstate truck traffic, ones with wornout, crumbling bridges, with annual salt and freeze winter damage—the States whose highways are the oldest in the country—are the States that consistently get ripped off on the highway program.

Ohio is one of those States.

So are 22 other States in this country.

It is absurd that in 1990, highway funds are still being apportioned to the States on the basis of such factors as rural postage mileage and rural population.

Since 1957, when the Federal Aid Highway Program was restructured, my State has contributed nearly $700 million more to the highway program than it has received back.

Here are some others.

Texas lost $2.2 billion; Michigan lost $667 million; Indiana lost $652 million; Wisconsin lost $556 million; California lost $1.8 billion.

It is absurd.

Ohio's highways are some of the most beat-up roads in the country.

Ohio is a heavily industrialized crossroads State. The amount of truck traffic that travels through Ohio is infinitely greater than the traffic through Idaho, Montana or South Dakota.

Yet Ohio's drivers continue to subsidize highway construction in those States—at the expense of their own roads—year after year after year.

Now this reconciliation package increases the gas tax. Drivers in my State will be asked to pay even higher taxes—to shell out even more money to repair roads out West.

The accompanying provision to increase the minimum allocation to 95 percent is only fair.

To raise the gas tax, but to continue the same old subsidy system, would be ridiculously unfair.

It is absurd for Senators, whose States have benefited from an unfair system for years, to now complain that their States will be treated unfairly by the Bentsen amendment.

The fact is, the Bentsen 95 percent minimum provision only applies to the additional funds to be raised under a gas tax increase.

No State is going to lose money. Every State will receive some increase.

It is a good provision, it is equitable and it is fair.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I join many others of my colleagues who have spoken their opposition this morning to the proposed changes in the Federal Highway Administration minimum allocation formula contained in the budget summit agreement.

I think the adoption of the 95-percent minimum allocation formula from its current 85 percent would set a very dangerous precedent and is bad public policy. In addition, the 95 percent proposal is ill-timed and completely inappropriate as part of this budget effort when the entire highway program is due for reauthorization next year. As has been so eloquently stated by my colleagues, the minimum allocation formula has nothing to do with deficit reduction and everything to do with the shape and character of future national highway policy.

Utah is one of the States that will be sorely penalized by such a change. Utah normally receives more in transportation funds than are collected in the State. On the surface this may seem unfair. However, the reality is that this is a correct policy and should be continued.

The State of Utah has been charged with constructing large numbers of miles of highways across unpopulated, Federal lands that provide no tax base to the State coffers. Many times these lands are primarily used by non-Utahans engaged in recreation or commerce. It is not fair that Utah would be asked to maintain these roads with a smaller share of Federal support that was given to construct them. The Utah Department of Transportation estimates that Utah would lose at least $10 million per year in revenue under this proposal. That is a large chunk of money to my State and its loss would have a devastating impact on Utah's ability to keep and maintain the Federal highways as they should be.

I do not think this proposal should be included in any Federal highway reauthorization. But I think it is especially onerous and inappropriate that it has been proposed as part of this budget reconcilation bill.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I would like to rise today to add to the comments of Senator BAUCUS, among others, oppose an effort to raise the minimum allocation of highway trust fund moneys from 85 to 95 percent. This provision would seriously hurt and be unfair to the economies of largely rural States such as Nebraska.

This provision would increase the minimum allocation—the minimum payback 19 States are currently entitled to receive from their payments into the highway trust fund—from 85 to 95 percent. By increasing the minimum allocation to these 19 States we would dramatically decrease the pool of funds available to rural States like Nebraska to maintain their highway infrastructure.

Supporters of the increased minimum allocation argue that with the near completion of the Interstate Highway System we need to develop a more equitable formula for the distribution of highway trust fund moneys. Mr. President, I find this argument curious because it neglects the importance of the ongoing need for rebuilding and maintenance of that system. These demands are tremendous and it would be shortsighted to neglect them at a time that we need to strengthen our country's infrastructure.

Further, to those Senators who argue that equity demands an increase in the minimum allocation, I would point out that this is an argument that we neglect to apply when it comes to other forms of Federal investments. If we consider the allocation of military spending, research spending, spending under the provisions of the savings and loan bill, along with billions and billions of other Federal dollars, it is clear that behind the equity argument relating to the minimum allocation formula is another effort to draw dollars away from rural America.

For these reasons I applaud the decision of the Chair to remove the provision increasing the minimum allocation of highway trust fund revenues from the Senate reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The provision is contained in the title submitted by the Finance Committee to the budget reconciliation bill. The provision apportions highway funds between the States, which is within the jurisdiction of the Environment and Public Works Committee, and therefore violates subsection (d)(1)(C) of the Byrd rule.

The point of order is sustained, and the provision, pursuant to the rule, is stricken from the bill.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 3011

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] proposes an amendment numbered 3011.

Strike section 7405 of the bill (relating to increase and extension of highway related taxes and trust fund).

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think I have an understanding with Senator SYMMS that goes something like this: He has sent his amendment to the desk. He will not object if we now permit the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee to take up to 10 minutes—is that what the distinguished chairman wants, 10 minutes; 15 minutes?

Mr. BENTSEN. I would like 15 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Up to 15 minutes for his opening remarks, and Senator SYMMS would proceed immediately thereafter with the time as allocated on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? If not, it is so ordered. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes. And thereafter, the Senator from Idaho is recognized—what was the request of the Senator from New Mexico for the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DOMENICI. Immediately after.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what period of time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe that is controlled by law. The Senator has not agreed to relinquish his time. I believe he has 2 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In other words, the Senator does not make any request.

Mr. DOMENICI. He may relinquish some, but that is what he has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators BYRD and MURKOWSKI be added as cosponsors to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I will not ask to waive the point of order, because I understand the legitimacy of a procedural point. But I shall advise the Senate I will rise again on that particular issue, insofar as the formula is restructured next year, and will strongly support the idea that the donor States get a better deal.

Mr. President, what we are doing here today is dealing with a decade of indulgence by this country of ours; a decade of writing $150 billion worth of hot checks; regrettably the American people do not understand nor have they been advised of the depth of the problem. It has taken us months to come to this point. One of the reasons it has taken us so long is that we are living under the illusion that we can spend on and on and on, without ever having to pay for it.

That is no longer the case. It is important that the Congress and this administration help the American people to understand the economic problems we face and what these deficits mean for the future of this country. Within the last 3 years, we went from the greatest creditor Nation in the world to the biggest debtor Nation in the world.

The spending cuts and revenue package we have brought out of the Finance Committee is a bipartisan measure.

It is not the proposal the Senator from Texas would have written or the proposal the minority leader from Kansas would have written or the proposal the majority leader from Maine would have written, or my distinguished friend, the ranking minority member from Oregon would have written. It is a compromise. As my colleagues may recall, I walked out on the rose garden ceremony last year because I said the budget proposal crafted by the White House and the Congress was smoke and mirrors—too much creative accounting. And I was proven right. That is one of the reasons we are here, because we did not address the problem earlier. This package before us today has some very politically unpopular things in it. It calls for sacrifice. It is a credible cut in the deficit. The deficit will be reduced by $40 billion in the first year and $500 billion over the next 5 years. The question is, Will we in the Congress continue posturing and arguing, fighting for partisan advantage, or bring this deficit reduction effort to a conclusion? The American people are rightfully fed up with the arguing. They want the President to be part of this process and they want him to show the leadership that has to be shown in this situation, they do not want to see him walk away from it saying, "You in the Congress settle this." Ours is a balanced Government of three branches. One cannot not imagine a Governor not participating in the budget decision in his own State. So it is with the President. We ask for his participation.

We brought a package out of the summit. The Finance Committee revenue and spending cuts proposals before you today are a much better, progressive set of proposals. If you look at the table of distribution, where in the summit there was a 7-percent tax increase for the poorest among us, in today's proposal they have been held harmless. The people who pay the most are those who make the highest incomes. This package came out of the committee by a vote of 15 to 5, a majority of Democrats and Republicans supporting this legislation. That is what I mean by compromise.

But let me say there is one thing I will not compromise on, and that is trying to see that the burden of cutting this deficit is equitably shared across all economic levels, and I am talking particularly about that sixtenths of 1 percent of the people at the top. They must bear their fair share. The interesting thing is that I think the vast majority of them expect and want to bear an equitable share of responsibility for reducing the deficit.

One of the things we have to think about as we are completing this budget process is that we must not lose sight of the bottom line: What could happen to this country and its economy and its credit ratings if we fail to enact a serious deficit reduction plan. West Germany does not have to buy our securities as they have over the last decade. They have East Germany to be concerned about now and Eastern Europe. Japan's stock market has been in a free fall, the country has taken a tremendous loss—they have problems in their banks, add overinflated real estate. We understand that. The Japanese do not have to buy our securities. You let this dollar continue falling as it has over the last 6 months and it will add to inflation concerns in this country and increase interest rates. We must show to the rest of the world that we are in charge of our economic destiny.

We cannot afford to see another Government shutdown, further recriminations, further loss in our capacity to govern. If we fail to act and have a sequester, giving us problems in the operation of the Federal Government, then we can expect further selloffs in the stock market and further escalation of interest rates.

Mr. President, the budget summit negotiations were marked by partisan differences, differing views about how the American people should share the burden of deficit reduction, and I expect that some of those differences are going to be referred in amendments on this floor from Members on both sides of the aisle. But in the final analysis, when we vote on this bill, we can and we should put aside those partisan differences and do what is right for the country and put the country first, ahead of partisan differences. It is critically important for the Senate to lead. I believe the Senate will live up to that responsibility, move this legislation forward, and pass a reconciliation bill to be signed and that will be signed by the President.

In the Finance Committee title of the reconciliation bill, the contribution from the highest income taxpayers in the country is substantially greater than was contemplated in the budget summit agreement. We have doubled the share of the tax burden on those making over $200,000 a year and we reduced the burden on the majority—average Americans, middle-income Americans—as we should have. Over the last decade middle America increased its earnings only 3 percent after taxes, yet the rich increased theirs by some 87 percent. They can afford to help share in cutting this deficit.

We were able to make some changes in the summit package by increasing the share of the deficit reduction borne by those with the highest incomes. We were able to reduce the hit on elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries by $10 billion. Where the summit agreement had them paying a 30-percent premium on part B of Medicare, this package cuts it back and continues the current policy under which they pay 25 percent.

I am especially pleased to note that the Finance Committee package includes some very important—albeit modest—spending initiatives to protect low-income elderly and disabled beneficiaries from the additional costs associated with high premiums, deductables, and as payments for Medicare services.

In addition, we expanded Medicaid coverage for low-income children—a national priority when are infant mortality rate is alarmingly high and 12 million American children lack health insurance coverage.

Originally, I had proposed a $20 billion reduction in the Medicare savings, but we had to compromise, and $10 billion was the best we could do. We eliminated the 2-cent tax per gallon on refined petroleum products, including the tax on home heating oil that was so controversial in the Northeast. We cut the size of the gasoline tax by over 20 percent. We deleted a provision that would have delayed for 2 more weeks the unemployment checks for the unemployed. And, finally, the Finance Committee deleted the ill-conceived, so-called small business incentives from the summit agreement. I heard Republicans and Democrats alike criticizing that one. The Finance Committee replaced these with some important initiatives that Members are familiar with and that have broad bipartisan support. These include the extenders—the mortgage revenue bond program, the 25-percent deduction for health insurance premiums by the self-employed, and the targeted jobs tax credit, as well as the low-income housing credit and the research and experimentation credit. All these are included in this package.

These are some significant improvements, Mr. President. This is a package that I think both Democratic and Republican Senators can support. The package has the support of 15 members of the Finance Committee, Democrats and Republicans. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this piece of legislation so it receives the same kind of strong bipartisan support from the Senate that it received in the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do not see Senator SYMMS on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has returned.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is not the Symms amendment the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Symms amendment is the pending business at the present time. The Senator is on the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the Senate I think he is going to agree to a half-hour.

Senator SYMMS is here. We indicated some time ago as we listed these amendments that the Senator desired a half-hour. Is that correct?

Mr. SYMMS. That is correct. I must say, if I may have 30 seconds to respond to the Senator, I could argue my case in well less than a half-hour. It is a very simple case.

I just would ask unanimous consent, however, to add as original cosponsors to my amendment Senator HATCH, Senator GARN, Senator HELMS, Senator HUMPHREY, Senator WALLOP, Senator ARMSTRONG, Senator KASTEN, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator GRASSLEY. How many of those Senators wish to speak on this I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Thirty minutes is all the time this Senator needs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time be limited to a half-hour on the amendment and a half-hour in opposition. Is that all right with the Chairman?

Mr. SASSER. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I assume to be divided in the usual form.

Mr. DOMENICI. Obviously Senator SYMMS has half an hour and Senator SASSER has half an hour in opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You wish one-half hour equally divided, an hour equally divided, one-half hour to each side?

Is there objection?

Mr. SYMMS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, would it then be in order for other Senators who wish time to be able to speak from the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not under the unanimous-consent request. The manager of the bill can yield time from the time that they control. But the unanimous-consent request order would cover the specifics of the amendment unless they yield time.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but for the purposes of attempting to establish some rough schedule, the Senator from Montana and I have an amendment of some complexity to it that we would like to offer. The Senator from Montana has a clean air conference that is going on. I ask the leaders if it would be possible for us to get unanimous consent at this point to follow Senator SYMMS' amendment with our amendment. We would be glad to agree to a time limit.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am not in a position at this moment to be able to agree to the Senator's request. The leadership has indicated their wishes with regard to taking up two more amendments immediately after the Symms amendment is disposed of.

I cannot, unfortunately, agree to the Senator's request.

Mr. DOMENICI. Might we say to the distinguished Senator, however, with the Chairman's concurrence, that we will do everything we can to give adequate notice. We have a couple of amendments that the leaders have asked us to take up next, but we would be delighted to give plenty of advance notice because of the schedule to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. CONRAD. Reserving the right to object further, Mr. President, I ask if I could be advised what the next two amendments are that the leadership seeks to take up?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, there are two amendments by the Senator from Florida dealing with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. One of those amendments, as I understand it, gives the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation the authority to decline to insure any federally chartered bank.

The other amendment by the Senator from Florida is less clear. That is an amendment that allows the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as I understand it, simply to rate banks as to the risk that they might offer to the insurance fund.

With regard to the Senator from Washington, Mr. GORTON's amendment, perhaps Senator DOMENICI could address that better than I.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand that it deals with the FAA. I think it is being worked out now.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object further, I hope not to have to object, I do not want to cause a problem with the schedule. The leaders are attempting to implement it here. I want to cooperate. But I also want, to the degree they are able to achieve it, some understanding about an ability to offer our amendment.

The last thing I would want to do is find that we at the evening hour all of a sudden are told we have to be done tonight, and some of us are frozen out. This is a substantial amendment. We want to have a chance to give our colleagues a chance to vote on that.

Would it be possible to get an agreement or some informal commitment, at least, from the leadership that after the amendments that have been outlined we would then have the right to offer our amendment?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, first let me assure the Senator from South Dakota there is no effort to shut any Senator out from offering an amendment. I think there is going to be ample time for all amendments to be offered and to be fully debated.

I would be reluctant to enter into any agreement now as to an order of precedence for calling up amendments or amendments to be debated without first conversing with the leadership on that question. But I will say to the Senator who has been sitting here most of the morning waiting in turn to bring up his amendment that it is anticipated that his amendment will be brought up at sometime this afternoon.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the leaders.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico on limitation of time? Hearing no objection——

Mr. SYMMS. This Senator from Idaho will have 30 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. The Senator from New Mexico can yield time to other Senators as he wishes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the unanimous-consent request is that the argument on the amendment will be limited to 1 hour, one-half controlled by the Senator from Idaho, and one-half hour controlled by the opposition to the Senator from Idaho on his amendment. So, there is a 1-hour time limit.

Mr. SYMMS. Reserving the right to object, I want to make this clear. Since we have been standing here I have had three Senators call in who wished to be heard on this. The Senator from Idaho needs 30 minutes; the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] has asked for 10 minutes. Can that be made part of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the one who propounded the unanimous-consent request is willing to accept that, yes. That can be done. Does the Senator wish to extend this to an hour and 10 minutes?

Mr. DOMENICI. We will try to accommodate.

Mr. SYMMS. I do not want to hold us up. I suggest that we go ahead and just yield the Senator from Idaho 30 minutes, which I can either use myself or yield to other Senators, and reserve 10 minutes to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT]. That is all I have a request for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of the Chair will be, there is a 1-hour time limit to be equally divided between the Senator from Idaho and the opposition to the amendment which will be by one of the managers as they may see fit.

Mr. SASSER. Perhaps I could simplify this by simply saying that I ask unanimous consent that the proponents of the Symms amendment be allocated 40 minutes, 30 minutes to be under the control of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], 10 minutes to be under the control of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], who may allocate that to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT]; 40 minutes to be under the control of the opponents of the Symms amendment, and that would be myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection——

Mr. CONRAD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I guess this heightens my concern about what I see happening. I have been on the floor since noon today, actually before noon, seeking to get recognition to offer an amendment.

I have been told there is an informal leadership agreement on a sequence of amendments. We understand that. But then I am told we cannot have any understanding about when we might be able to offer an amendment, and it is important to the sequence of amendments here, obviously. It makes a difference on whether or not you get fair consideration of an amendment or not.

And I simply say that I would hope there could be some understanding, either through a unanimous-consent request or an assurance that after this sequence of amendments, I will have a chance, along with Senator BAUCUS, who is in a conference committee, to offer our amendment, or I will be in a position of having to object just in order to protect ourselves.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to my friend from North Dakota, we do not need the unanimous consent, and he will be in worse shape. He has 2 hours, amendments to it have an hour. We were trying to limit the time.

I will do everything I can in meeting with the leader, and we will meet with him shortly to see if we can put the amendment—I will ask Senator SASSER to join me—in a position that the Senator can be assured it is not way down the list, but in a timely manner, consistent with what we have. I think we will save time and accelerate the Senator's opportunity, if we get on with the 40 minutes, as recommended by the chairman.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I also say to the Senator from North Dakota that in seeking the unanimous-consent agreement with the Senator from Idaho, we are seeking to save time. He has 2 hours, by statute, on his amendment. We are seeking to reduce that to an hour and 20 minutes. And, frankly, I do not anticipate using all of the time on my side. I am seeking to accommodate the Senator from Idaho so that we can compress his time, and we will have more time left over.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the agony, but I want to make clear that, obviously, the only leverage this Senator has to try to assure my colleague, who is going to offer the amendment with me, is through a unanimous-consent request. That is the only leverage we have here to try to assure some fair treatment. I will take it on the word of the leaders that they will attempt to get us fair treatment.

Mr. SASSER. We will do our best to accommodate the Senator from North Dakota. I say again that there is no wish to shut out his amendment. I anticipate it will be taken up this afternoon, if he perseveres, and obviously, he intends to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee is agreed to.

The Senator from Idaho is recognized on his amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, it is very obvious that this amendment is a very, very important amendment. I think it is also very obvious to the American people that the gasoline tax is one of the most regressive taxes that can be brought to the American people. It hits hardest those least able to afford it. Families that live on $10,000 to $20,000 a year spend twice as large a share of their income on gasoline as families living on $50,000 or more a year. People supported largely or entirely by Social Security would lose more to the tax than either working people or retired people with much higher incomes.

Fully, two-thirds of the Americans oppose an increase on the Federal gasoline tax. Mr. President, I think that is an important point. I heard the eloquent remarks of my friend from South Carolina earlier. Sure, if you take a poll, everyone is against tax increases. But I think everyone outside of the Government's network, particularly here in Washington, is against the increase in spending on Government programs. They would like to freeze the budget.

A lot of people say that this will be a killer amendment, because it is $45 billion that comes out of this bill. One Senator came to me and said, "How do you make it up?" I am not going to make it up. I want to make that clear. I am not in favor of raising taxes, period.

I am sure Senators will make the argument that if you vote for the Symms amendment to cut out the gasoline tax, the fuel tax, you are then going to have to have a higher income tax rate. I am not going to vote for higher income tax rates. Other Senators may vote however they choose. But I think it is about time we settle this issue, and this is as good a place to settle as any, right at the outset of this debate over whether or not the American people believe they need more taxes and more revenue. We have heard some good speeches here on the floor about how this bill will devastate the highway program.

Mr. President, as I said, two-thirds of the American people realize that raising the tax on gasoline is to raise revenues for the reduction of the Federal budget deficit, and two-thirds of the American people are against this. Most believe the budget deficit could be significantly reduced by Federal Government spending cuts. I happen to think that is true, as one who has been here in the Congress, I am convinced it is true.

There is no part of the Government that could not get by, if we are in an emergency and I think this is an emergency, on the same amount of money that they had last year. We can even be more generous. We could allow the Government to grow at 4 percent and do as well as this $269 billion tax bill calls on for the American people, and have a balanced budget by 1996.

In terms of areas, Mr. President, the West and the South, the rural States, this tax not only discriminates against people with lower incomes that have to have automobile transportation, it discriminates among geographical regions. It will fall more heavily on the lower-income States in the South and in the West than on the higher-income States in the East. It will hit suburban residents harder than city dwellers, because they have to drive back and forth to work. People who are able to use mass transit, will not be hit as much. It will hit rural households especially hard. Adding 10 cents to the cost of gasoline would reduce the GNP by nearly $10 billion in the first year alone, according to the study by the prestigious Wharton School of Finance.

Auto production will fall, some estimate by as much as 5.3 percent. Housing construction would drop. Eighty thousand people would be out of work next year, and 180,000 people by 1992. Refinery output would decline by 1.2 percent. Income tax revenues will decline by nearly $1 billion annually. Personal savings rate would decline by 3 percent. The CPI would increase by 1 percent.

Mr. President, I think that the gas tax issue is a good issue to draw the line on whether or not we want to raise taxes on the American people or whether we want to freeze the budget.

The gas tax will impact the cost of all goods and services, since motor fuel is used as an input for other economic activity, such as the trucking industry.

The trucking industry is under a lot of pressure right now. For those Senators who come from States that depend heavily on the trucking industry, they certainly should vote for this, because I can tell you, as a former chairman and now ranking member of the highway subcommittee of the U.S. Senate, that we need to dedicate more funds, not less, to the road building in this country. If we take this gasoline tax, as proposed here, even though I know that the summiteers are sincere when they say, "we put part of it in the Highway Trust Fund," actually they are not going to allow you to spend it. It will only be an accounting procedure, and the money will be spent for other obligations and other activities of the Federal Government, as the trust fund builds up. There will be no new Federal highway spending; and we will decimate the State and local governments, ability to raise gas taxes in the future and, yes, the Federal Government's ability to raise taxes to fund the highway program.

It will put American companies at a competitive disadvantage. The gas tax ignores the huge surplus in the Federal highway trust fund. Motor fuel taxes go to the highway trust fund to repair the roads and bridges. The fund today has over $17 billion, if you add the highway trust fund and the transit fund in together.

Mr. President, it is not there, and it will not be there because they have spent it. The Congress will have spent the money for other activities.

Now they have the nerve to come in and say, we want another 10 cents a gallon gas tax. It is going to reduce the revenue for States, and States will have a harder time funding their share of the highway program. The tax will not reduce the deficit, as projected, even though the advocates are saying it will cut the deficit by $1 billion for each penny of new tax. Consumer prices and business operating costs and unemployment will rise right along with the tax, further depressing the economy and other tax revenues. As a result, government expenditures for many, many programs will be forced upward.

I heard my friend from South Carolina making some criticism about the supply-side economic theory. The only thing that has been wrong with so-called supply side economics is one very simple fact: Congress has not had the guts here in Washington, DC, to cut spending. Apparently, some have forgotten that supply-side theory has a compliment to cutting taxes and that is reduce spending. However, to balance the budget we do not even have to cut spending, just hold it to a modicum of growth—1 or 2 percent a year—and the budget would eventually be balanced; the economy would be better off as we would continue to experience economic growth. What has happened in the 1980's is we spent and spent and now the answer in the 1990's has become tax and tax. Revenues doubled in the 1980's, so no one can truly say supply side economics did not work. The problem was and is, spending more than doubled during the 1980's, leaving us where we are today.

The amendment I have submitted is going to put every Senator on the line. If you are for tax increases, then obviously you would want to vote against my amendment.

We have heard a great deal about the rich and the poor and who pays their fair share of the taxes. This tax clearly strikes at the very heart of the middle-working American families in America.

The majority of the House and the Senate opposed a fuel tax increase last year. The Senate voted unanimously in May 1989 against the gas tax. During the 1988 Presidential campaign Vice President Bush at the time specifically stated in a letter to the American Automobile Association:

> The use of such a tax to balance the budget would strictly hurt lower wage earner families with both spouses working, farmers and residents of Western States who have long distances to drive.

He opposed an increase in the gas tax to balance the budget. I want to repeat that, Mr. President; he opposed it.

The Senators here in this Chamber have gone on record repeatedly, because this Senator has offered the motion, saying we will have no gas taxes that go to deficit reduction. They opposed it because it is devastating in its effects. It is devastating to rural America. This is the sentiment of over 1,000 organizations around the country which represent a very broad base of the people of this country of all kinds of economic and political spectrum who oppose a fuel tax increase.

Mr. President, I think that this is as good a time as any to decide. People say, well, what is your solution? I will tell you what my solution is: modify the continuing resolution to include a substantial savings, a flexible freeze, if you will, a modified sequester, and fund the Government, hold back the line on spending, and adjourn the Congress. The longer we stay adjourned, the faster this country will get out of a recession.

I yield the floor, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

How much time do we have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON). The Senator has 19½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that it be charged equally to each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SYMMS. Is the time running against the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is running equally against both sides.

Mr. SYMMS. I ask unanimous consent that the time be charged against the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I object to that.

May I ask why the Senator wants to charge the time against the bill?

Mr. SYMMS. The Senator from Idaho has 19 minutes remaining, and I have had Senators call and ask for time. If the time is running against them, they may not be given time to speak.

Mr. SASSER. I have no objection, Mr. President, to the time being charged against the bill on Senator DOMENICI's time. I fail to see why time should be taken from us in order to allow the Senator to get his supporters over here on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has received the unanimous-consent request and there is objection.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

I have no desire to minimize the time that Senator SYMMS needs. There was no one here to speak. I wanted to provide some order, and normally under this budget process when there is no one to speak, we charge it equally. So I just requested that.

The Senator has how much time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I will recant on my previous remarks and ask unanimous consent that the time be charged against the bill equally on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I see the junior Senator from Mississippi here. I think under the time agreement he has 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor and yield time, which has previously been agreed to, to the junior Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico for yielding the time.

I rise to heartily endorse and support the amendment of the Senator from Idaho which would eliminate the gasoline tax increases in this package. I have spoken against this previously—a few weeks ago and over a period of a number of years.

When I participated in the past in budget negotiations, a gasoline tax increase always would come up as one way to solve the budget deficit problem. I would always make the point that I thought a gas tax increase was fundamentally unfair to working people—people who have to drive long distances to get to work—to fishermen, and a lot of other people who would be adversely affected by it, and that it is certainly something that would ripple throughout the economy. I urged, as an alternative—if we wanted to do somthing like that—to go with an oil import fee. At least there would be benefit for it throughout the economy, and it could help affect our energy shortage in other ways.

But usually when I would suggest oil import fees, the discussion would end. The oil import fee would go away, and the gasoline tax would go away. This particularly took place in the 1987 budget negotiations.

Every time we have a budget deficit discussion, gasoline tax increases come up because it is one way to raise a lot of money quickly. What's interesting about it today, is that we are talking about adding another several cents a gallon on gasoline at a time when we have just seen gasoline go from around $1 to $1.66 to $1.76 a gallon, a significant increase, all over the country. And now we're proposing adding more to it.

Some people say, "Well, this would discourage people even more from using their automobiles and encourage them to conserve more. In the South and in the West, we do not have urban mass transportation. We do not have access to high-paying jobs that are close by. We have to drive long distances, quite often 60 miles one way, to get to a minimum wage-paying job.

Here are people who have just seen their gasoline prices go up by at least 50 percent, and now we're talking about adding another levy. We have had a gas tax hike proposal as much as 12 cents. The House has a different position; now the Senate has a 9 cents tax increase. It is just not the thing to do.

A lot of people are going to stand up on the floor of the Senate and say, "Let us make sure we tax the rich. We are going to look after the middle-income and the low-income people." What about the people who are driving a 1976 Chevrolet to get to work? They are not rich people. This is not taxing the rich to help the welfare systems. This is taxing the people who are trying to work, to get to a job, to get to the grocery store, by adding another gasoline tax increase on their already very difficult situation.

I ask my colleagues, what in the world are we doing in raising gas taxes more? Look at who it will hit the hardest: the middle-income, low-income working people who are trying to do their part. This is not the way to solve the deficit problem.

Now some folks will say, "Well, if you vote to knock out this gasoline tax, that means there is going to be tax increases somewhere else." No, it does not mean that. Under the rules, you do not have to replace this revenue; you can just knock it out.

In conference, if they want to raise income taxes, if they want to cut spending in some way to make up for this loss; fine, go right ahead.

We have to take these things one step at a time. And, boy, there are going to be a lot of steps in this process. But in the first step, let us knock out this gasoline tax increase. In Tennessee, in Texas, in Idaho, in North Carolina, in Alaska, and in Mississippi, the people are saying, "Don't hit me with this gasoline tax."

There were several parts of that original summit agreement I did not like, but some more than others. The gasoline tax was No. 1. Reducing Medicare for our elderly was No. 2. And another was reducing agriculture.

This is like a dagger in the heart of the poorest State in the Nation, Mississippi.

How do you want to solve the deficit problem? Raise the gasoline tax, cut Medicare, and cut agriculture? Great. We get a triple hit with that type of package.

But we will talk about those other issues later on. Right now we are talking about a gasoline tax increase.

I urge my colleagues: vote for the Symms amendment. Take this onerous provision out. Who knows? Maybe after 15 or 16 hours of debate, we might come up with a reconciliation package that may really get the job done, and that will do it the way it should be done, by cutting spending and not raising gasoline taxes on the working, taxpaying people of America.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask the manager to yield me 8 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I yield the distinguished Senator from Texas 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I do not think anyone who opposes the gasoline tax understands the difficulties and the burdens of it any more than the Senator from Texas. That is one of the reasons I was in the debate earlier trying to get 95 percent of it back to donor States.

The realities are that it is easy to strike something as a tax and then not replace it with anything—not with anything, to just say, "We are going to strike it. It is not popular. It is a burden. We will cut it out."

The job we have to do is to make a credible cut in the deficit we are facing. What is going to happen to interest rates if we do not do it? You do not accomplish it by just cutting out some of the taxes.

I heard my colleague from Idaho criticizing the Finance Committee because we included $5.4 billion in spending initiatives for the next 5 years in our title.

Do you know who is the author of one of the biggest spending initiatives? The Senator from Idaho. It is one of the largest ones we have in the bill—$395 million over 5 years to improve payment rates for nurses who administer anesthesia. But that is a very important issue in rural communities and I understand the Senator's interest in the amendment, I sympathize with it and I support it.

But let me make a point to you. When the Senator talks about outlays, does he not understand that all the outlay increases in the committee title, with the exception of the child care provisions requested by the President and financed according to the summit agreement, all of the outlays, all of them are financed by cutting spending?

No one should be under the illusion that taxes were raised to finance such popular initiatives as the closure of the gap between urban and rural hospital payment rates under Medicare. So, when he talks about cutting out $42.6 billion in gasoline tax increases and thereby makes us come up short in this reconciliation bill, let us talk also about how we make up the loss of that revenue. Oh, it is fun to cut back on taxes. But it sure is tough to cut back on expeditures. But that is what we did to cover the cost of these additional outlays; a major one of them his.

I know full well how that gas tax would hit. The summit agreement called for a 12-cent-a-gallon tax increase on motor fuels. I fought my hardest to bring it down, and we did bring it down. We brought it down to 9½ cents. We could not get a bipartisan agreement to bring it down any more. We could not reach our target under reconciliation without this kind of a tax.

There is not a Member here who likes that tax. But the result that we see here today is the result of intense negotiation for months. Unlike the package on the House side, which does not have any gas tax increase, this bill is a bipartisan compromise, supported by the leadership on both sides of the aisle.

Believe me, I have gone over all the alternative revenue raising options. But I can tell you that striking this tax will put the entire deficit reduction effort in very grave peril. This package must stand as a package. We cannot begin to go down the road of striking the unpleasant parts of the package, those parts that we do not like. It took us over 5 months to put this together. It will take only a few minutes to tear it down. Let one of these amendments be won, and watch us start down that road and end up with nothing, no credible cut in this deficit.

I understand my colleague is unhappy because one-half of the gas tax revenue goes to deficit reduction. It does not all go to the highway trust fund. I understand that. I fought to put it all in the highway trust fund, but I did not win that fight. I could not get bipartisan support for that position. And I am here to support this bipartisan package. That was the agreement we made. The Senator from Idaho knows full well I tried to get it all into the highway trust fund, but the committee decided half of it had to go to deficit reduction. That is part of the compromise.

We are trying to make a $40 billion cut in the first year and a $500 billion cut over the next 5 years. But we are not going to bring that about, we are not going to reach that target, if we start carving off pieces here and pieces there.

I urge the Senate to turn down the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the SYMMS amendment to strike the proposed 9-cent increase in the gasoline tax in this reconciliation bill. A gas tax increase would single out large and less densely populated states like Wisconsin. It also hurts rural States like Wisconsin. It will mean almost $200 more in new taxes for the median-income Wisconsin family.

A gasoline tax is one of the most regressive taxes that we can impose on the American people. Almost 80 percent of American families earning less than $10,000 per year drive to work. As percentage of their income, those workers would pay almost three times as much for deficit reduction as people earning higher wages.

Furthermore, this proposed tax increase represents a dramatic change in public policy. The gasoline tax is supposed to go to the highway trust fund to build and improve our Nation's roads and bridges—not to reduce the budget deficit.

Mr. President, we ought to reject all tax increases because they will throw the economy into a tailspin. But a gasoline tax increase, in particular, is one of the most regressive and economically destructive taxes that can be levied. I urge the Senate to adopt the SYMMS amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I think the American people are wondering what we are doing down here in Congress. They hear about the deficit dilemma, and what do they see us doing? We are coming up with proposals to raise taxes on everything that moves. Any darn fool can do that, and that is why we look so foolish. There is another part of the equation. It is called spending. It is called discipline, fiscal discipline.

I have to report today to my colleagues that one of the committees I serve on, Postal Service, yielded or is about to yield in the conference with the House of Representatives as it relates to pay increases for this year. Notwithstanding we have not always budgeted what we provide for, nor did we do it fully this year—3.5 percent for all of the Federal workers—this august body, the conference, raised it to 4.1 percent.

Six-tenths of a percent. What is that? It comes out to $190 million. We do know where it is to come from; we have not provided it. Here we are—we are here to say we have to raise revenue, reduce the deficit—increasing spending.

We have to get the message. Maybe there are some of us in this body who say we are not going to continue to raise taxes as a priority. That comes last. Let us get some fiscal discipline. That is why I am going to support the Senator's amendment.

It is about time we stop raising taxes. It is about time, whether it is on the rich or the poor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. D'AMATO. I ask if my colleagues will yield me an additional 2 minutes?

Mr. SYMMS. I yield another 2 minutes to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. D'AMATO. So we find ourselves trapped in this situation where we are talking about should we raise the tax on the wealthiest of the wealthy? Should we raise the tax on the middle income? What about the gas tax? What about the user's tax?

No. 1, what about some fiscal discipline? What about a freeze? Could we freeze domestic programs? Freeze them at last year's level? What about maybe a cut? What about maybe eliminating some programs?

We all fall victim to it. Everyone says cut, cut; but do not cut my favorite programs. I called up my Syracuse office today and I was told they had the veterans marching. I do not know why they were marching. They were afraid they were not going to get enough.

Whether it is the veterans, elderly, students—and we have lost the capacity to govern because we are so worried about getting reelected, we have to give everything to everybody. We do not have the courage to say, "Wait a minute; we cannot do it." We do not have the courage to say, "Hold on." Here we are pandering because we do not want to get the civil service workers angry. We give them a 4.1-percent increase. We do not have the money.

But that is why we should vote down these taxes; we are overspending. That is the message I think the people are sending to us. They are saying, "Listen; hold that line on spending, and if we see you are doing it fairly, across the board, we will join with you, then, if you have to raise revenues. But not until then." That is why I am not prepared to vote for increasing taxes at this time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Does the Senator from Georgia seek recognition?

Mr. FOWLER. I do.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Georgia 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I rise almost reluctantly in the midst of this debate, after hearing several of my colleagues who have just spoken, to say almost incredibly that we seem to have forgotten we have 200,000 men and women facing poison gas, missiles, armaments, and tanks in the Middle East.

At this very moment we—not knowing whether they are going to come home, not knowing whether we are going to lose many of them—are engaged in a debate that ought to be about national unity and political resolve, and a commitment of this country in times of crisis to stand behind our forces by making the political commitment that at least helps pay to defend our friends against the naked aggression that we see that threatens the lifestyle of every man, woman, and child in the United States of America.

Yet I have heard no one in the U.S. Senate stand before this body and even suggest how Americans would make a penny of sacrifice to support the commitment of our children over there. They do not want to cut a dime out of anything. Every single program is so sacred to my pocketbook that we can never, ever make 10 dollars' worth of commitment a year. We cannot make a tax, no matter how small.

Americans stop me in the barber shop and say: How can I help pay for the commitment of our young people in the Middle East? How can I help stick my finger in the dictator's eye? How can we show the political commitment and the national resolve in this country, that we are united as a strong economy and a strong country, so we can keep that commitment and fulfill that commitment as necessary?

No; we cannot do that. Never any tax. Ask Americans to pay 10 or 20 or 30 cents a month to smoke a cigarette or to buy a beer or to drive?

Is there not some patriotism tax? Is there not something we can ask the American people to do that will make them feel they are participants in backing up Americans abroad?

My friends on the other side say resoundingly: No. A few pennies on gas, a few pennies on beer, a few pennies on cigarettes is this overwhelming burden on a country that calls itself No. 1; the $5 trillion economy.

And the only response to those who have no response, who want to continue to say we will never, ever, ever ask for any sacrifice, no matter how penurious—pennies—the only rational answer to that, the only response is we want to continue to borrow and borrow and borrow, and push off every cost to our grandchildren and their grandchildren.

There is no other answer. It is bad enough when times are good, when we are growing and we are earning money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Georgia an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. I thank the Senator.

I think it is absolutely true that all of us in public office are to be faulted; that when times were much better, we failed to act and we failed to act for some commensurate fair sacrifice on the American people, I submit, who will participate willingly in strengthening our economy, in educating our children, yes, in providing for the elderly and sick who have spent their lives in productive endeavors but now cannot do it. That is part of the community spirit that makes this Nation great.

We are to be faulted, and I stand with my share of blame as one who has been proud to serve in the U.S. Congress for 14 or 15 years. But now we are in a state of crisis. We have a crisis of debt because of our neglect. We have seen that all of the money and the hardware that we put into our military armaments, and I supported 90 percent of it, is not sufficient to make us safe and secure from all harms. We have experienced the hard way that energy security is as much a part of national security as is our military budget, and because of our failure to become self-sufficient, our casual use of our fossil fuels, our depletion of our resources as if God would continue to bless the Earth with incredible bounty that can never be used up, we now have 200,000 men and women in the Persian Gulf on the front lines, and we hear all these talks and hear all these speeches about how we simply cannot ask for any sacrifice to show the political commitment that we will back them up.

I say to my friends with great respect that the American people are ahead of us. All they ask is that whatever we devise be as fair as possible in treating everybody alike and asking for a little sacrifice from each individual, each family, yes, each corporation, each special interest group, define us all, divide us all, as we do in debate, any way you want to.

But what we forget in this body is that the ones who went before us knew something about sacrifice. The elderly in our country won the Second World War, survived the Great Depression, built this country because they knew about sacrifice, the joint sacrifice of working together and sacrificing together, especially in times of national crisis. We have a domestic crisis and a foreign crisis right now, and all of us are acting like never, never even put a penny on the gas tax.

The ultimate vote here today, of course, will be on the Senate package. I do not have to add my caveats to everything else that has been said. Lord knows it is not perfect. Many, many things that I fought for are not in there; many things that are in there I could do without. But surely sometime on this floor and in this body we will come to our senses. The American people are looking at us and saying, what in the world is that body doing? The President is out campaigning; he is not governing. We are here acting like we are starting from ground zero and nothing is happening in the world to our people, either at home or abroad. I hope that somehow after we have all beaten our chests and offered our amendments, we will realize we owe something, at least in times of war and near war, to those who are not able to speak but who are serving by standing and waiting for possible war in the Middle East, which we can at least participate in helping.

I thank the chairman and I thank the minority leader for yielding me this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I respond to the Senator from Idaho, it is my understanding the Senator from New Hampshire was going to speak. I prefer that.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield the 5 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, we have heard a lot today about the need for the American people to sacrifice. You would think they have not been paying taxes for the last 10 years. You would think Federal revenues have not grown robustly during those 10 years. That is not the case at all. The American people have been paying taxes heavily and Federal revenues have grown year after year. The problem is not in taxes, the problem is not in revenues; the problem is on the spending side. Instead of asking the American people to sacrifice further, I suggest we now ask Congress to sacrifice. I suggest we ask the executive branch to sacrifice.

The Senator says we are only talking about adding pennies to the price of a gallon of gasoline. I remind my colleagues that the price of gasoline has already gone up 35 to 40 cents per gallon in the last 3 months and now we have the temerity to suggest we ought to raise it 9 cents further? It is ironic. We have several hundred million dollars over the next couple of years, for example, for the National Endowment for the Arts. We have money to spend on the highbrows and the la-di-das, but we are going to stick it to the people who scrimp and save to buy gasoline to drive to work every day. This does not make any sense at all, Mr. President.

I commend the Senator from Idaho for offering this amendment to strike. I am going to support it. I am going to support every amendment to strike every tax we can raise between now and the time we run out of time on this bill.

Mr. President, those who observe the American people should not be under any illusions. This is not merely partisan wrangling; it is much more important than that. The reason we have had so much strife and so much difficulty is that we are at a crossroads; we are at a watershed. Are we going to go down the road for ever more spending by the Federal Government, financed by ever higher taxes, or are we going to stay on the sound course that we followed for 10 years which produced jobs, which produced opportunity, which produced growth, such that we remain the envy of the world and the model, may I point out, for the world with more and more countries following our example? How ironic that some would propose we turn back, that we open up the spigots on spending and we open up the spigots on taxing.

We are at a watershed. I dig in my heels. The President may have changed his mind, tragically and mistakenly, but I have not. This is one Senator who has not. I am digging in my heels. I hope this second attempt fails miserably, and I hope instead we go to a continuing resolution with some large element of sequestration. The President has already announced that he has the legal authority to take those actions necessary to ensure essential Government services like air traffic control, inspection of meat, and things of that kind.

Let us defeat this bill. Let us strike first from it all of these taxes. Let us send it to conference and hope that it comes out so bad that the President will veto it. And then make a campaign issue about his vision for America versus that of the other party, the other party that wants to increase taxes and increase spending ad infinitum.

That is not the kind of country I want, not the kind of country I want for my children, and I do not think it is the kind of country that most people of this country want. I commend the Senator from Idaho, and I intend to support him with my vote and I hope my colleagues will likewise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, was the Senator from Colorado seeking recognition?

Mr. WIRTH. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee yielding a little bit of time to me today as I oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Three weeks ago the President of the United States came before the country and told us why we were in the Middle East. He spoke to a joint session of the Congress and told us that our objectives in the Persian Gulf were clear, our goals defined and familiar. First, Iraq must withdraw from Kuwait completely, immediately and without condition. Second, Kuwait's legitimate Government must be restored. And third, the security and stability of the Persian Gulf must be assured.

Not one mention there, Mr. President, of why we are really there. You know and I know why we are there. We are there because of oil. We are there because we are deeply dependent upon imported oil in the United States, dangerously dependent on it, Mr. President—more dependent on imported oil in the United States that we have ever been in our Nation's history.

Three months ago we went over the 50 percent mark for the first time, I believe, ever—50 percent dependent upon imported oil. And what are we willing to do in the United States to stand up to this issue? What kind of fortitude is there in the congressional branch of our Government, or the administrative branch, to be honest about the fact that we are there because of oil and we better get our energy act together and get it together rapidly.

We are currently using about 16 million barrels of oil a day. About half of that, Mr. President, is imported as I just pointed out—8 million barrels of oil a day. About two-thirds of the total amount of oil that we use in the States goes for transportation. So about 11 million barrels of oil a day is used in transportation, most of that for automobiles, trucks, and so on.

Now, what are we doing to limit our dangerous dependence on foreign oil, which is why 200,000 young people from the United States are in the Persian Gulf today? What are we doing about that? Well, we are doing, so far, nothing. What opportunities have we had, Mr. President, to do something about it and which ones have we ducked?

The first thing we ducked was moving away from the President's initially good proposal on alternative-fueled vehicles. When the President announced his Clean Air Act in 1989, the President's assumption—and he proudly announced this, quite correctly, in the White House—was that we were going to have a million alternative-fueled vehicles.

By the time the oil companies got done with that proposal, Mr. President, it had disappeared. The President of the United States ducked that proposal. We dropped away from it and we lost the opportunity to move away from imported oil to move on to domestic fuels like natural gas and look at the alternative fuels. How much was it estimated that could save? That proposal alone by the year 2000 could save us around 2 million barrels of oil a day.

We walked up to that, looked at it; the big energy companies said you cannot do something that is not oil. Everybody ran for cover. We dropped the alternative fuels proposal, originally something proposed by the President—everybody cut and ran.

The second opportunity we had, Mr. President, was no more than 3 or 4 weeks ago on the floor of the Senate when we debated the amendment offered by the distinguished junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. BRYAN] which was to raise fuel economy standards in the United States from about 27 miles per gallon to 34, and then higher than that, something that Detroit has testified is technically possible to do. That had the opportunity, Mr. President, of saving us about 2.6 million barrels of oil a day. What did we do on that? We ducked and ran in the wrong direction.

We had an amendment on alternative fuels that I offered with the distinguished Senator from California which lost on the floor of the Senate by about five votes. We lost on the fuel economy standards by a larger amount of votes.

Now we have a third alternative. We have a third opportunity available to us as to what we are going to do related to energy policy, which is the rationale for our being in the Persian Gulf.

You cannot tell me, Mr. President, that if there had been one Central African country attacking another, we would have said that Central African country had to withdraw from the other, that the legitimate government of the one attacked had to be restored, and that we were concerned about the security and stability of the Central African region.

That is not why we are in the Persian Gulf. We are there because of oil, the world's dependence on oil and our own dependence on oil.

We have the opportunity now in thinking about a small gasoline tax, which is the equivalent, Mr. President, of less than two fillups per year, two fillups per year, to start developing alternatives to our dangerous dependence on imported oil. Energy policy is all around us and the energy crisis is all around us, telling us in the United States we better redefine what we are talking about in terms of national security, and do it very rapidly.

What are we doing? If we adopt this amendment, we are once again acting as if this were the 1960's or the 1950's, that we live in a world in which there is abundant, inexpensive energy found here in the United States; that we do not have to worry. That day and age has gone.

The opportunity that we have is to stick with this modest proposal. This is modest. You compare what we are paying in the United States to what others are paying. We have to start making the transition toward a much more realistic level than what we are doing. If we are unwilling Mr. President, to do something as simple as just stick with what agreement has been made on this issue by the President, by the leadership, by the Finance Committee, if we cannot do something that simple, how in the world are we going to get on to the serious business of looking at all the other parts of energy policy which we all, understand we must do—conservation, alternative fuels, moving to solar, renewable. All of the things that have to be done.

So I beg my colleagues; we missed the opportunity on fuel economy. We missed the opportunity when it came to looking at an issue as simple as moving from use of oil to using other domestically available fuels. Let us at least stick with this modest and correct step.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two gasoline consumption charts be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee for yielding time, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield to the Republican leader as much for the bill as he desires.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will take about 2, 3, 4 minutes.

This will be the moment of truth in whether or not we want deficit reduction. Forty-three billion dollars right off the top if this amendment passes—not replaced, not any other savings or taxes recommended, just $43 billion off the top.

I do not fault my colleagues who are opposed to the entire budget package for offering amendments. I do not suggest any of us are happy with an increased gas tax. But again I would recall the Time magazine—I think it was Time magazine poll or Newsweek, U.S. News polls that asked the American people, are you willing to make a sacrifice because of the gulf crisis? Eighty-four percent said "yes." The next question, would you be willing to raise gas taxes? Seventy-three percent said "no."

Let us not make any mistake about this. Are we willing to make tough choices or are we going to go by polls in America? Are we willing to worry about our children and grandchildren for one vote or two votes or three votes?

There is the only policy tax in the whole package as far as I am concerned because we are in the Mideast for three letters, oil, o-i-l. That is why we are in the gulf. We are not there to save democracy. Saudi Arabia is not a democracy. Neither is Kuwait. We are there because we do not want Saddam Hussein to get his hand around our throats and jack up the price of oil which would have a severe impact on the economy; it might bring down the economy of lesser nations, and have a great impact on ourselves.

All other amendments you are going to have to find savings to offset or some way to offset. When you move to strike out a tax, you can do it all day long. Strike out every tax. None of us like taxes. But none of us, at least those of you who have been working for the last 5 months, want to walk away from this package after this vote saying we could not get $500 billion, we could only get $450 billion. Why do we need $450 billion? Why do not we settle for $400 billion, $300 billion? Why do we do anything?

Again I do not fault the distinguished Senator from Idaho. He is against the package. He is against the gas tax but in any case he is willing to reduce spending. So I do not fault the Senator from Idaho. He is the one who put up $40 billion in new spending restraint. He will vote for it.

But I think if we cannot survive this vote, and a couple of others coming this afternoon, we might as well fold up our tent.

Oh, this is an easy vote politically. Oh there would be great applause if you walked into a room and said, "Boy, I just killed the gas tax."—until people thought about it, thought about the gulf crisis, until they thought about making one little sacrifice for the 200,000 Americans in the gulf, young men and women in uniform. We wanted to make sacrifice. We did not want to make this sacrifice. We do not want to make that sacrifice. We do not want to make that sacrifice. But we are putting language right in there. Do not let the price of gas go up because of taxes. Half the tax goes into the trust fund and half goes for deficit reduction. That half is going to build highways and bridges which we need.

This is the first test vote we have had. This is probably the toughest one we will have all day. I think the Senator from Idaho picked out the bottom line right here. If we cannot win this one, we might as well wrap it up, get a CR, continuing resolution, until after the election and go home, and then come back November 8. Maybe we can put it together. We would have a sequester to help tide us over—the CR with a sequester. That is an alternative.

But I think I am going to be joining the distinguished majority leader, after some other speakers speak, in tabling this amendment. It is not that we all like gas taxes, but if we are not willing to put a little pressure on the use of gasoline, motor fuel, conserve a little, so we can import less from the gulf, what is our sacrifice going to be when you look one of those young men in the eye, and say, Well, I made a sacrifice, I tried to kill the gas tax."

Maybe you can stay an extra month or 2 months. We started out June 26. We plan on a $500 billion deficit reduction package, and now we are down to the nitty-gritty. Now we are going to determine whether we have a majority in this U.S. Senate, Republicans, and Democrats who want to make tough choices, not choices we like. Sometimes they get to all those votes and are making the choices they like, and those of us who vote yes are not satisfying anyone.

But we crossed that bridge. Some are opposed to this package. I regret it, but they certainly have a right to oppose the package. Some will support this amendment. That is their right. I can tell you, if it is a majority, this package is in trouble. I would see no reason to spend any more time on the package today if we lost $50 billion out of the package. Why? Why not offer another amendment to take out another $50 billion? Why have any savings? Why not just wipe out any Medicare savings?

So I hope this amendment will be tabled, and any other amendments to this package will be tabled that affect either the savings side or the overall $500 billion package.

I will just say finally some of my colleagues call me every hour. "When are we going to go home? When are we going to adjourn," I put out a hotline to see if we can reduce the time. I had 15 Members. "Do not take 1 minute away from the 20 hours on this package." So those who are calling who want more time, that is fine.

But do not call me to tell me to get me out of here Friday or Saturday. We can all go home and adjourn this Congress. We cannot have it both ways. If we want to dispose of this package tonight we can dispose of it. These amendments will determine whether we will have a gas tax or not. It should not take too long to debate that. Everybody has a pretty good judgment where they are going to be. But in this particular case, if this amendment is adopted, count me out.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think we have a couple more speakers. I have not had a chance to speak yet. But I did say to Senator HELMS who has an engagement in the Ethics Committee that I would yield 3 minutes to him. Is that what he desires? Five minutes?

Mr. HELMS. Five.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say to the distinguished chairman it will be his turn next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I thank my friend from New Mexico.

Mr. President, nearly 18 years ago when I walked for the first time down this well and held up my hand to become a Senator, the price of gasoline in North Carolina, if you were willing to pump it yourself, ranged from 26 cents a gallon to 30 cents. The United States exported oil. Then I came to this Senate and I watched with amazement the countless attempts to control the production of oil and the price of oil. And I remember the distinguished Senator on the other side who said if we do not do something, oil is going to $8 a barrel. Does the Senator from Idaho remember that?

Now look at us. I cannot stand silent when the suggestions are made that the American people are not willing to sacrifice—because they have been sacrificing; 40 years at the hands of the Congress of the United States. It is the Congress that has run up this debt by spending more every year than the Government takes in.

Do not give me this hogwash about the Reagan deficit, the Reagan debt, the Bush deficit, the Bush debt because the Constitution of the United States says that not a dime can be spent by any President unless it is authorized and appropriated by the Congress of the United States.

I called CBO, the Congressional Budget Office. I asked, how much in this 101st Congress has Congress already added in terms of new programs, new expenditures? You know, they do not know. They estimated that the figure is about $60 billion. I do not know whether that is correct or not. But that is their estimate.

Mr. President, the point is, the people of this country are already sacrificing. Who do you think caused the interest rates to go up to the extent that small business people cannot even borrow money? The Congress of the United States did it. The liberal spenders in the Congress of the United States did it. You check the voting records of Senators. You check the voting records of Members of the House of Representatives. You will see who voted aye on every bloated spending bill that came down the pike. Just last Friday almost 80 Senators voted for a Labor HHS appropriations bill that was $11 billion over the President's request. But they say blame the President for the deficit.

There is the trouble. It is not just a symptom. It is a disease.

Trying to buy votes in the next election, day after day, week after week, Congress after Congress, that is the problem. I get sick and tired of people suggesting that the American people are not willing to sacrifice. They are sacrificing every day of their lives. Ask a couple, both of whom have to work. Ask them about their sacrifice. Oh, it is easy to dump another 6, 8, 10 cents a gallon gasoline tax on them.

And it is easy to say we are saving this or we are not saving that, but the fact of the matter is that these people out there across America are suffering because of the spending madness of this Congress.

So there is no shortage of money coming into Washington from the taxpayers. There never has been. It is a shortage of some sense of responsibility in the Congress of the United States. This Government will take in this year, I am told, about $80 billion more than it took in last year. That is extra money. But this Congress, this Senate, spends all of that and then spends more. I read the other day that for every dollar that is saved or additional dollar that comes in, Congress spends about a dollar and a half. That is the reason we are in the hole. That is the reason the economy is in difficulty. I do not think we ought to sit by sanctimoniously and say nobody wants to sacrifice. I say again that the American people have sacrificed, and they are sacrificing, and I think it is an insult to suggest otherwise.

Mr. SYMMS. Madam President, I yield myself 30 seconds, and then I will yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

Madam President, I appreciate the speech the Senator from North Carolina just gave. He has been a leader. In fact, I believe the President said if we had more Senators like Senator HELMS, we would not be in the mess we are in.

Just to give an example, if we froze appropriate accounts at 1990 levels, it would save $9.9 billion the first year and then give them a cost-of-living increase each of the next 4 years, you would save $82 billion, almost twice as much as the gas tax. So do not try to tell people that you have to have a gas tax somehow to fund the Government. The choice is, do you want to spend or tax?

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Madam President, I find myself in a different position, let me say, because I am disagreeing with many good friends who have worked very hard to fashion a reconciliation bill that pleases many disparate views.

I find myself, also, on the side of Senator SYMMS, in support of this amendment, perhaps for different reasons, because I am not one of those who feels less patriotic or less committed to a national energy policy because of a gas tax.

As a matter of fact, I want to point out that our friends on the other side of the Capitol, the House, found a way to satisfy their budgetary requirement without a gas tax. I speak against this because, Madam President, I feel that we do a disservice to the American people when we place a tax on gasoline and do not use it for the traditional purpose for which gasoline taxes have been reserved, and that is to build an infrastructure, to get rid of the congestion on the highways, to have bridges and tunnels that are always operating.

In my State and in many States across the country, there are deficient, substandard bridges being used to carry loads of traffic—and, by the way, some of those bridges have collapsed as a result of overuse and the lack of significant superstructure to carry out.

The gas tax has always been one of our true "user fees." People paid it. And, in return, their transportation systems were maintained and improved.

The reconciliation bill would change that. It would make a fundamental change, by saying that we are going to increase this user fee, and use it for deficit reduction; and do not expect to see any transportation improvements come from it.

That is why I support the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. We need to reduce the deficit. There are ways to do it. But using the gas tax is not one of them.

I think it is important that my colleagues understand what is really happening here.

The budget agreement would raise the motor fuels taxes by 9½ cents. It says that half of that increase would go to deficit reduction, and half would go to the highway and transit trust funds.

That is what it says. But what it means is something altogether different. The reality is, that under the budget agreement, all of this money—some billion dollars for every penny increase in the gas tax—would go to deficit reduction.

On paper, money would go into the trust funds. But, if we accept the terms of the budget agreement, we will not be able to spend any of it. Billions will come in, and nothing will go back out.

The budget summit sets caps on domestic discretionary spending. They would be in place for 3 years. After that, if we want to hike discretionary spending, it has to come out of defense or foreign aid.

The agreement counts as deficit reduction every penny of gas tax revenues coming in. It does not assume that any of those dollars go back out. And, with a cap on domestic discretionary spending, there's no way to appropriate an additional $5 billion or so a year.

Those caps simply do not leave the room to spend new gas tax revenues out of the trust fund.

Over the whole range of domestic discretionary programs, the budget deal lets spending go up $11 billion next year, and $8 billion the year after. That just barely covers inflation in all our programs. There is no room for increases. None. Zero.

No one should expect that every domestic discretionary program in the Government is going to get cut below inflation—programs like education, AIDS, science, housing, environmental spending—so that we can spend these new revenues on highways.

That is just not going to happen. People are going to be paying more in taxes each time they pump gas.

And, they will expect that, like in the past, they are paying for transportation improvements. But that will not be the case. They are paying for deficit reduction.

That is because this budget agreement would turn the gas tax into what so many other user fees are—a gimmick. A way to raise money for the Federal Government, with no intention of using it for its intended purpose.

The summiteers and our colleagues on the tax writing committees can say that half the gas tax revenues are going into the trust fund. They can say all the gas taxes are going into the trust fund. And, if we are going to raise gas taxes, that is where they should go.

But, the gas tax revenues are not coming out, not in the near term anyway.

What goes in will not come out, as long as we have discretionary spending caps.

I chair the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee. I am trying as hard as I can to fund infrastructure improvements in our country.

Yesterday, we completed our conference with the House on the transportation appropriations bill.

In that bill, we raised the highway obligation ceiling to $14.5 billion. That is $2.5 billion over the level the administration requested. We do not want to hoard those trust funds money. We want to see them used for their intended purpose.

The administration does not like that. OMB Director Darman sent me a letter to say so. They do not want us to spend those dedicated revenues.

They want to keep them around, to use for deficit reduction.

I do not like the idea that the gas tax—which has been the source of infrastructure funding—is going to be used for deficit reduction, but that is what is going to happen, if we do not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The reality is that the agreement does not intend that any of this money will be spent. It is all for deficit reduction. I do not like that.

Communities out there in need of new or better highways and improved transit systems are not going to like it, either, but, it is the reality.

I just want my colleagues to understand that. Come this time next year, I do not want to hear complaints from my colleagues, from Governors, from businesses, and individuals who need and want better highway and transit systems—that we broke faith with them.

I want this up front and on the record.

I am not sure if this amendment will succeed. I hope it does. But, if it does not, I want to make sure that everyone understands just what the result will be.

We should make it clear to the American people, to the people who will be paying the increased taxes at the gas pump, that they are contributing to deficit reduction, not better transportation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I want to yield, off the bill, 3 minutes to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HEINZ. Madam President, we all know that this exercise in deficit reduction is, by every stretch of the human vocabulary, only modest. The amount of $500 billion over 5 years may sound like a lot to many people, but everybody knows that, while we are reducing what would otherwise be the size of the deficit by one-half trillion dollars, the sad news is that the national debt over the next 5 fiscal years, even if we meet the extraordinary and overly optimistic economic assumptions of the third, fourth, and fifth years in this budget, the national debt will grow by an additional $1 trillion—$1 trillion. So for every dollar we are saving—if we are lucky we might—we will still be running up the debt that our children and grandchildren will have to pay by $2 trillion.

So here we are with an amendment that starts right off the bat cutting $43 billion off the top of what already is a modest—some people might even say "phony"—effort to get the budget deficit and the national debt under control.

Forty-three billion dollars is nearly 10 percent of this entire deficit reduction effort.

If we go along with this, we might just as well give up here and now in trying to reduce the deficit, not only this year but every year in the future.

If you want to do something about reducing the deficit, and my friend from Idaho, I know, does, we ought to start by reducing spending. And in this legislation we give a free pass to the appropriators, the people who have control over discretionary spending, whether it is defense or international affairs or nondefense. Nondefense discretionary spending is expected to increase by at least the amount of inflation for at least the first 3 years. And then all bets are off. It could skyrocket after that.

But I also want to address myself to the choices that we have had on the very specifics of this issue, the gas tax.

A number of weeks ago a number of us came to the floor to urge the support of increases in the CAFE standards, the automobile fuel fleet efficiency standards, which over the next decade, we proposed to increase by some 40 percent, a 40-percent increase, Madam President, in fuel efficiency standards.

That means that the average family, if Detroit engineered the car right, could be saving 40 percent on their gas bill if they drove an average car, when that legislation became fully effective.

What we are arguing about here, and it is a sorry substitute for it, is what amounts to about a 3-percent increase in the prices people are going to have to pay for gas at the pump.

I understand there are people who do not want to pay that 3 percent, the 4 cents next year or even the 4½ cents that goes to deficit reduction when this legislation becomes fully effective.

I do not think people mind paying the part that goes into the highway trust fund, because the people in my State know the bridges and highways are a priority and that those funds are going to make our roads safer, our transportation system more efficient. They will spend their time better. They will get what they are paying for.

But on the deficit reduction half, that amounts even when fully effective to only 3 percent. You compare that to the CAFE standards which when fully effective would have saved 40 percent and you understand how the opportunity to really save our constituents on our gas bills has been snatched from before this very body.

Those who believed that argument that somehow improving the fuel efficiency standards is going to increase fuel miles, increase gas usage, as some people did argue, I think have a chance to at least be able to go home tonight, and look themselves in the mirror by voting aye on this.

You cannot have it your way all the time in life. And you cannot say we do not want to be in the Persian Gulf protecting oil, you cannot be in the Persian Gulf at the cost of maybe $2 billion a month protecting oil and say, look, we did not want fuel efficiency standards.

Anyone who voted against fuel efficiency standards ought to be voting for tabling this amendment. This amendment should be defeated. And if there is any honesty in this body—and we have all made speeches, I think, about energy conservation— today is the day to go home having voted against this effort to not only gut this budget, but to take a sensible step towards energy conservation, a second best one perhaps, and say at least we did our duty both by the budget and to make ourselves less dependent on fuel imported from abroad.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr DOMENICI. I yield myself such time as I may use off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

Madam President, I say to my good friend from Idaho, Senator SYMMS, that he has some of the finest qualities of any Senator around. It is obvious he wants a vote on the gasoline tax provision that is in this $500 billion deficit reduction package. And he is eminently clear that he wants to kill the package. He makes no bones about it. He did not come here to the floor, as some would, and fuzz up the issue. He wants us to leave the floor tonight or tomorrow without a deficit reduction package unless it is the one he has in mind. I laud him for his honesty.

On that last point, I think I am right. The Senator is saying unless it is his deficit reduction package, he won't support it. All the rest of those things the Senator has said here, I truly believe are filled with integrity and forthrightness.

But I must tell my fellow Senators that if someone wants to kill this deficit reduction package outright, and say, "Start over my way," then I submit to you that we are going to get no deficit reduction this year. We are going to have a sequester, we are going to close down Government, and we are not even going to go to conference with the U.S. House of Representatives and see if, in fact, we can get a real package with real reform that starts us down the path toward fiscal sanity.

So I am not going to take my few minutes to argue the issues that have already been argued eloquently: conservation, the Middle East, the other issues that have been discussed by way of sacrifice and the like. I am merely going to repeat, why we are here and what we are doing.

There was a hue and cry that we ought to put more taxation in this package. And, if we were going to have more taxes, they should be put on wealthy Americans. The committee of jurisdiction—not the Budget Committee, we do not have authority, but the Finance Committee, went out and raised taxes on wealthy Americans.

As a matter of fact, for those who are across the country, speaking of the House-passed package and how it taxes the wealthy, I submit to you it is absolutely black and white that this particular package has the wealthy bearing more of the burden than the House Democratic package. The Senate package raises taxes in a rather fair way in terms of how it moves about through the wage scale of higher income Americans.

I thought we wanted that. I thought that is what was fair about a deficit package. I thought that is what most Americans wanted us to try to do.

Make no bones about it, that package of taxation is gone, too, if this amendment passes; finished.

I thought people wanted balance in this package. I have heard some Senators come down and talk about saving more money. I heard some, who I have great respect for, say we are spending too much money in discretionary accounts of the Government.

Madam President, I see the occupant of the Chair is the chairman of a subcommittee. I will not go beyond saying that she and her ranking member find that many Senators who are talking about spending less are all before the subcommittee wanting more. And I do not personalize that. I just say that as a matter of course. We all say, "spend less," but we have more ideas and we want more things. Nonetheless, when this package is finished and the enforcement mechanisms are in place, the American people should know that the accounts of the Federal Government that we appropriate every year, are going to come down by $180 billion over the next 5 years. Most of that will be out of defense, but nonetheless $180 billion of savings will come out of the discretionary accounts of the Federal Government.

That is a good share of the total package, if you want some balance. Discretionary cuts make up 35 percent of the package. It is a pretty good balance. Why do I talk about it? Because those savings are gone if we pass this amendment. We will start over, and who knows where we will end up.

Many said we need a reasonable balance on entitlement and mandatory spending. I do not know if it is reasonable; but I will give you the number.

Entitlement and mandatory cuts make up 22 percent of this package. And the revenues account for 30 percent of the savings.

Frankly, Americans may be angry at parts of it, but I do not think this afternoon we are voting on parts of it. We are voting for that kind of balanced deficit reduction package or nothing.

I am not at all interested in those who say they have another way. They are saying I am not for any deficit reduction unless you do it my way. I do not think we can afford that at this point, at this stage, at this late date.

With great respect and admiration for my friend from Idaho, I do hope that we will table this amendment and send a signal that we want this package approved sometime tonight or tomorrow. We want to get on with a major deficit reduction package.

Some of my good friends in the Senate are concerned about a couple of things in this package, and I agree with them. Some are worried about whether it will still be a bipartisan package when we go to conference.

Let me submit, with all the work that has been put into this by Republicans and Democrats and the President, that this bill leaves the floor intact. I will insist that, when we go to conference, it remains bipartisan. Because I am not at all sure that many of us who are going to support it here, will support a package that is dictated to us by the House and by one party. I hope that does not happen.

I think it is fair to raise that because there are some who are saying we will not support this package on our side because they are worried about that happening. Well, the President is still around. Under those circumstances, he can do something, and he will. So I truly urge Senators to vote with the leadership and table the Symms amendment. This is done with the highest regard for those who favor the Symms amendment, and for many of my good friends who are here that are not going to be on our side.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, I have a problem. The Ethics Committee is beginning a meeting of a sensitive nature. I am needed there for a quorum. I wonder if I might ask unanimous consent that it now be in order for me to offer an amendment for consideration after the Symms amendment is disposed of. I ask unanimous consent that I be granted that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, reserving the right to object, what type of amendment does the Senator have in mind?

Mr. HELMS. I will show it to the Senator.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I would also like to reserve the right to object. While they are discussing this, I say to my colleague from North Carolina, I have been on the floor off and on since before the noon hour trying to get an amendment up, so I would be constrained to object.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, during my years in the Senate, I have traditionally opposed and voted against increases in what is commonly called a gasoline tax. That is a misnomer of sorts because the so-called gasoline tax is principally a user fee. The overwhelming majority of the funds that are collected as a fee on motor fuels are used to fund the roads and bridges and highways over which those who own and operate motor vehicles travel.

As evidence of that, motor fuels which are used on the farm by farmers in tractors which do not traverse the highways are not subject to these user fees or so-called gasoline taxes. But I have always opposed increases in these user fees because I have felt that they worked an undue hardship on the people of my State, and I have felt that these user fees were to some extent regressive. And lastly, I have always felt that this was a source of revenue that ought to be reserved to the several States rather than being taken as a source of revenue by the Federal Government.

But times change, and as times change one must change one's views. The infrastructure in this country is in terrible condition. It is suffering from really 12 years of neglect; 12 years in which we reduced the revenue base of this Government of ours by 20 percent, at a time when we were increasing defense, in nominal dollars, by about 50 percent.

Some effort was made to make up the difference by reductions in domestic spending and in domestic discretionary spending. I suspect we will hear during the course of this debate a very learned and persuasive discourse from the distinguished chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee who will outline in graphic detail how this effort to reduce spending by cutting the domestic discretionary accounts has diminished the ability of this country to compete in the international markets and diminished our ability to at least enhance the quality of life of our citizens.

But, having said that, as this domestic spending has been reduced, we have seen the infrastructure, the highways and the bridges, take the hits. I had a bridge in my native State of Tennessee that collapsed a year and a half ago. Five or six people perished because this bridge fell into a river. They came over a crest of a hill to traverse the bridge and no bridge was there, and they went into the river. A whole family was lost. It took days to find them.

Potholes are all over the Interstate System. Bridges are shaky and collapsing. We need to do more on the roads and highways. So for that reason, I am going to back away from a long held view that I would not support increases in highway user fees, a so-called motor fuels tax. I am going to support it today with reluctance because it is absolutely necessary.

Second, 50 percent of this levy will be allocated to deficit reduction. When we put it into deficit reduction, then it no longer becomes a user fee but it then indeed becomes a tax.

Now, why would I reverse 14 years of votes today on the Senate floor to do that? I do it because this Nation of ours is facing a financial crisis, a fiscal crisis, if you will. This Nation of ours is slowly but surely going bankrupt before our very eyes. We have seen ourselves move from the largest creditor Nation just 12 years ago to now we are the largest debtor Nation in the world.

The external debt of the country of Brazil pales to insignificance when compared to that of the United States. We in this Government are mortgaging our future and the future of our heirs. And that mortgage is being held by the Japanese investors, by German investors, by other foreign investors who are coming in and slowly but surely purchasing the ability of our Government to control its own destiny, to control its own affairs. And by this continued reliance on foreign capital, we are sapping the very vitality of this Government of ours and the economic machine that supports it.

So, having witnessed, from the period of 1980 through the period of 1990, the national debt explode from slightly over $900 billion to where it now stands at well over $3 trillion, I am persuaded that we must take steps immediately to try to stem this hemorrhage. This particular provision, which is not what I would have chosen had I been selecting it myself, I think, is necessary to meet that task. If this particular user fee, a motor fuels levy or tax, is excluded from this package, then I think the distinguished Senator from Kansas, the minority leader, is quite correct; it unwinds the whole ball and we see 6 months of work going down the drain for nothing. So I urge my colleagues today to set aside past voting patterns and look to the necessity for rebuilding our infrastructure and look to the necessity for reducing this budget deficit as they cast their votes. I urge them to vote against the Symms amendment.

I yield the floor, Madam President.

Mr. SYMMS. I understand I have 3 minutes and 56 seconds remaining, and I yield that time to myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. SYMMS. Madam President, I appreciate the comments I heard from the distinguished Republican leader and Senator DOMENICI and Senator SASSER and many others who have spoken here on the floor. I realize the work, the time and effort, they have invested in this endeavor.

I must say I agree with the good chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee, when he talks about the potholes. But I remind my colleagues there are $17 billion that have already been put in the trust funds that have been spent on other accounts of our Government. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] made it very clear: Do not believe half of this money that is going into trust funds is going to be spent on the highways. It will not happen because they have caps on the funding under the rules. The money will not go to highways.

Madam President, to my colleagues on the other side I say I have sat patiently on the floor for many months and listened to them hammer the point, "Soak it to the rich." If they want to soak it to the rich, I advise them that voting for a gas tax is doing just the opposite of that. It is soaking middle Americans, working Americans, senior citizens. Yes, I agree with my colleague, the Senator from Georgia, who spoke so eloquently about the senior citizens in this country who lived through the Depression, won World War II; they are patriotic; they have paid a price.

And if we want to be patriotic to the young men and women in the Persian Gulf, I will tell my colleagues what we ought to do. In my opinion, we need economic prosperity and economic growth, innovation, and better technology, which is the solution to oil dependence. The new automobiles today get 10 times better mileage than the old automobiles—for better fuel efficiencies. We need to make them even better. We need better designs. We need more modern efforts spent to build new, clean, safe nuclear powerplants and other kinds of powerplants and alternative energy sources. Raising a tax on the working people of America will not solve that problem.

Madam President, for those on this side of the aisle and those who have worked so hard on this, there is an alternative. Freeze the budget. Senator DOLE mentioned that Senator SYMMS will vote to cut spending. I will vote to freeze all spending. The CBO sent me information that said if we freeze all the appropriated accounts in the budget, we save almost $10 billion on the first year, and over the accumulation of this 5-year program we save $82 billion. Somebody can get up and offer that immediately after the vote on this.

It is not Armageddon. It does not have to destroy it. I am sorry for interfering with the work of the secret summiteers, but raising the gas tax on working Americans is not the solution.

Madam President, our people are calling. They are calling for Congress to come home. Stop taxing. Freeze spending. Stop the remedies, Madam President. They are sick and tired. Senator HELMS said here on the floor the CBO told him there has been $60 billion in new starts, remedies to solve problems. They may be big problems, but pass another law, start another program, start another welfare bureaucracy, another regulatory bureaucracy, that is what we are raising these taxes for.

The American people are saying, "Come home, Congress. Freeze the budget. Leave us alone. For God's sake, do not raise taxes again." That is the message, and that is all that this vote is about. If we want to keep the funding machine going and spending the money, vote against my amendment. If my colleagues want to give the working people of America a break, vote against the tabling motion the distinguished majority leader is about to make.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Madam President, I hate this gas tax increase. God knows, I hate what we are doing here to rural states like Arkansas.

But I also hate the speeches that I have heard for 16 years as a moral justification for continuing to increase spending while cutting taxes. Why do my colleagues think we are here this afternoon? I have heard this kind of rhetoric from, I would say, 50 percent of the Members for 16 years. If we could just do this and do that we can avoid the hard choices.

My colleagues do not have to worry about the political fallout on the gas tax issue because Congress cannot get any lower than it is right now in public esteem. The only way in the world Congress can resurrect itself is to show a little spine and say to the American people, "Not only do we understand your frustration and your hostility to the budget deficit, we are going to try to honor it in the best democratic tradition by facing it with courage and honesty."

I come from the State that has the highest gasoline use per capita per vehicle in the United States. Do my colleagues think I will enjoy opposing the amendment of the Senator from Idaho? I hate this gas tax. I hate it so much, if it comes back from conference with a 9- or 10-cent gasoline tax increase on it, I will vote against the whole package.

But we cannot vote on a final package until we get to conference with the House.

Ask the Senator from Idaho, "Senator, you are removing $42.6 billion deficit reduction from the package and what is your alternative deficit reduction plan?" How many times have we heard about some unspecified alternative? We can just freeze this and freeze that. But then those same Senators all line up at the spending trough.

Yesterday afternoon in the Appropriations Committee, it was the Senator from Idaho, the ranking member, Senator MCCLURE, who spoke about the number of requests made of the chairman and of the ranking member by Senators for special spending projects. My colleagues know about the wish lists we all send to the chairmen of the subcommittees on appropriations. How many requests do my colleagues think the chairman and ranking member, Senators BYRD and MCCLURE, got from the Members of this body for pork in their States? Do my colleagues want to take a guess? How many specific requests were made just in one of the eight subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee—28,000.

Those same Senators then come in here with unctious, pontificating statements about how, if we just freeze this or that, we could get the deficit under control.

Mr. President, I made a statement in the Democratic caucus. We are always admonished by the majority leader not to talk about what happens in the Democratic caucus. But he did not tell me I could not reveal what I said in the caucus. And I said, in connection with what I said just a moment ago: "Do not worry about the politics of this vote on the gas tax. You are not going to lose any more than you have already lost. The people in this country have never been as upset with Congress and with the President as they are now."

What I said is there is only one way we can resurrect ourselves to some extent with the American people. The political writers and analysts would have no choice but to give Congress a little credit if we voted for more than $500 billion in deficit reduction. I would like to marry the best parts of the Senate budget proposal with the House budget proposal. I would like to take out that 3.5 or 4 billion dollars' worth of energy incentives and apply that to the deficit. I would like to take out that capital gains thing in the House bill and save $15.8 billion for deficit reduction.

That capital gains thing the House put in is absolutely cockamamy. And take out some of those things that are pure boondoggles then you can reduce the deficit by $300 billion over the next 5 years. Maybe some kind journalist out there will have a little mercy on Congress and say, "They finally stood up and did what they knew had to be done."

Madam President, my real apprehension about all of this is that we are going to be back here next October, same place, same station, second verse. When we look at the economic assumptions in the budget deficit it is certain we'll be back here. The economic assumptions do not have anything to do with the $500 billion we are talking about in deficit reduction. These $500 billion in savings are real, but these savings do not guarantee us that the budget deficit in 1995 will not be as high or higher than it is going to be in 1991, because of the totally unrealistic assumptions that are being used here.

So it is one of the saddest votes I will ever cast, but it is a vote that will at least get us to conference. Hopefully, in the conference we can talk to the House about bursting the bubble, which will produce more revenue than the gasoline tax, and then we can drop the gasoline tax or at least get it down to where we are not really hammering middle America. This is what the House did. I am not going to vote against the Senator's motion to strike the gas tax increase because I favor a 9-cent or a 10-cent gasoline tax. I am going to vote against him because it is the only responsible thing this body can do today, to try to get a deficit reduction bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, in the 11 years in which I have served in the Senate, no subject has been more discussed in this Chamber than the need to reduce the Federal budget deficit. The speeches have been persuasive; the speeches have been powerful; the speeches have been emotional and, most of all, the speeches have been plentiful. If we could have charged fees for the speeches made in this Chamber on the need to reduce the deficit, we could have reduced the deficit just by that fee. We would have a balanced budget by now. In fact, we would have a surplus.

Over and over and over again Senators have filled this Chamber with rhetoric about the need to reduce the Federal budget deficit. Disaster has been projected if we do not; Armageddon has been projected if we do not; calamity has been projected if we do not. And over and over and over again Senators, including my good friend and our colleague, the Senator from Idaho, have urged the Senate to deal with the Federal budget deficit, to reduce the Federal budget deficit, to do something about the Federal budget deficit.

Now here in the middle of October 1990, for the first time in 10 years, we have before us the opportunity to do something serious about the Federal budget deficit; to do something about the Federal budget deficit other than to talk about the Federal budget deficit; to do something that will actually result in a reduction of the Federal budget deficit.

And what is the first amendment that is proposed? It is an amendment to destroy the effort, the first serious effort in a decade to reduce the Federal budget deficit.

Mr. President, and I say to the Members of the Senate, with all due respect to my colleagues—and I respect and have great affection for every one of them, particularly my good friend from Idaho—any Senator who votes for this amendment and then goes back to his or her home State and stands up in front of the citizens there and says a single word about the Federal budget deficit ought to be laughed out of the room and laughed out of the State, because what this vote will tell us is who has meant what he or she has said about the Federal budget deficit over the past decade.

Those who vote for this amendment make clear by their action that the only assault they are interested in against a Federal budget deficit is the verbal assault; that they want to say plenty of words about the Federal budget deficit, but they do not want any deeds against the Federal budget deficit.

This, as the distinguished Republican leader said with absolute accuracy, is a test. It is a test of the individual Members of the Senate and it is a test of the Senate as an institution. Do we have that minimum level of courage necessary to do something that is difficult, unpleasant, unpopular? Or, must we forever say that this institution is incapable of taking any action that meets any of that description? If it is difficult, we cannot do it. If it is unpleasant, we cannot do it. If it is unpopular, we cannot do it.

The one thing we can do, the one thing we have done, the one thing we surely will do, is talk, talk. We will expound on the Federal budget deficit; we will analyze the Federal budget deficit; we will denounce the Federal budget deficit; we will exclaim our allegiance to reducing the Federal budget deficit, but we will not actually do anything about it because that requires something other than talking.

No one here likes this. I have never in my 11 years in the Senate voted to increase the gas tax. I have consistently opposed all forms of excise taxes because I believe our tax system is unfair. It is increasing those taxes unrelated to the ability to pay, while decreasing those taxes with the ability to pay.

We now have a total package. It is an imperfect package. It does not meet fully the desires of any single Member of this Senate. Every Senator, 100 of us, has his or her own plan for reducing the deficit. And every one of us can stand up and say if only the other 99 had my wisdom, had my good judgment, had my experience and would adopt my plan, the deficit would have been solved.

There we see one of the failures of democracy. It takes more than one vote to get anything done. It takes 51 votes in this Chamber. So we have to try to reconcile the competing and conflicting desires and demands and interests from all regions of the country, from each of the 50 States, from the various economic sectors, arising out of differing political and other philosophies.

This package, imperfect as it is, is the best that could be done in that regard. It reduces the deficit by $500 billion over the next 5 years. We can do no less, we must do no less. Yet, along comes the Senator from Idaho and says, let us take it down to $460 billion because he does not like this tax. Soon there will be others who say, let us take it down to $440 billion and $410 billion, and we will have a reverse bidding that once we start down that road will end at zero.

Senators should make no mistake about it. If this amendment to strike succeeds, this deficit reduction effort will be over. We are not going to have a deficit reduction package. We are going to be starting down the road again of single shots aimed at particular items without any regard for the total package and, most importantly, without any regard for the overall national interest.

I urge my colleagues for once, can we not keep in mind the national interest? Does anyone here believe what has been said over the past decade in this very Chamber? Does anyone here believe their own words when over and over again they declaim on the need to reduce the Federal budget deficit?

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the distinguished majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, certainly.

Mr. BUMPERS. Is the distinguished majority leader not also a member of the Finance Committee?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; I am.

Mr. BUMPERS. That is the committee which reported this reconciliation bill that we are on today?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. BUMPERS. I know it was an agonizing process for that committee. Is it not true that there was an effort made in that committee to burst the bubble, as they say, and raise the income tax on the wealthiest people in America to avoid having to put on a gasoline tax?

Mr. MITCHELL. No formal amendment was offered in that regard because it was clear that there were insufficient votes to raise the income tax rates. We were advised that our Republican colleagues were unanimously opposed to any increase in the rate and would not vote for it, and combined with a sufficient number, minority number of Democrats on the committee, would have made it impossible to pass it.

Mr. BUMPERS. So therefore the only way the committee could meet its mandate was to impose this gasoline tax, is that correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, the only way this Senate is going to meet this mandate is to include this.

I make just two points. This is not a partisan issue. During these negotiations overall this time there were some on the Republican side, including the President and his negotiators, who wanted a higher gasoline tax. There were others among the Republicans who wanted a lower or none. There were some on the Democratic side who wanted a higher gasoline tax. There were others who wanted lower or none.

I remind my colleagues that the budget summit agreement endorsed by the President and the congressional leadership would have increased the gas tax by 12 cents. This is a reduction from that down to 9.5. I recognize the difficulty of the issue and the unpopularity of this or any other tax. But I say to my colleagues, you cannot pick this thing apart one item at a time, and you especially cannot do it and say that you are going to turn a $500 billion deficit reduction package into a $460 billion deficit reduction package, because once we start down that road, let us be very clear, there is no deficit reduction package.

We are either going to come out of this exercise with a $500 billion deficit reduction package or with nothing. That is the reality. It is an imperfect reality. It is an undesirable reality for many, but it is the reality in which we find ourselves today.

As elected public officials, we have a responsibility to deal with the reality as it exists before us and ask ourselves do we want to be responsible for destroying the first serious deficit reduction effort in these United States in 10 years.

I say we cannot in the name of our Nation's future permit that to happen. Difficult as it is, painful for many as it is, we must reject this and other amendments and we must proceed to pass this reconciliation bill, I hope as close to the manner and form in which it has been reported, and then go to conference with the House and try to develop the most fair, responsible package that we can that reduces the deficit not by $460 billion, not by $419 billion, not by any amount other than $500 billion.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator have a question?

Mr. CONRAD. No. Excuse me. I thought the Senator was finished.

Mr. MITCHELL. A pregnant pause. But it does remind me that I probably was speaking too long in view of that. So I will close my remarks by saying that the distinguished Republican leader and I will join at the appropriate time in a motion to table, and I hope, and I urge, and I implore all of our colleagues to join with us in tabling this amendment.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, will the distinguished majority leader withhold before making that motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. I do not intend to make the motion until we are advised that it is appropriate to do so. I merely want to say, and I want to repeat what the distinguished Republican leader said, this is a test. This is a test of every Senator. This is a test of the Senate, and ultimately this is a test for our Nation's future.

If we cannot defeat this amendment, I do not think we are going to proceed to do anything with respect to the deficit, and we are going to be rightly, objects of ridicule in this country. So I hope, and I urge, and I implore my colleagues to join in voting with the distinguished Republican leader and I in tabling this amendment.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DIXON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 3013

(Purpose: To provide alternative revenue provisions)

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD], for himself and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 3013.

Strike all after the section designated as the language to be stricken and insert the following:

ELIMINATION OF PROVISION REDUCING MARGINAL TAX RATE FOR HIGH-INCOME TAXPAYERS.

Over $67,200	$15,429.50, plus 33% of the excess over $67,200.

"(c) UNMARRIED INDIVIDUALS (OTHER THAN SURVIVING SPOUSES AND HEADS OF HOUSEHOLDS).—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every individual (other than a surviving spouse as defined in section 2(a) or the head of a household as defined in section 2(b)) who is not a married individual (as defined in section 7703) a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $19,450	15% of taxable income.
Over $19,450 but not over $47,400.	$2,917.50, plus 28% of the excess over $19,450.
Over $47,050	$10,645.50, plus 33% of the excess over $47,050.

"(d) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every married individual (as defined in section 7703) who does not make a single return jointly with his spouse under section 6013, a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $16,225	15% of taxable income.
Over $16,225 but not over $39,200.	$2,433.75, plus 28% of the excess over $16,225.
Over $39,200	$8,866.75, plus 33% of the excess over $39,200.

"(e) ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of—

"(1) every estate, and

"(2) every trust,

taxable under this subsection a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $5,450	15% of taxable income.
Over $5,450 but not over $14,150.	$817.50, plus 28% of the excess over $5,450.
Over $14,150	$3,253.50, plus 33% of the excess over $14,150."

(b) REPEAL OF PHASEOUT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1 is amended by striking subsection (g) (relating to phaseout of 15-percent rate and personal exemptions).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—subparagraph (A) of section 1(f)(6) (relating to adjustments for inflation) is amended by striking "subsection (g)(4),".

(c) 28 PERCENT MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATED.—Subsection (j) of section 1 (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) MAXIMUM CAPTIAL GAINS RATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If a taxpayer has a net capital gain for any taxable year, then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the sum of—

"(A) a tax computed at the rates and in the same manner as if this subsection had not been enacted on the greater of—

"(i) taxable income reduced by the amount of the net capital gain, or

"(ii) the amount of taxable income taxed at a rate below 28 percent, plus

"(B) a tax of 28 percent of the amount of taxable income in excess of the amount determined under paragraph (1).

"(2) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 1202 DEDUCTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the amount of the net capital gain shall be reduced by the sum of—

"(A) the amount allowable as a deduction under section 1202(a)(1), plus

"(B) the amount of the qualified gain (as defined in section 1202(c)) for the taxable year to the extent taken into account under section 1202(c)(1) for the taxable year."

(d) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1)(A) Subsection (f) of section 1 is amended—

(i) by striking "1988" in paragraph (1) and inserting "1990", and

(ii) by striking "1987" in paragraph (3)(B) and inserting "1989"

(B) Subparagraph (B) of section 32(i)(1) is amended by striking "1987" and inserting "1989". (C) Subparagraph (C) of section 41(e)(5) is amended—

(i) by inserting ", by substituting 'calendar year 1987' for 'calendar year 1989' in subparagraph (B) thereof" before the period at the end of clause (i),

(ii) by striking "1987" in clause (ii) and inserting "1989", and

(iii) by adding at the end of clause (ii) the following new sentence: "Such substitution shall be in lieu of the substitution under clause (i).".

(E) Clause (ii) of section 135(b)(2)(B) is amended by striking ", determined by substituting 'calendar year 1989' for 'calendar year 1987' in subparagraph (B) thereof".

(F) Subparagraph (B) of section 151(d)(3) is amended by striking "1987" and inserting "1989".

(G) Clause (ii) of section 135(h)(2)(C) is amended by inserting ", by substituting 'calendar year 1987' for 'calendar year 1989' in subparagraph (B) thereof" before the period at the end.

(2) Section 1 is amended by striking subsection (h) and redesignating subsections (i) and (j) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively.

(3) Subsection (j) of section 59 is amended—

(A) by striking "section 1(i)" each place it appears and inserting "section 1(g)", and

(B) by striking "section 1(i)(3)(B)" in paragraph (2)(C) and inserting "section 1(g)(3)(B)".

(4) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) is amended by striking "1(j)" and inserting "1(h)".

(5)(A) Clause (i) of section 904(b)(3)(D) is amended by striking "subsection (j)" and inserting "subsection (h)".

(B) Subclause (I) of section 904(b)(3)(E)(iii) is amended by striking "section 1(j)" and inserting "section 1(h)".

(6) Clause (iv) of section 6103(e)(1)(A) is amended by striking "section 1(j)" and inserting "section 1(g)".

(7)(A) Subparagraph (A) of section 7518(g)(6) is amended by striking "1(j)" and inserting "1(h)".

(B) Subparagraph (A) of section 607(h)(6) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 is amended by striking "1(j)" and inserting "1(h)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 7461A. INCREASE IN RATE OF INDIVIDUAL ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subparagraph (A) of section 55(b)(1) (relating to tentative minimum tax) is amended by striking "21 percent" and inserting "25 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 7461B. SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOMES OVER $1,000,000.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to determination of tax liability) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART VIII—SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOMES OVER $1,000,000

"Sec. 59B. Surtax on section 1 tax.
"Sec. 59C. Surtax on minimum tax.
"Sec. 59D. Special rules.

"SEC. 59B. SURTAX ON SECTION 1 TAX.

"In the case of an individual who has taxable income for the taxable year in excess of $1,000,000, the amount of the tax imposed under section 1 for such taxable year shall be increased by 10 percent of the amount which bears the same ratio to the tax imposed under section 1 (determined without regard to this section) as—

"(1) the amount by which the taxable income of such individual for such taxable year exceeds $1,000,000, bears to

"(2) the total amount of such individual's taxable income for such taxable year.

"SEC. 59C. SURTAX ON MINIMUM TAX.

"In the case of an individual who has alternative minimum taxable income for the taxable year in excess of $1,000,000, the amount of the tentative minimum tax determined under section 55 for such taxable year shall be increased by 2.5 percent of the amount by which the alternative minimum taxable income of such taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $1,000,000.

"SEC. 59D. SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) SURTAX TO APPLY TO ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—For purposes of this part, the term 'individual' includes any estate or trust taxable under section 1.

"(b) TREATMENT OF MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—In the case of a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703) filing a separate return for the taxable year, sections 59B and 59C shall be applied by substituting '$500,000' for '$1,000,000'.

"(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—The provisions of this part—

"(1) shall be applied after the application of section 1(h), but

"(2) before the application of any other provision of this title which refers to the amount of tax imposed by section 1 or 55, as the case may be."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Part VIII. Surtax on individuals with incomes over $1,000,000."

(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 7461C. 5-CENT INCREASE IN MOTOR FUEL TAXES.

Notwithstanding any provision of, or amendment made by, section 7405 of this Act (relating to increase and extension of highway-related taxes and trust fund) or any provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the following tax rates shall be effective for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1991:

(1) TAX ON GASOLINE.—The Highway Trust Fund financing rate and the deficit reduction rate under section 4081(a)(2)(B) shall be 11.5 cents a gallon and 2.5 cents a gallon

(3 cents a gallon in the case of gasohol containing ethanol), respectively.

(2) TAX ON DIESEL FUEL.—The Highway Trust Fund financing rate and the diesel fuel deficit reduction rate under section 4091(b) shall be 17.5 cents a gallon and 2.5 cents a gallon (3 cents a gallon in the case of any mixture of diesel if at least 10 percent of such mixture is ethanol), respectively.

(3) TAX ON FUEL USED IN TRAINS.—The rate of tax on fuel used in trains under sections 4041(a)(3) and 4093(c) shall be 2.5 cents per gallon.

SEC. 7461D. PART B DEDUCTIBLE.

Section 1833(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l), as amended by section 6162, is further amended by striking "for calendar years before 1991 and after 1995, and $150 for years after 1990 and before 1996" and inserting "for calendar years before 1991 and $100 for 1991 and subsequent years".

SEC. 7461E. AGRICULTURAL SUPPORT PROGRAMS.

Notwithstanding any provision of, or amendment made by, this Act—

(1) the base reduction percentage for the 1991 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under section 1101(c) of this Act shall be 5 percent; and the base reduction percentage for the 1992 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under section 1101(c) of this Act shall be 7.5 percent.

(2) in calculating deficiency payments for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, and rice under section 1102(a) of this Act, the payment rate for a crop shall be the amount by which the established price for the crop exceeds the higher of—

(A) the national weighted average market price received by producers during the first 6 months of the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture; or

(B) the loan level determined for the crop; and

(3) the amount of the dairy assessment provided for in section 1105(b) of this Act shall be $0.05 per hundredweight during the period beginning January 1, 1991, and ending August 31, 1995.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act the provision of section 7461 as reported will be effective.

Mr. SYMMS. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is not the motion to strike the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to strike is in order. However an amendment is in order addressed to the language involved in the motion to strike.

Mr. CONRAD. If I might respond to my colleague, and explain——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time for this discussion?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the acting leader.

I just say to my colleague from Idaho, I share his concern about a gas tax. I have sent to the desk in the nature of a perfecting amendment to the underlying language an amendment that deals with the gas tax. It reduces the gas tax increase.

Very frankly, I do not think that is enough. I think there are other deficiencies that need to be addressed in the reconciliation legislation before us. I think we can do a better job for the elderly sick. I think we can do a better job for our Nation's middle class. I think we can do a better job for our farmers.

So I have sent to the desk an amendment that deals with all of those questions. But it does more than that because it pays for the provisions. It pays for the provisions so that we keep intact a package that provides for $500 billion of deficit reduction because, very frankly, Mr. President, my colleagues, the situation that we confront demands that.

Let me just explain briefly, if I might, why I have constructed this amendment, and what it entails and why I think it is better than what is before us.

Mr. President, might we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. CONRAD. As I told our colleagues when we faced the summit agreement I believe what was offered to us from the summit was unfair to the middle class because it doubled the rate of increase in taxes from the middle class as against those in the upper class. It was unfair to the elderly sick because fully half of the cuts came from the elderly sick. It was unfair to our Nation's farmers because it took a disproportionate cut from them, four times as great as any other cut in any other program. It was unfair to the rural areas because of the extent of the gas tax increase.

The Senate version that has come here today is an improvement. Without question, it is better than what the summit had done—better for the middle class, better for the rural areas, better for the elderly sick.

Mr. President, I think we can do even better. So I am offering this amendment. Let me just briefly describe what is included in this amendment.

First of all, we replace the individual income tax rate structure with three rates, and in shorthand we pierce the bubble. We have heard a lot of talk about the inequity of the marginal rates for the very highest income people being lower than the marginal rates for those who are below that class.

So we address that question. We pierce the bubble. In addition, we increase the alternative minimum tax from 21 to 25 percent so that those who seek through a whole series of exclusions and deductions to avoid any tax obligation have their opportunity to pay just like the rest of us do.

Third, the amendment that I am proposing provides a 10 percent surtax on those with incomes of over $1 million. In order not to have a double hit on those at the highest income categories, we take out the provisions which disallow 5 percent of itemized deductions. And then, with the net revenue that we realize from this set of proposals, we scale back the increase in the gasoline excise tax to 5 cents a gallon; we limit the increase in Medicare part B deductible to $100 in 1991, with no further increases, unlike the package before us that has a $150 deductible; and we reduce the cuts coming from the farm program by something over 40 percent.

I want to stress, Mr. President, that this package is revenue neutral. We pay for what we do. Unlike the proposal from the Senator from Idaho, this package is revenue neutral, and I believe it is more fair, more fair to the middle class, more fair to the elderly sick, more fair to our Nation's farmers, and more fair to the rural parts of our country.

Mr. President, I have charts with me that show the tax bubble. We have had a lot of talk about the tax bubble. This chart shows what happens in the Tax Code. Very simply, we have a top rate of 33 percent on incomes from $78,000 to $185,000 for couples, but it goes down to a 28-percent rate for those over $185,700.

Mr. President, we have had a lot of talk about progressivity and regressivity and what the burdens of the various tax packages are that have come before this Chamber.

The budget summit plan is depicted in the top part of this chart. It shows the changes in Federal taxes, all Federal taxes, of the three proposals that have been before us. The budget summit, which was clearly inequitable, with the middle class being asked to have an increase twice the rate of the increase from the upper classes. The Senate finance plan, which is before us now, is more fair and clearly has a slight edge of progressivity to it. We can see that in this set of charts. And here is the alternative plan that has now passed in the House, which is depicted in this third part of the chart. As one can see, that is far more progressive.

Again, that looks at all Federal taxes, Mr. President. It is far more progressive, with less being asked by way of increase of the middle-income people of this country and more being asked of those in the top income categories.

Let me show why that is important, Mr. President, why it is important that we consider a package that asks more from those with the highest income. It is important to go back and look at what has happened before, what has happened from 1977 to 1990 with the tax burden in this country.

Mr. President, this chart shows the tax changes in billions of dollars for each income group in our society. We can see that every income group in our society has experienced a tax increase over the last 13 years, with one exception, Mr. President. That one exception is the top 1 percent in our society. The top 1 percent have experienced a very significant and dramatic tax reduction.

Let us turn to this next chart that puts in context not only the tax changes, but also the income changes, and looks at what has happened over this same period of time, from 1977 to 1990.

In each group, the lowest 20 percent, the red bar is the real income change for that group; the blue bar is the tax rate change, Mr. President. You can see that for the lowest 20 percent in our society, those in the lowest 20-percent income category, they have seen, in real income, a reduction of 9 percent. And yet they have experienced a tax increase of 2.6 percent.

Mr. President, so it goes. We can look up the income categories. But maybe it is instructive to look at the top 1 percent. They have experienced an increase in real income of 91 percent, but a tax reduction of 23 percent.

Mr. President, that is why it is critically important that we offer a revenue package here that deals with the question of fairness and of a fair sharing of the tax burden. We have seen a dramatic change in the last 13 years. Now we are seeking to redress that change, albeit slightly, by asking those at the top income categories to pay somewhat more, so that we do not have to go back to the middle-income people in our society and insist, once again, that they pay a disproportionate share of this tax burden.

Mr. President, that is why I believe the package that we are offering today is more fair to the middle class, because if you look at the effect, we are increasing the tax rates on those who are at the highest income categories, and we are also looking at those parts of this plan that put a burden on the middle income, and we are reducing them.

On Medicare, instead of increasing the deductible from $75 to $150, which is in the Senate plan, we go from $75 to $100. Mr. President, three-quarters of our senior citizens will have a health requirement that would force them to pay the full $150 deductible.

So many of our senior citizens cannot take an additional hit in their medical expenses. So many of them are already experiencing real pressure, when they have to make the decision to seek the help of a doctor or to stay home and suffer?

Mr. President, we say we can do better than what was proposed in the Senate plan. I urge my colleagues to examine each and every element of this proposal, because we believe it is more fair to those who are the middle-income people in this country, more fair to the elderly sick, more fair to the farmers.

Mr. President, let me just turn my attention briefly to the question of what happened to agriculture in this summit agreement.

It has been written in headlines all across the country that agriculture was reduced 25 percent. No other program comes close.

Mr. President, it is not the full story. The actual truth is that agriculture has taken a much bigger hit than 25 percent. The reason for that is simple: The so-called budget baseline for agriculture is unlike any other budget baseline. Every other budget baseline has inflation included but not agriculture. So, the real cut for agriculture is close to 40 percent.

This chart shows the trend in agriculture spending starting in 1989, basing that at 100 percent, and look at this trend line. Agriculture will be cut 42 percent in 1995 when adjusted for inflation to the level of spending in 1989. No other part of the budget takes anywhere near that kind of hit.

Let us just compare for a moment the program cuts in agriculture, which is the red bar, compared to the program cuts in defense, which is the blue bar.

These charts show the real reduction in agriculture compared to the real reduction in defense.

As one can see, agriculture takes a hit that is four times as great as the reduction for defense.

Mr. President, this is all the more serious if one reflects on what has happened to agricultural income over the past decade. The estimates by the Congressional Budget Office are that with no cuts agriculture will face a 21-percent decline in real net farm income over the next 5 years, with no cuts; a decline of 21 percent in net farm income.

With these cuts, the projection in my State is that farmers will face a reduction in income of 30 percent or more.

Mr. President, this is not a matter of just being inconvenienced. This is not a matter of just paying a little more for gasoline. This is not a matter of paying a little more in the way of taxes. This is not a question of a little cut around the edges in some program. This is a question of survival for tens of thousands of farm families all across this country, and it comes against a backdrop of a decade in which we have had the lowest farm income, when adjusted for inflation, of any 10-year period in our history.

Let me just repeat that. We have just completed a 10-year period in which we have had the lowest farm income of any 10-year period since we started keeping records back in the 1910's.

So, Mr. President, the amendment that I have offered the body is more fair to farmers, more fair to the elderly sick, more fair to the middle income, and yes, more fair to rural areas, more fair to rural areas because we drive more than other parts of the country, and so we have reduced the gas tax in the amendment that I have proposed from the 9½-cent increase that has come to us from the Senate to a 5-cent increase included in the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. President, gas taxes are regressive and this package that has come to us from the Senate seeks to raise $42.6 billion in gas taxes, the biggest single source of revenue in the package.

Families, with incomes of $10,000 a year, spend twice as large a proportion of their income on gasoline as those earning $50,000 a year. That demonstrates the regressivity of that proposal.

So, we have in this amendment sought to do several things: Make the tax system more fair; make it more progressive; recognize what has happened in the last 13 years to a system that has become more regressive, asking more from those with less; and we have also addressed the question of the elderly sick. We have tried to make the package more fair for them.

We have addressed the question of farm programs by reducing the cut in the overall package some 40 percent. And finally, we have attempted to create a package more fair to rural areas by reducing the gas tax increase.

That is the package that we have put before the Senate. It does not have—and I want to stress; it does not have—what was in the House package, increasing income taxes for everyone by indexing the rates. That is not included. It does have all of the other Senate provisions. It has the extenders. It has the move to encourage research, R&D.

Mr. President, we believe it is a package that is more fair, and perhaps most important, it pays for itself. It provides the same level of deficit reduction that we had in the package that came from the summit and the same level of deficit reduction that came out of Senate reconciliation.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is informed that he has used 20 minutes of the 1 hour allotted to his side. The Chair understands there is 2 hours equally divided.

Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is seeking recognition. How much time remains to the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 40 minutes remaining on his side in connection with the 2 hours evenly divided.

If the manager opposes the amendment, he controls 1 hour.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. I thank the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. I believe, for all the reasons stated by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, this improves the proposal being offered to the Senate by the Senate leadership.

I want to make it clear that I think the American people, at least the people in the State of Nebraska, are saying that we want deficit reduction. Make no mistake about it: They want to reduce this deficit. And make no mistake about it as well: I think what the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the ranking member, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, presented is some difficult choices for this body.

Reducing the deficit will not be easy. None of us believe that it will. We are going to have to make tough choices, and the work that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico have done has, I think, been exemplary in presenting us with an opportunity to really reduce the deficit in year 1 and to achieve over a 5-year period the largest single reduction in the deficit in the history of the Republic.

I point out that many of us believe that this will have to be revisited. It is likely the deficit will increase if economic conditions do not improve, if there is not a significant enough reduction in the interest rates. No one expects this action that we take here in October not to have to be revisited.

Let me deal as well with a couple of other things that I think the distinguished Senator from Tennessee earlier touched on that I also think are important. In addition to the need to reduce the deficit, I think it is important as well that we listen to what our citizens are telling us. They are telling us, yes, we want action; we want you to finish your work, get this to the President so he can sign it, so you all can go home. We want this business out of the way. But it matters how you do it. What you do matters. The action itself is important, but the nature of the action is important.

I heard the distinguished Senator from Tennessee say earlier in some of the debate some Members were saying, and particularly coming from the administration, it was almost as if defense cuts themselves were different from all other reductions.

I quite agree with the distinguished Senator that a reduction in agriculture is the same as a reduction in defense. They are no different. I still object to the unwillingness to make further reductions in defense because I think they could have occurred. It is almost as if those were not reductions.

I appreciate the effort on behalf of the Senator from Tennessee to defend further reductions in agriculture, because, though I think agriculture took a significant hit and an unfair hit compared to other parts of the budget, it could have been worse. It could have been worse if the distinguished Senator from Tennessee had not fought to preserve what we eventually got. I must point out to my colleagues, with all due respect, that not once, not once, did either the President or the Secretary of Agriculture go to the American people and say: Here is why this expenditure is important; here is why we need it.

Unlike all other areas of Government, we heard our Defense Secretary telling us over and over again why the defense budget was needed, why it was important for the country. We heard from the Administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Department of Energy, and all other areas of Government, but not a word from the Secretary of Agriculture saying: Here is why these expenditures are important. Here is where we have to have $10.7 billion.

So there was not a word, I say to my colleagues, coming from the administration on agriculture reduction. I think, were it not for the work of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, this reduction would have even been worse. I point out to my colleagues that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee is right. A reduction is a reduction and an expenditure is an expenditure. It does not matter in what area it is.

Finally, Mr. President, I simply say that what the distinguished Senator from North Dakota is offering is an opportunity as well to listen to people at home who say, "If you have to raise our taxes, as you and the President have agreed"—the President now says we have to have a tax increase; Congress agrees there has to be a tax increase though there is still some dissent on it. I would love personally to make a deeper reduction in defense to avoid a tax increase, but I am not being presented with that opportunity. "If you have to raise our taxes, do it in a fair way," because, again, Mr. President, it matters what you have. Do not just willy-nilly raise them and leave. Make sure that you consider what happened in the 1980's and what is happening as well with the specific reductions. And it is not parochial, Mr. President, to be concerned about what this budget will do particularly to the Midwest but also as a consequence of the agriculture reductions.

What the distinguished Senator from North Dakota is offering is an attempt to mitigate this reduction by being careful how you select the taxes, and making it more progressive with an increase in the income tax, by making it less regressive with a decrease in the energy tax, and particularly on the gasoline tax. I must point out that this will come at a terrible time for us already in agriculture. We are going to have decreased income and increased expenses. This is an awfully good amendment for those of us who are concerned not just about agriculture but about the economic health of America.

In closing, Mr. President, again, I applaud the work of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the ranking member, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. I understand we have to get something done. I understand that progress must be made on this deficit. I understand as well that many of these amendments will probably be defeated.

I want the conferees to know that I want them to go into a conference with the House of Representatives fighting for more progressivity than they have already been able to achieve. I applaud the progress they have made. I want them to know the people of Nebraska would like to have a reduction in the gasoline tax. They would like to have an increase in the income tax.

I have heard the arguments about the bubble. Frankly, I think sometimes they are overstated.

What they are saying is we want our taxes to be more progressive. We would like to have a progressive tax package come out of this if taxes are necessary. If you need to tax us make sure they are more progressive because the 1980's have increased the regressivity of taxes and have placed increasing burdens particularly on working and self-employed people. And I think the people of Nebraska and, I suspect, in most parts of the country, as well, will say to the conferees that they should make progress towards increasing the progressivity in this package.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has yielded the floor.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, the Senator from North Dakota is controlling a portion of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May I say to the manager of the bill, the Senator from North Dakota is in control of 1 hour. The opponents to the Senator from North Dakota are in control of another hour. I recognized the manager, thinking he was rising in opposition. He yielded 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, who spoke in support of the amendment. So the Chair is somewhat confused at this point in time of who is controlling the hour in opposition to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SASSER. Let me just say to the Chair that I do not regret yielding that 10 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska even if it came off the time of those who are opposing the Senator from North Dakota because the Senator from Nebraska made some excellent points in his usual eloquent fashion.

But I would ask of the Chair, how much time does the Senator from North Dakota have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the yielding by the Senator who is manager of the bill is to be charged against him, the Senator from North Dakota still has 40 minutes and the Senator who is the manager has 51 minutes and 22 seconds.

Mr. SASSER. Then I suggest that perhaps the Senator from North Dakota could yield to the Senator from Washington if the Senator from Washington is speaking in support of the proposal of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I would be pleased to yield 10 minutes to my friend from the State of Washington. I also want to indicate to my colleagues that the cosponsor of my amendment, Senator BAUCUS, is now on the floor. I will be eager to grant some time to him as soon as the Senator from Washington has completed his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment. I might state that I want to congratulate the Senator from Tennessee and many others for the work that they have done under most difficult circumstances. However, I think that this should prove, once and for all, that we are 6 months late, and we are 6 months later because of this budget summitry.

Earlier today, my very good friend, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] made reference to my tenure as chairman of the House Budget Committee. Yes, I was the first chairman of the Budget Committee at a time when the Budget Committee had a much more narrow and specific function than has been inflicted upon it during the Reagan-Bush era. And I note parenthetically, Mr. President, that anyone faced with chairing a Budget Committee in either the Senate or the House now in the shadow of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, faces a considerable challenge.

But, Mr. President, I do not share the view of those who proclaim a failure of democracy, when Members of the United States Congress reject a deficit reduction proposal produced at the summit, or at a committee meeting, that strikes an individual member as being unfair. I respect the efforts that were undertaken at Andrews Air Force Base, but I am not prepared to support the result.

I commend the members of the Finance Committee on both sides of the aisle for working very hard to put the package together before us today, but I reserve the right to work with other Members of this body who feel this package can be improved upon here on the floor of the Senate.

As a former Budget Committee chairman, and a former member of the body that yesterday produced, in my view, a plan that is far superior to the package that is being urged upon us today, I remind my colleagues that each of us has an individual right, and an obligation, to support those initiatives we feel are fair, and to reject those that we feel are not. To reduce this vote to a litmus test of loyalty to some ill-defined measure of what is or is not a serious effort to reduce the deficit is a mistake.

I might state to my colleagues that I have here in my hand the son of Rostenkowski—and I am prepared to introduce it if all of these amendments are defeated—that would give fairness to this package, or if we are not given some commitment that indicates that we will come out of this deficit reduction with fairness to the American people. By "fairness," I mean the type of things that are in the Conrad-Baucus proposal.

We can no longer go to the American people and say we will simply tax the poor, and we will have the middle-class taxes increased, and we will let the weathy off scot free. That is what has been going on for 10 years. And it has become worse and worse.

All you have to do is read the mea culpa book of Dave Stockman of what they did in 1982, and then what was followed up with the tax reform in 1986. I regret I was not in either body at that time—I was in private life—because I surely wish I had been here to fight them. I am here today to fight them once again because the American public deserves something fair.

The ringing telephones, the angry mail, the burned out fax machines we have all witnessed really do represent democracy in action. The middle-class wage earners, our elderly on fixed incomes, our farmers, and our young families, were outraged to hear that the wealthy are, once again, avoiding their share. They are only going to pay 28 percent. They do not even pay what the middle taxpayers pay at the 33-percent rate. They are sick and tired of hearing about sweet deals with wheeler dealers in the savings and loans industry. And they feel that they want to have some fairness.

I echo again what was said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY]. It is not just what we do, but how we do it. And the way we do it, is we do it with fairness. That is why I am supporting the Conrad amendment. There should be an income tax structure with three rates of 15, 28, and 33 percent. When I was in private life, I was paying on a 50-percent rate and I was glad to pay it. I had the money to pay it, and I thought it was fair. I thought I should pay more than the wage earner making $10,000 or $15,000 a year.

A thousand dollars to a person making $200,000 is much easier to pay than for one making $10,000, or $15,000, or $17,000. We have to have fairness in this proposal. That is not just criticism of the deficit, it is how we do it.

Senator CONRAD has done three things here that are terribly important. That is why I support this amendment, and I support others like it. The first thing is to make it a progressive and fair tax.

What happened to the idea of progressive taxation? What happened to the idea that a person making $1 million, that last thousand is worth less to them than the person making $25,000? That has always been our tenet and it should continue. And that, at least, is addressed in this amendment and I support it.

The second part is, why balance off the deficit on the backs of the elderly, whom we have spent years trying to help? Everybody should help in this package, but this is balanced way too heavily on taxes on the lower-income people, and on the elderly. So that is corrected in the Conrad amendment.

The third part involves the gasoline tax, and I talk about this both as former Secretary of Transportation and budget chairman. I used to oppose trust funds when I was a budget chairman, because I felt they should all be in one budget package. But now I feel those trust funds have to be protected. The infrastructure of this country is coming apart. I believe if we have a gasoline tax, that we should put it into the infrastructure, to repair it and to replace it, and we should tax with the income tax in order to pay for the deficits that we have run up. And who should be paying that? The people who got it during the last 10 years. And who are the people who got it? They are not the people in the middle class. Their incomes went up about 3 percent over the last 10 years. The top six-tenths of 1 percent, their incomes went up 86 percent. Let us have them give a little bit of it back.

I do not know why it is in budget debates often there is no passion; people seem to feel they are just numbers, they do not count. They do count. There are people out there, and the people out there are mad about the fact we on the Democratic side, and particularly all of us who have said for years that we are going to reduce that deficit, did not come up with a proposition that we want the people who have the money and made it during the 1980's to pay some of it back. That goes for savings and loan people, it goes for people who made it on the defense industry, it goes for all the people who made a whole lot of money at that time; and it was not the middle class. I think we have a right to expect fairness in this country.

I will support the taxes on beer and on cigarettes and on these other items like that. But those are taxes—let us not kid ourselves—on the man who is going to work every day. Maybe he is making $15,000, maybe he's making $20,000, maybe he's making $25,000. We are going to tax his items.

If we are going to do that, what about the one making $200,000 a year? I thought the package that was put together on the other side was a pretty good one. It has a little capital gains in it. I do not mind putting a little capital gains in it. It is a one-time, $100,000 capital gains so people can sell their houses or sell items, but they do not get us back into the wheeler-dealer days.

I was in private practice during those wheeler-dealer days and I saw some of those things that were done. They were done to a lot of us. We served on boards where they were attacked by raiders, where they would come in and sell junk bonds. Those junk bonds have now failed. They came in with deals to build golf courses rather than housing, and where they did not have any money, to borrow it, and the savings and loans institutions were driven under.

The savings and loans were something created for housing, and then this deregulation thing—I am sick of the day I ever heard of it. It first came up in the Carter administration. We said, all right, we will try it in the airlines. We will be very careful in the trucking industry.

But then we started with money. There are two things the Government should regulate and control, monopolies and money. When you give up control of those you are in trouble, because when the money supply and the money availability is unfairly distributed and the money availability goes to those who are in the wheeler-dealer business, you get just exactly what happened.

I support the Conrad amendment, and I will support other efforts to make this a better deal for the middle class in this society. This effort is not intended to soak the rich. But the taxpayers who have taken a bath while the rich were getting richer during the greedy decade of the 1980's, have a right to expect that we will demand fairness in this package. I would rather vote to pass the package that was approved in the House of Representatives last night, than vote to add additional suffering to the citizens of this country that have already paid their fair share.

So I thank, very much, Senator CONRAD for yielding me this time. I may be back on the floor again with other amendments as they come, but this is the first chance and the first amendment that has come up—and I cannot support this package that has come out unless we get an amendment like this one with some progressive taxes. I should be ashamed of people who are coming in and saying they, making over $200,000 a year, cannot pay 33⅓ percent when they are demanding the people below them pay 33 percent and the people at the bottom, by the time you add their FICA and 15 percent, are paying 30 percent on their income if they are making $30,000 a year and they are self-employed.

It is fairness. I hope this message goes to the conferees when we go to the House side. I am proud of my colleague sitting through and listening to all of us, but we feel pretty mad about all this, and now is the time for us to speak out for fairness in deficit reduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. We had originally agreed I would yield 12 minutes to the Senator from Montana next.

Mr. SASSER. I am controlling the time in opposition at this juncture. Following the Senator from Montana I will yield. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he is speaking in opposition?

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Yes. May I speak at this time?

Mr. SASSER. Following the Senator from Montana's address, I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized on the time of the Senator from North Dakota for 12 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from North Dakota in supporting this very important amendment. I think it essentially goes to the heart of most of the objections that various Senators—I think various Members of the House—have had as they have been watching the reconciliation, particularly the deficit reduction parts of reconciliation, move through the Congress.

Simply put, the goal of this amendment is to equitably distribute the burden of deficit reduction.

The amendment increases taxes on the wealthiest Americans and uses the additional revenue to lessen the cuts applied to the farm program and Medicare. The amendment also lowers the gasoline tax reported by the Finance Committee by 45 percent.

Make no mistake about it. This amendment shares the pain. The farm program would still be cut by approximately $6.6 billion.

Medicare would still be cut by $47.5 billion; $13.75 billion of those cuts would be made up by beneficiaries. And Americans would still be forced to pay $24.5 billion in gasoline taxes. There is still a burden to be borne.

But this amendment would improve the deficit reduction legislation before us in four important ways. First, the draconian cuts in the farm program would be decreased. Second, Medicare cuts that will place a tremendous burden on America's elderly are decreased. Third, the highly regressive gasoline tax is cut. And, finally, the amendment distributes the tax burden far more progressively than the bill before us.

Let me explain these points in greater detail.

FARM PROGRAM CUTS

There is an unfortunate myth that farm program benefits go exclusively to millionaire farmers. Nothing could be further from the truth. The average farmer in America makes about $16,000 per year. Far from being a millionaire, he is struggling to support his family on an income only a few thousand dollars above the poverty level.

Net farm income in the decade of the 1980's has been lower than farm income in any decade since we began keeping records, and that includes the 1930's. A portion of those farmers' income is derived from Federal farm program benefits, that is true. But these benefits have been slashed from more than $24 billion a few years ago to $10.6 billion this year—a 55-percent cut. The farm program has been the fastest shrinking item in the Federal budget in recent years.

The Congressional Budget Office—the same agency that completed all of the estimates on which the legislation before us is based—recently estimated that if farm program spending is merely frozen for the next 5 years, 500,000 farmers will be driven off the land. That is the bipartisan CBO estimate.

In other words, one in every four farmers will go out of business simply if farm program spending is frozen over the next 5 years.

But the legislation now before the Senate goes beyond even a freeze. It cuts $13.6 billion from the farm program over 5 years.

CBO has not been able to redo their estimates in light of these cuts. But the CBO models indicate that the cuts in this bill could easily force one out of three or even one out of every two farmers out of business, off the land, belly up.

Such an exodus would be unprecedented and would create dozens of new ghost towns in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and farm States.

But this amendment does not even seek to replace all of the farm program cuts. It merely decreases those cuts by about 50 percent.

Farmers will still bear more than their fair share of cuts. But perhaps we will be able to keep a few more farmers on the land, if this amendment is agreed to.

MEDICARE CUTS

Senior citizens would also be hit hard by this package.

The proposal we are debating today, which I opposed in the Finance Committee, doubles the Medicare Part B deductible.

Under that proposal, the deductible increases from $75 to $150. That means that seniors who go to the doctor would have to pay twice as much, before Medicare begins to cover those doctor bills.

I cannot support asking our Nation's seniors to pay out-of-pocket increases of that magnitude in the name of deficit reduction.

There is no question that Medicare is one of the fastest-growing items in the Federal budget and I am as concerned about that as any Member of this body.

We are not solving that problem by asking seniors to pay an additional expense.

It is true that many seniors have Medigap insurance which will protect them from feeling the full effect of the deductible increase.

But many seniors—especially low-income seniors—do not have Medigap policies and they will be hurt by the increase.

And those who do have Medigap will have to pay yet another rate increase, reflecting the higher amount that Medicare will not pay.

Mr. President, the amendment that Senator CONRAD and I are offering today reduces the deductible increase to $100. It does not completely eliminate the deductible increase, but it cuts the increase in half.

The cost of lowering the deductible increase to $100 is about $4 billion over 5 years. That is $4 billion that would remain in the pockets of our Nation's seniors.

Again, our amendment will not hold seniors harmless. But it will protect them from devastating out-of-pocket increases.

THE GASOLINE TAX

The amendment also lowers the gasoline tax reported by the Finance Committee.

A higher gasoline tax increase than that proposed in this amendment would be unfair to lower income taxpayers and rural States.

A gasoline tax is highly regressive; it falls more heavily on lower income families than on higher income families.

U.S. Department of Labor statistics show that families living on $10,000 a year spend twice as much of their income on gasoline as families living on $50,000 or more a year.

An increase in the gasoline tax also treats different areas of the country differently.

A study by Auburn University shows that a gasoline tax increase would hit rural States especially hard.

That is not surprising because many rural residents have little or no access to mass transportation.

For example, a household in Montana on average consumes 19 more gallons of gasoline a year and drives about 1,000 more miles than the national average.

Rural America is certainly willing to pay for its share of deficit reduction.

But the farm program cuts, the Medicare cuts, and the gasoline tax would be a devastating triple blow to rural States like mine.

TAX THE RICH

Certainly, reducing the Federal deficit is an important national goal that would benefit all Americans.

But the current debate about distributing the deficit reduction burden comes after a decade in which an oft-quoted saying has come true: the rich have gotten richer and the poor poorer, and tax policy was part of the reason.

This amendment seeks to pay for the cuts I have described by raising taxes on the rich.

Specifically, the amendment provides for increasing the top marginal tax rate on upper income Americans to 33 percent and imposing a new 10 percent surtax on those with incomes over $1 million.

These changes will eliminate some of the inequity in the current Tax Code.

According to the Congressional Budget Office the top 5 percent of American families will have 45 percent more in pretax income in 1990 than they did in 1980 after accounting for inflation.

But the overall percentage of that income they pay in Federal taxes will have fallen from 29.5 percent to 26.7 percent, a drop of almost 10 percent. That is, their incomes are up, but their taxes are down. That is the top most wealthy Americans.

Precisely the opposite trend occurred on the bottom of the income ladder.

The budget office estimates that the poorest 10 percent of American households will earn 9 percent less in 1990 than they did in 1980.

But rather than paying 6.7 percent of their income in taxes as they did in 1980, they will pay 8.5 percent, an increase of almost 28 percent.

Correspondingly, during the 1980's, upper-income households had their income tax rates cut, from 70 percent in 1980 to 28 percent today.

Meanwhile the poorest households saw their payroll taxes for Social Security and Medicare rise from 6.13 percent in 1980 to 7.65 percent in 1990.

Keep in mind, the payroll tax burden is an important factor in determining the fairness of our tax system.

The $51,300 cap on wages and salaries subject to the payroll tax covers all of a median family's income—but less than one-fourth of the total income of a typical family in the top five percent who earn in excess of $200,000.

As a result, for a two-parent family earning the national median income, the full burden of social security taxes exceeds that of the income tax.

These statistics paint a disturbing picture.

The Nation's tax bill is being paid disproportionately by the poor and middle class. The rich are paying a steadily smaller portion of the bill.

If we are going to raise taxes to address the deficit, the rich should pay their share.

The basic principle of deficit reduction should be: those that can pay more should pay more.

CONCLUSION

In sum, this amendment shifts the deficit reduction burden from farmers, rural Americans, and the elderly to upper income Americans who can afford to pay a little more than they have in the past decade.

The budget reconciliation legislation now before the Senate attempts to balance the budget largely on the back of farmers, rural Americans, and senior citizens.

That approach will not work.

All Americans must pay their fair share if we are to produce a package all sides can support.

Under this amendment, all Americans will bear their fair share.

Farm program benefits will be cut.

Medicare benefits will be cut.

The gasoline tax will be raised.

But taxes are also increased on the most wealthy.

This amendment would make the budget package much fairer to rural States, much fairer to farmers, and much fairer to senior citizens.

Ultimately, this amendment is much fairer to all Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SYMMS. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator——

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, are the yeas and nays ordered on the Conrad amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Conrad amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SASSER I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota who has been waiting patiently.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I say first to my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee, it is not clear to me how I am going to vote on this amendment, but I want to talk about tax fairness. We on this side are not going to see to it that this amendment is voted down so we can just be the subject of more political abuse.

I am not sure yet how I am going to vote, but I want to talk about tax fairness, Mr. President. I want to talk about whether or not it has become worse or whether or not it has become better, whether or not the rich are paying, or whether or not they are escaping taxation because I think that those who say the rich are escaping income taxation are doing a disservice to our whole income tax system and destroying the faith of the American people in the income tax system. I do not think that is a very honest thing to do, and I do not think it is a very accurate thing to do, as well.

Frankly, some of those I now hear speaking about the fact that it is not fair voted for it. Those of us on our side who hear this recognize that, as a practical matter, the tax system would not have been changed unless votes came from both sides of the aisle. Quite obviously, the tax program of the United States could not have been changed unless there were more Democratic votes for it over in the House because they controlled over there for about 40 years in an uninterrupted manner.

But let me talk, if I may, about taxes and who is paying them. First, income taxes in the United States constitute about 45 percent of all taxes that the Federal Government collects. About 45 cents of every dollar that the Government collects is collected from the income tax. About 35 percent is collected from Social Security insurance including both HI and Social Security and other trust funds and the balance of it is corporate tax, about 10 percent, and then other taxes about 8 percent. It should add up to about 100 percent.

But nevertheless, in taxes, 45 cents of every dollar that the Federal Government receives comes from income taxes. There are about 110 million income tax returns filed every year. The top 5 percent of those, the people with the highest income, pay 46 percent of all the income taxes paid. So is it fair or unfair that the top 5 percent of the income taxpayers pay, to be quite exact, Mr. President, 45.9 percent of all income taxes paid. These are 1988 figures, the last time we have complete figures.

It is interesting to note that in 1979 the top 5 percent paid only 37.6 percent of all income taxes. So that income taxes have become more progressive in the 1980's. The people with the highest incomes are paying a larger proportion of the income taxes paid in the United States.

How about the top 10 percent? The top 10 percent of all taxpayers—and the top 10 percent by income—pay 57 percent of all income taxes paid, and that too has gone up in this decade and has gone up materially.

What about the lowest 50 percent, the 55 million tax returns that show the lowest income. They pay less than 5 percent of all the income taxes that are paid in the United States, even though they have considerably more than 5 percent—15 percent or so—of the total income.

The tax system of the United States is fair, and it has been made fairer in recent years. Yes, we lowered the tax rates but we took away all the loopholes. When is the last time you saw an article in the paper that said somebody with a high income escaped taxation altogether? You have not. There has not been such an article since the 1986 tax bill because we got them all.

Now, if somebody invested entirely in municipal bonds, perhaps they still can avoid Federal income taxes, but that would be a very unusual investor. The truth is that the income tax system of the United States is fair, and we have made it fairer.

Mr. President, I went into business in 1963. The top rate of income tax then was 91 percent, and I was not in the top bracket by any means so it did not matter so much to me, but the top bracket was confiscatory. And on top of the 91 percent came the State taxes. So that there really was not much left. Then President Kennedy introduced legislation that brought tax rates from 91 percent on earned income down to 50 percent and on unearned income it was at 70 percent. Then President Reagan brought it down still further to 28 percent as the top rate of tax.

Some people say that it should be higher. I can only tell you, Mr. President, that after all the so-called loopholes were taken away, after all the incentives or whatever else they were called that led to a good deal of tax avoidance were all taken away, the rich are, indeed, paying more taxes than they ever paid before. And that is the way it is supposed to be. They are paying a larger percentage of the total tax pie than they have ever paid before because the rates are lower and you cannot fool around with all these tax avoidance schemes. There is not much use going down to the lawyer's office and spending a bundle trying to figure out how to avoid the income tax because you are not going to be very successful. Indeed, people are now paying more taxes than they have in the other years.

So those who say that the income tax system in this country is unfair are wrong. Those who say that they now have to enter a new element of greater fairness into it I think are just making political speeches—some, indeed, involving considerable demagoguery. The tax system of the United States is by and large fair. The income tax system of the United States is fair. People who have higher income are paying a larger and larger percentage of the tax, and that is the way it should be.

So, Mr. President, I will perhaps put some of this material into the RECORD at some future date, but I wanted to speak out because many people apparently are noticing in the few weeks ahead there is something called an election and they certainly are making speeches that would have a bearing on that. So my speech is that the income tax system of the United States is fair and it has gotten fairer.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). Who yields time?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator SASSER, I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. KOHL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, today we continue the difficult, unpopular, and unhappy work of reducing our Federal deficit. In doing so, we have several plans and alternatives before us. Some are better than others, some are more fair than others, and some raise more money than others. Not one of them is perfect and not one of them is everything this Senator or every other Senator wants.

Mr. President, I feel strongly that the Senate should pass a deficit reduction plan that asks more from the wealthiest in America than does the Senate plan. Our national economy grew during the Reagan and Bush years, but we all know that not everybody shared in the wealth. America's working families do not need fancy tables or fancy economic analyses to understand that the 1980's were not their decade.

Today, families must have two members at work to make enough money just to make the standard of living their parents had. Today, the Senate can begin to address that inequity. We start the nineties by paying bills left over from the 1980's. The first and biggest payment must be made by those who benefited most from our past credit card fiscal policies.

Let me be more specific. We ought to help reduce the deficit by raising tax rates on the wealthiest Americans. I favor a permanent 33-percent income tax rate. I favor the Rostenkowski proposal to place a 10-percent surcharge on those making over $1 million a year. I campaigned for the Senate calling for higher taxes on the wealthiest in our society. I supported taxes, higher taxes on the rich from my first day in Congress long before politicians would mention taxes at all.

We have an excellent opportunity to do so in Senator CONRAD's amendment. He proposes both raising the income tax rate to 33 percent for the wealthiest Americans and also imposing a 10-percent surcharge on millionaires. With the money raised my friend from North Dakota will reduce the cuts in farm programs by one-half and reduce cuts in the Medicare Program. He also brings down the gasoline tax considerably. Senator CONRAD proposes taking the burden of deficit reduction from those least able to bear it and placing it on those most able to bear it.

I believe that is fair, and I believe that is a real improvement in the Senate package. The Senate package and the budget summit agreement that preceded it should have asked for a greater contribution from the richest people before it sought to save money on Medicare programs serving the elderly poor. The Senate package should have taxed Donald Trump before it took funds from dairy farmers. The Senate package should have turned to progressive income taxes before raising regressive excise taxes. The Senate budget package should have tried to find more savings in our spending programs.

I voted against the Defense appropriations bill because I felt it responded more to the needs of 1970 rather than the needs of 1990. We could and should have cut more there. Also, we owe it to the American people to save as much as we can by managing our Government programs more efficiently. I am pleased to see that the Senate package gives the IRS new funds to increase their enforcement efforts. In my opinion it is ludicrous to ask honest taxpayers to pay more before we do all we can to collect the tax dollars of those avoiding their legal obligations.

None of my reservations, however, are meant to deny that the Senate passage is much better than the budget summit package. The tax on home heating oil is gone. The Medicare cuts are greatly reduced. The overall package is more progressive than the summit package.

But, Mr. President, while the budget summit package was worse than the Senate package, the Senate package could be improved by moving it closer to the House package. There is no doubt in my mind we can do better. And adopting the Conrad amendment is a step in the right direction.

But regardless of what we do on this amendment there is also no doubt we must do something, and we must do it this week. The deficit is a threat to every American's standard of living, a direct threat to every American's pocketbook, a far greater inequity than any congressional budget package. Let us spend the time we have left in this session today and later during the conference with the House working to send the President a budget supported not just by a majority of both Houses, but by a majority of the American people.

The Conrad amendment moves us toward this end. I will support it and I will support other amendments offered today to make the Senate package more progressive. I will vote to move the Senate package on to conference with the House bill in the hopes that the final product is one that resembles a Rostenkowski proposal more than the Senate proposal. And if that final package reduces the deficit fairly and adequately, I will vote to send it on to the President.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from North Dakota for offering his amendment this afternoon. The Senator's amendment is fiscally responsible. The Senator has indicated that he objects to some of the provisions that are in the package that is before the body today and he takes the responsible approach of modifying that package in such a way that the deficit reduction totals remain the same.

The Senator from North Dakota says he objects to a gasoline tax, just as the Senator from Idaho objects to a gasoline tax. The Senator from Idaho would have us reduce our deficit reduction effort by $42 billion; just simply vote the gasoline tax out, forget it, do away with that portion of the deficit reduction package, and we will just increase the national debt by another $42 billion.

Well, if we follow that rationale, you know I object to some of the Medicare deductible increases that are in this particular package before us. So why do not I just offer an amendment and say we are going to knock out those Medicare premium increases. I do not like those. We will knock those out. And that means that we lose another 40 billion dollars' worth of deficit reduction out of this package.

I will tell you something else I do not like. I share with the Senator from North Dakota a dislike of the reductions in the agriculture programs and the agriculture cuts in this package. So I could just offer an amendment, say I want to strike out that $13 billion in savings that comes out of the agricultural programs. Then other Senators would object to other provisions.

Some Senator would say, I object to this lump-sum provision here where we deny Federal employees the right to the lump-sum retirement benefit. That is unfair. We gave them a warning. I want to strike that out. And he or she could make a good case for that. Pretty soon we would have no deficit reduction package at all.

That is essentially the course that has been urged on this body by the Senator from Idaho with his amendment. Contrast that with the approach taken by the Senator from North Dakota. He is frank to tell us that he objects to the gasoline taxes, as do I. He is frank to tell us that he objects to the agricultural cuts, as does this Senator. He is frank to say that he dislikes the increase in the Medicare premiums intensely, as does this Senator. But, rather than just trying to cut those particular items out of this deficit reduction package and leaving a gaping hole, the Senator from North Dakota comes before his colleagues and says here is what I object to, and here is how I am going to cure it. Here is how I am going to fill the hole. That is what I call being fiscally responsible.

I want to commend the Senator from North Dakota for his efforts here today.

The Senator from North Dakota says he wants a tax structure that is more progressive. I agree with him. We have a package that we are voting on today which is a progressive package. I can support it because when we look at the charts and tables that have been prepared by the nonpartisan Joint Tax Committee, it is a progressive package, infinitely more progressive than the highly objectionable package that emerged from the budget summit.

I will tell you, Mr. President, I was going to support that budget summit agreement. I had no hand in writing the tax portions of it, the revenue portions of it. When I saw what emerged, I almost gagged.

The results of that revenue package that came out of the budget summit came about as a result of the administration in the final analysis holding the gun of sequester to the heads of the negotiators, really on both sides of the aisle, representing both sides of the aisle, in that budget summit negotiation.

I thought the revenue provisions that came out of that budget summit agreement were odious. They were highly regressive. The so-called incentive measures I thought were not incentives for investment at all but really a way for a few to further gorge themselves and enrich themselves. But I was prepared in the final analysis to hold my nose and vote for it all in the name of deficit reduction.

But we do not have to do that now. We have a much more progressive and acceptable package that has emerged from the Senate Finance Committee. But the Senator from North Dakota seeks to make that even more progressive, and perhaps more acceptable to some Members of this body; perhaps less acceptable to others.

What is progressive and what is regressive to some extent is in the eye of the beholder, and to some extent dependent on what tax bracket one finds his or herself in at that particular moment.

So I say to those of our colleagues who find the package that has been presented to them today unacceptable, or objectionable—put it that way—because it is not progressive enough, let them come to the floor and let us hear from them.

Let us come to the floor and hear from them, hear what they have to say about it. Those who think perhaps the agricultural cuts are too high, let us hear from them. Those who say the Medicare cuts are too high or too low, let us hear from them.

But that is the way we ought to be approaching this whole matter, not simply coming to the floor and saying, "I object to this part; I am going to move to strike it." What if every Senator did that? By the time we got through, there would be no deficit reduction at all.

I see the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the ranking member, is back on the floor. I happen to know that there are provisions in this deficit reduction package before us today that are objectionable to the Senator from New Mexico—a lot of them, he says. But the Senator from New Mexico is not out here saying, "I want to make a motion to strike that particular item." The Senator from New Mexico is taking the responsible course, and he is saying, "I am going to have to swallow some things that I do not like, some things that may be politically unpopular, some things that may be philosophically unpalatable to me today; but I am going to do it in the name of the common good," and the common good is reducing this deficit that is eating away at the very vitals of this economy of ours in the United States.

If you do not believe it, just look around and see what is happening. When I came to this U.S. Senate in January 1977, there was talk a few years later, 2 or 3 years later, about a national malaise. But even in the midst of that national malaise, this was the largest creditor nation, the United States. Today, some 14 years later, following the decade of the 1980's, we see ourselves as the largest debtor nation.

When I came to the U.S. Senate in January 1977, the largest most powerful banks in this world were in New York City, or in California. Today, we find that not one of the five or six largest banks are in the United States. They are in Japan. There has to be a reason for that.

We find that officials of this Government have to hold their tongues on occasion. They cannot really say what they feel about trade policy, because they do not want to offend the bankers of the United States Government, our friends the Japanese. We are letting this country collapse around our ears. We are eroding our very fiscal integrity. We are losing the ability to formulate our own foreign policy, the last bastion of a great power. Why? Because we will not get our fiscal House in order.

That is why the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senator from Tennessee, and the distinguished minority leader, and the distinguished majority leader are out here supporting this package. It is not that we are in love with everything in it. We are certainly not. It is not that there are not things in it that we do not dislike rather intensely. But we feel very strongly, Mr. President, that it is in the national interest that this deficit reduction package pass. That is why we are out here struggling to get it passed.

I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota, he may not agree with everything that is in this package, but I commend him for coming to this floor and telling us what he disagrees with and then telling us how it ought to be cured, and at the same time containing the deficit reduction elements that are necessary in the final analysis to reduce this deficit by at least $41 or $42 billion in fiscal year 1991, and $500 billion over 5 years.

Contrast that with the approach taken by others, who would simply say: I object to this; let us strike this out. It leaves a hole in the deficit reduction package, and it is just no good.

Mr. President, I yield the floor at this juncture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield up to a half hour off the bill to the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. Will the Senator from Colorado yield for a moment, so I might inquire as to the time remaining?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 17 minutes remaining. The Senator from Tennessee has nearly 22 minutes on the amendment itself.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank my colleague from Colorado, and I thank the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the chair, and I thank my friend from New Mexico for yielding me the time.

Mr. President, this is a very interesting discussion this afternoon, but I do not want to lose track of what I think is the main question. I believe the main issue is, do we want to raise taxes as America's economy lurches into a recession? is raising taxes in the teeth of a recession a good idea? That is the main issue.

This bill, which appears on the desks of Senators, is several inches thick, but you can boil it down to its main essentials pretty quickly.

There is about $169 billion in taxes and user fees in here; $180 billion in defense cuts and savings of one kind or another, savings which, by the way, will occur, whether or not we adopt this package. Later, I want to talk about whether this package is the only alternative and whether there are other ways to get there. I will tell you that 180 billion dollars' worth of cuts will occur whether we pass the package this day, this week, or ever.

Then there is $65 billion in assumption about interest rate savings. Those are the three big pieces of it. We have a $500 billion package here, and over $400 billion of it is in just those three pieces: a tax increase, defense cuts, and an assumption about interest rates savings. Make no mistake, this highly touted piece of legislation is first, last, and always a big increase in taxes, an increase in the income tax, an increase in the gasoline tax, the tobacco tax, and the tax on beer and wine, and on boats, airports, airplanes, telephone taxes, and an increase in the health insurance tax, and a lot of other increased taxes and fees.

In fact, Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will take a moment sooner or later to look through the summary of the Senate reported bill. There are $142 billion in explicit taxes, and then a list of the savings which are proposed in addition to the tax increases. When you look at the savings, it turns out that they are, for the most part, or at least in large part, fees.

For example, under agriculture, scored as a spending reduction, is the APHIS fee; then there is the bank insurance fund increase; Coast Guard user fee; railroad safety inspection fee; National Weather Service fee; tourism user fee; uranium enrichment fee; EPA service fee; Nuclear Regulatory Commission fee; Army Corps recreation fee; and the list goes on and on and on.

That is in addition to the limitation on itemized deductions, the practical effect of which is to raise $30 billion more from income taxpayers. The motor fuel tax increase goes up 9½ cents, more than double that tax. There are other taxes, which I have mentioned, on tobacco, alcohol, automobiles, private boats, jewelry, furs, airplanes, airport tax, extension of the health insurance tax, airport trust fund, Medicare wage caps, and you name it. This is a big tax bill.

Mr. President, the question I hope Senators will think about when they march down in the well to vote on this bill is, why in the world would we want to raise taxes when this country is already staggering under the blow of rising oil prices, a sagging bond market, a crashing stock market, and a real estate economy that is in depression—not recession—but in a deep depression in many parts of the country? Why would we want to adopt the kind of economic remedy which is recommended by no known reputable economic theory?

This bill is predicated on the belief that what we really need is from $142 to $169 billion in new taxes. The fact of the matter is that as we go into this recession I do not think you could find even one reputable economic theory which says that is the right policy when we head into a recession. I do not think you could find a theory from the left or the right or the center or from the past or the present or the future; I do not think you could get an economist to tell you that it is smart to raise taxes when a recession is coming on. The monetarist, naysayers, neoclassical schools, all of them as far as I am aware tell us when a recession is looming is the time to cut taxes. They disagree about some other details but the one prescription which, as far as I know, every school of economic thought in the country agrees with is that when a recession looms, that is the time to cut taxes, not to raise them.

Mr. President, this is not primarily a matter of abstract theory. It is a question of whether or not our sons and daughters are going to have jobs. It is a question of whether or not the factories that are just hanging on by their fingernails in some of our communities, including some I represent, are going to be able to stay in business, whether they are going to be able to meet the obligation for those retirees on pension from those companies, whether or not the community in which they are located will be able to hang on until the economy turns again and once more they can prosper.

This is real life stuff. We are shooting with real bullets, as one of our colleagues likes to say. The question is not whether we are going to have a recession. In my opinion it is clear it has already started. The issue is whether it will be a brief, mild downturn or whether we are going to take the steps in this Chamber that will make it much worse, perhaps cause it to last beyond a few weeks or a few months, maybe to a year or two. Perhaps it will even turn into the kind of recession that we experienced in the 1930's. I do not know that is going to happen. I hope it will not.

I cannot help remembering when President Hoover, a fine man, made the tragic mistake of calling upon Congress to raise taxes just as the Great Depression of the 1930's was getting under way. It was not long before Congress did so, and it was not long after that that we discovered what a foolish and counterproductive, self-defeating policy that became.

Mr. President, that is the issue. Are we going to raise taxes in the teeth of a depression or a recession?

Mr. President, in support of this package, we are told, among other things, that probably this is the only answer; that, as I think the Senator from Tennessee put it, there are pieces of this I do not like; there are pieces other Senators do not like. After all, this is the only chance we have if we are ever going to get the deficit under control. This is our only chance.

I do not want to leave that unchallenged. The reality is there are lots of other options. There are good options. There are such options as cutting spending.

Now, I do not expect that is likely to occur, and I want to say, as I have on many occasions, you do not have to cut spending for anything. I believe there are 1,176 separate, individual, recognized programs of Government, and you do not have to cut spending for one of them. Personally, I would like to cut the spending on many of them. I would like to abolish quite a number of those programs.

I would like to go out to the communities where Amtrak runs and say to them, "Amtrak is an anachronism." Passenger railroad service should not be subsidized by people who do not use it. Passenger railroad service in many communities is outmoded. We could save several hundred million dollars a year, several billion if we wanted to cut out Amtrak. I do not suggest that is going to happen. It will happen sooner or later. Before this decade ends, I am convinced, we will be out of the railroad passenger subsidy business. But you do not have to cut Amtrak to solve this budget crisis.

I am ready to cut back on housing programs. Frankly, I think the smartest thing we could do is defeat the housing bill coming out of conference shortly, just defeat it, just do not add anything to our supply of subsidized housing in this country next year. We have 6 million units of subsidized housing. As far as I am concerned that is enough. You do not have to take that kind of hard-line position.

You do not have to cut farm subsidies. Personally, though there is some curtailment of farm subsidies spending in this bill, I think we ought to go to the Nation's farmers and say, ladies and gentlemen, on or about a certain date, say 5 years from now, this Government is going out of the subsidy business; we are just not going to do it any more. We are going to phase it out 20 percent a year over the next 5 years. We are going to do it because we need to save money. But also this is a subsidy that failed, a subsidy that has not helped the farm families. It has made them dependent and poverty stricken. It has wrecked the family farm economy. The healthiest parts of rural America today are exactly the ones that have remained free of these disastrous subsidies.

I am not saying things are easy in the citrus business or vegetable business or the cattle business, but it is instructive that we do not hear representatives of the cattle business or vegetable business, or the other segments of agriculture, down here clamoring for the kind of programs that have been so costly and so ruinous in wheat, corn, and the other subsidized commodities. So I would like to cut farm subsidies.

I could give you a hundred things I would like to cut. You know, you do not have to cut anything to solve this budget crisis.

Another and, frankly, more politically practical alternative is some kind of a spending freeze, maybe a 1-year freeze or an 18-month freeze, or something like that. That is a notion that does not seem too drastic. Just take last year's number, the highest level of spending that has ever been seen in this country in any one year, and say, if that was good enough for last year, let us just try it again for next year.

If you did just that, it would make a dramatic difference over the period of 5 years in total amount of deficit. Or there is the so-called 4 percent solution. For those who cannot quite stomach the idea of a freeze, maybe a freeze of 4 percent or a freeze of 2 percent.

I want to make the point that there is absolutely no evidence that we are underspent in this country, that we are underspent in the Federal Government. We are just overtaxed.

I want to send to the desk and ask that there be printed at the conclusion of my remarks a table which traces the growth of Federal outlays in broad categories, in functional categories from 1960 to the present time and projects them through 1995. The record is very, very clear.

In 1960, this Government spent less than $100 billion. Even by 1970 we were spending less than $200 billion. Today we are spending $1.2 trillion, and under this proposal, this so-called deficit reduction proposal, we are going to be spending $1.5 trillion within a very few years. Even with the so-called deficit reductions in this bill, the deficit will rise and we are going to incur nearly $2 trillion in additional debt in the next 5 years.

Mr. President, I do send this table to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There are a lot of ways we could solve this problem. This is not the only opportunity or only package.

Another thing we hear in support of this package is that, well, it is all President Bush's fault. Let us blame him.

It is no secret I do not agree with the way the President has handled this negotiation. But I'll tell you something: It sticks in my craw when some of the very people who demanded that President Bush relent on his desire to hold the line on taxes and make taxes negotiable and agree to some kind of a tax increase are now coming back in here shedding crocodile tears about how the President has not shown leadership.

I do not know how this bill is going to turn out. It is going to pass here tonight, I suppose. Whether or not by the end of the week it gets so bad the President will veto it all or we will not get the votes for it, I am not sure what will happen. I think there is a reasonable chance that could happen.

But it is a bum rap to place the blame on George Bush. The fault is on the Congress. The Congress has the moral, ethical, and for that matter the constitutional responsibility to set the budget, provide the funds to pass the appropriation bills.

Now there is also the fairness doctrine. That is the idea that, after all, we can solve this problem by taxing the rich. I do not want to talk about that at any great length because, first of all, nobody believes that. The truth of the matter is nobody in this Chamber really thinks that you can solve the deficit crisis by taxing the rich. There is not enough money in the upper income brackets or upper wealth brackets to even make a dent in the kind of deficit we are running in the country. Out in the hinterlands they do not believe it either. It just is not true. That is why they do not believe it.

I encourage my colleagues to read David Broder's thoughtful article in this morning's Washington Post in which he basically says the same thing in a more thoughtful and eloquent way than I am today. He just says, look, this fairness talk, the idea of taxing the rich, this notion of class warfare—my word, not his—does not wash and really it should not wash.

Mr. President, as we listened to all the arguments in support of this bill, there is a certain eerie familiarity about them. We have been hearing the same arguments, almost literally the same words, today and over the last several days that we heard over and over again. Members come to the floor. We hear the managers of the bill, we hear our leaders plead with us to be responsible, to help in the process of governing, not to be naysayers, not to be nitpickers, not to say "no," not to be negative.

Mr. President, there comes a time when the only responsible course is to say "no," when the only reasonable course is not to participate in this kind of a charade.

One of my colleagues in the House related an episode. Somebody came to him and said, "Why did you vote 'no'? Why didn't you show leadership and vote 'yes'? " He said, "In my opinion, if somebody is getting ready to jump off the cliff, it is not leadership to clear the way so he can get to the edge a little sooner."

That is what we are doing here, getting ready to jump off the cliff. That is what I think is at stake if we go forward with the notion of raising taxes in the teeth of a recession.

Mr. President, as you listen to the arguments, if you listen to what people are saying, see if you do not hear the same haunting sense of familiarity from the past. Listen to what Senators have said on similar occasions in recent years.

Let us go back to 1982. One of the prominent members of the Budget Committee came to the floor in 1982 during the Senate consideration of the infamous TEFRA bill, another large tax increase. Do you want to know what he said? Let me quote him. He said:

> I am absolutely confident that we are on the road to less Government, not more.
> I am absolutely convinced that we are on the road to lower interest rates, lower service on the debt. These are the sign posts along the road to prosperity for millions of Americans.
> I know of no other way to send a more dramatic signal to the people of this country than by what we have done and what I hope we do here tonight.

That was couple of trillion dollars ago, Mr. President. On the same date another Senator said it this way. He said:

> This bill is fiscally responsible. * * * It will reduce the projected deficit. * * * (T)he country needs it. Interest rates are coming down.

That was in 1982.

A couple of years later, in 1985, the White House and the Republican majority in the Senate came up with another plan. That was the Rose Garden plan. One after another, Senators from our side of the aisle—I am speaking to my brothers on the Republican side of the aisle right now—came down to the floor to offer their optimistic guesses of the outcome. One of them, a fiscal conservative, one of the great men in the Senate and a dear friend of mine, said this. He was proved to be totally wrong, though I admire him.

You know once in a while we all say things that turn out, in retrospect, to be totally wrong. It is not any individual's statement that I want you to reflect on but the pattern here, this consistent pattern of optimisim, of a colossal ignoring of the facts as they develop.

This Senator in 1985 said:

> This budget proposal would reduce projected deficits in fiscal year 1986 by more than $52 billion. Over the 3-year period of fiscal years 1986–88, projected deficits would be reduced by $297 billion.

But it did not happen, did it, Mr. President?

Another Senator came to the floor and he said:

> We have before us a plan, a compromise, a a package put together by the Senate Republican leadership and the White House. This proposal will cut the deficit. It will slow the rate of growth of our national debt. It is a step in the right direction.

That was in 1985.

Now, in 1986, another year, the second year of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings discipline, one of the senior members of the Budget Committee looked around and he thought he saw clear sailing ahead. He made this statement. He said:

> Mr. President, we have to start someplace.

He goes on to recount the details on a meeting that he had attended and what had come out of it and then he said:

> This budget gets the job—

He was referring in 1986 to the then pending budget. He said:

> This budget gets the job done on the deficit this year and sets us on the path for what must be done in the next 4 years to achieve a balanced budget.

Well, he missed the mark by about $231 billion.

Next year, 1987, the annual budget resolution debate again became bogged down again. We had another big compromise package. They brought it to the floor. It was lauded. There was a lot of fanfare. One Senator said:

> I strongly believe that we must bring the deficits down if we are to continue to grow as a nation. The congressional budget before us calls for $37 billion in additional deficit reduction measures for next year—reducing the deficit from a record high $221 billion in 1986 to $180 billion in 1987.

Well, he was wrong, was he not, Mr. President?

Another Senator praised the author of the package in these words. He said:

> He has spent untold hours laboring through the difficult and often tense process of creating a consensus on a budget that will both make a significant dent in the Federal deficit and meet the pressing priorities of our Nation.

Does that all sound familiar? Is this what we have been hearing all day today and in the last week or so?

Well in 1988, the Senate, again right back in the same jackpot, came back with the same kind of answer with the same kind of praises ringing in the ears of Senators as they were called to vote for this fraud. They said, one of the Senators on that occasion, this is now in 1988, April of 1988:

"It is no empty rhetoric," he thundered, "to say that the road ahead will be hard and the choices will be tough. The deficit is the most stubborn animal in the domestic barn."

Then he went on to say that at last we had something before us that would solve the problem, but it did not.

A few days later in the same debate, a Senator from the West said:

This year we have made a modest, but important, effort to reduce the deficit. * * * I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the budget resolution. It is time to lay aside the rhetoric and take action.

Then there was the 1989 budget summit agreement that was announced on April 14 in a White House ceremony. One of the leaders, as he left the Rose Garden ceremony, said: "This is not an heroic agreement" but a "very good start in the direction of better cooperation."

From the other side of the aisle, one of those who was present said it is a "very important bipartisan step toward a balanced budget."

And here is what one of the leaders said when they got back to the Senate:

The budget reductions provided in this plan are very modest, but they do meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets for fiscal year 1990 and keep us on the road to completely eliminating the deficit by 1993.

I quoted 12 or 15 Senators. I could have quoted 50. I have not mentioned any names. It is not necessary. I think everybody knows who said what and it is not my purpose to embarrass any Senator.

Let me say again that everyone of us at some time or another has said something which years later turns out not to be true, which even might seem foolish, and I do not exempt myself from that general comment.

But what I am telling you is tonight is not a singular occasion. This is not an isolated event. It is part of a pattern, a pattern of exaggerated claims, a pattern of colossal optimism, a pattern of Senators being invited to the floor to hear the managers and the leaders tell them that they have to hold their noses and vote for a tax increase and hold their noses and vote for a budget resolution and another big increase in the national debt and then consistently, year after year after year, none of the promises turn out to be true.

This is not rocket science here. This is really simple. Is it not time we ask ourselves, are we being realistic? We are being asked to vote for this tax increase, a big tax increase. It is either the largest or second largest increase in taxes in the history of our country. We are being told that it is tough medicine but we have to vote for it because this is our weapon against deficits. Do we really believe it? We are told this is the silver bullet. We are told that this is the stake that will be driven through the heart of the deficit monster.

I just ask my colleagues when they get ready to vote on this thing, is this package what is being advertised? Is it tough? Is it hard-nosed? Is it sensible? Is it realistic? I do not think so.

I think, on the contrary, Mr. President, this is going to fail. It makes unrealistic assumptions. It is at best composed primarily of only three pieces, as I said at the outset. About $169 billion in taxes, a defense cut of $180 billion that will occur whether or not we pass this bill, or whether, as I hope, we kick it in the creek, and some interest rate savings that are now estimated at $65 billion.

In order for this thing to work out as it is being advertised, you have to make assumptions about the price of oil and the price of money in the outyears, that are simply unrealistic.

My prediction is that we are going to be back here if we pass this. In a few months, the Senate will be back in session, facing the same crisis. We will be hearing the same arguments. The only differences will be this: That we will have ratcheted up the tax rates. The economy will be a little worse because we have done so. The employment will be a little lower and unemployment will be a little higher and a few companies will be out of business. Some of our options may be foreclosed and our constituents will be just that much more cynical than they already are.

Dan Mitchell is the John M. Olinn senior fellow at the Heritage Foundation. I hope you will take time to read his article written recently in the Washington Times. I would like to quote a couple of paragraphs because he nailed it down just right. He said:

America's longest peacetime period of economic growth need not come to an end. The right combination of policies could restore and extend the expansion.

He wrote:

The way to stop a recession or to reduce its severity is to return to policies that promote economic growth. America needs tax cuts, not tax increases. Rather than return to the tax and spend fiscal policies of the 1970's, growth in Federal spending must be limited to 4 percent per year.

He goes on at some length and he sums up:

in short, we need to do all we can to prevent or cut short the biggest budget-buster of all: a recession. Even a mild recession could push the deficit above $300 billion.

I send this article from the Washington Times of September 26 to the desk and ask it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Raising taxes during a recession will make the recession worse. Dan Mitchell knows that. The U.S. Civil Rights Commission knows that.

I thank my friend from Idaho for sharing with us the news release in which the U.S. Civil Rights Commission makes the point first that raising taxes in a recession means less jobs and in that setting that minority people get hurt worse than anybody else. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce knows that, the Farm Bureau knows that, the NTU knows that, and the Wall Street Journal knows that, and deep down in our hearts many of us in this Chamber, maybe most of us, know that raising taxes in a recession is a poor idea.

Our constituents at home know it. Inside the beltway, if we spend a lot of time just going to committee meetings in a closed room with little or no input from people who are just trying to make a living and keep their households running and maybe pay their kids' college tuitions and things like that, it is easy to get the idea when you are isolated from that kind of input from everyday Main Street people to think that raising taxes somehow makes sense. That is what happened to Herbert Hoover.

But, if we talk to people at home we will find out that out in the real world where people work at everyday jobs, in companies that would like to stay open, in communities that would like to remain viable, they think the notion of raising taxes in a recession is a harebrained idea. Mr. President, so do I. That is why when the vote comes I am going to vote against this tax raising bill.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 26, 1990]

RECESSION OVERTURE

Many economists, political analysts and media commentators now are telling Americans that the economy is heading for a recession. They could be right.

Although the current economic expansion is the longest in America's peacetime history, the economy has struggled with anemic growth of just over 1 percent in the past nine months. Inflation also is on the rise.

While politicians will try to blame everything and everyone from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to the business cycle for the looming economic hard times, any recession that occurs should be stamped with the label, "Made in Washington, DC."

The one lesson that policymakers should have learned by now is that bad economic conditions are mainly the result of bad government policies.

In the 1970s high taxes, wasteful spending, inflation and excessive regulation combined to produce stagflation. As a result of the weak economy, fewer jobs were created, many businesses went bankrupt and families suffered.

In the 1980s, by contrast, tax cuts, an improved monetary policy and deregulation helped spark the current economic expansion and the greatest burst of job creative in U.S. history.

So far, the 1990s have resembled the 1970s. In the current session of Congress, legislators have increased the minimum wage, enacted new regulations that enormously increase the costs of doing business and appropriated huge increases in domestic spending. Still to come, perhaps, are the Clean Air Act, a massive child-care entitlement program and a tax increase—a deadly mix even to a strong economy.

America's longest peacetime period of economic growth need not come to an end. The right combination of policies could restore and extend the expansion.

The way to stop a recession or to reduce its severity is to return to policies that promote economic growth. America needs tax cuts, not tax increases. Rather than return to the tax-and-spend fiscal policies of the 1970s, growth in federal spending must be limited to 4 percent per year.

Instead of punishing those who would risk their money in investment, the tax code should be amended to reward expenditures on new plant and equipment, and the anti-savings bias in the tax code should be eliminated.

And finally, expensive new regulations need to be shelved in favor of legislation that strengthens American competitiveness.

The stakes are enormous. The economy is not numbers, it is people. When growth falters, people lose their jobs. When the economy slows, entrepreneurs see their businesses fail. When the stock market falls, millions of people's pensions lose value.

More than any other group, the poor suffer most. They would be the ones who bear the brunt of a recession.

The main goal of Washington right now should be economic growth. For that we need tax cuts, not tax increases. We need to roll back the Social Security payroll tax. We need to cut the capital-gains tax. We need to make individual retirement accounts available to more people, for more purposes: retirement, long-term care, education, homeownership.

And we need to hold the line on federal spending, capping annual spending growth at 4 percent, which would balance the budget by 1997.

In short, we need to do all we can to prevent or cut short the biggest budget-buster of all: a recession. Even a mild recession could push the deficit above $300 billion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield myself what time is necessary from the amendment.

Mr. President, I have been listening with great interest to my friend and colleague from my neighboring State of Colorado. We have worked, labored on the Budget Committee for many, many years together. I want to generally associate myself with the remarks that he just made. I do not agree in total concept with everything the Senator from Colorado has said. I am not going to start fixing blame for the critical mess we are in right now.

I am going to be very brief in my remarks, Mr. President, and try to set some kind of pattern here. Let us stop talking and start voting, because we are in a totally critical, crisis situation with the Government scheduled to close down the day after tomorrow and we do not yet even have a bill with which to go into a conference with the House of Representatives. I think wasting a lot of time on debate that is not going to change any votes is not too fruitful a way to move ahead and at least try to get something worked out.

One of the things my friend from Colorado said I want to correct him on, and I think he would agree with me. He just sent an article to the desk that said the budget deficit was $300 billion. That is an error. That is what we keep hearing.

The GAO just gave a report, requested by the Senator from Idaho, who I see on gave floor, and myself, which said the real deficit today is $370 billion. The difference of course is the amount of money that is continually used to offset the true deficit because we have been borrowing from the Social Security Trust Fund. So that makes the situation even worse.

I pointed out in a talk a week ago that even if the President's summit package had been enacted, the national debt would have gone on up in the next 4 or 5 years from its present lofty heights of $3 trillion to over $5 trillion.

I think the worst mistake we are making here in toto is the American people are being led to believe that had the budget summit agreement the President endorsed come over here and had it passed with all that pain and suffering and increased taxes, that would have once and for all told the American public that we have done something and we have solved the budget deficit. Hogwash. It would not do that, for the many reasons my articulate friend and colleague from Colorado just enunciated.

Possibly out of all this might come sense. I do not know what is going to happen but I suspect sooner or later, Sometime this week, we are going to come to some kind of a budget agreement that in all probability will be vetoed by the President of the United States. Then we will be back in the soup once again.

The only good news I can see about that, Mr. President, is that at that time maybe a proposal that the Senator from Colorado had referenced—and that is a freeze that this Senator and a few others have been advocating for 7 of the last 8 years on the floor of the U.S. Senate—maybe we can come back with something like that.

I caution against continuing to fool the American people every 5 years that we fashion a new 5-year program to balance the budget at the end of the 5 years and in almost every instance those of us who have some rudimentary understanding of the budget know there is no possible way that that could prevail. So, regardless of what we work out here it should be clearly understood across America that while whatever action we take might be a step in the right direction, it does not solve the problem, as the Senator from Colorado said so very, very well.

One of the things we might have to come back to is reality. The reality of the situation is that there is no way we can balance the Federal budget of the United States and stop the skyrocketing increase in the national debt in 5 years.

Mr. President, it cannot be done. It took us a lot longer than 5 years to get into this mess. It is going to take us more than 5 years to get out of it, and only if we are wise enough to plan ahead, in some way to not break the country and throw this country into a recession by unwise and inappropriate action.

I suggest maybe when we come back to that train wreck that is likely to happen this weekend, maybe at that time a little reason will prevail, we will come up with a plan that will freeze spending; come up with a plan that will force, over a series of years beyond the 5 years, total elimination of the deficit. The only way we could do that, Mr. President, is with a motion I offered in the Budget Committee, which was strongly supported by the Senator from Colorado, and that is we should change the enforcement mechanism, rather to have it be in the form of projected savings, to make the day that we have to borrow money, the day we have to raise the national debt ceiling of the United States, the day we should have as the enforcement date of whatever we in advance agree to.

Why is that? Because that is a finite number. It is easily understood and we cannot use smoke and mirrors to cover it up. If you are broke and you have to go to the bank and borrow money, as the Federal Government has had to do time and time again, then that is the time to call a halt and make the hard choice that has to be made.

I do think in the end maybe we will be able to work out some kind of a freeze agreement if everything else fails, with some kind of an enforcement mechanism over a longer period of years, to force the Congress and the President to make honest decisions and force them to live up to that by using the day we have to borrow more money as the only enforcement mechanism that I think will work.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Maine?

Mr. COHEN. I yield myself 5 minutes from the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, last week I indicated that I, like other Members in this Chamber, supported the overall goals that were set by the budget resolution; namely to seek a reduction in the next fiscal year of approximately $40 billion with an overall reduction of $500 billion over the next 5 years.

I have heard a number of individuals say, let us just make a decision. Why is Congress paralyzed? Why not just adopt what the President submitted, what the President said he would support and what the budget summiteers agreed upon? Why not just vote for that and get out of town? It would be easy to make that decision and go home, but I do not think that would be fair or equitable in its results.

Last week, I supported the budget resolution and indicated at that time that I would reserve judgment on the reconciliation package that would be forthcoming and is now before this body. I believe the Finance Committee proposal is, indeed, an improvement over what was recommended through the budget summit. But I still do not believe it goes far enough for a number of reasons. First, this reconciliation package would more than double the Federal excise tax on gasoline at the very time that we are seeing dramatic increases in the price of gas at the pump.

Perhaps, if the price of gas was down to where it was in August, it might make some sense. But even then it would mark the first time we are using the gasoline tax for deficit reductions rather than for the highway trust fund to build roads and improve the infrastructure.

We are cutting into the States' ability too. They traditionally have turned to the gas tax for revenues. I do not believe we should be raising the gas tax, not by this amount or not by any amount under the circumstances.

Second, I do not support what this reconciliation package does to Medicare. Many would justify the cuts on the basis that the Medicare program has grown so rapidly. However, this growth merely demonstrates how much our senior citizens need this program. While the cuts in this bill are not as severe as they would have been under the budget summit agreement, I still believe that this reconciliation package takes too much out of the Medicare program. I do not support the reductions in this package due to the toll they would take on Medicare providers and beneficiaries.

While I realize that it would be impossible to craft a budget agreement to satisfy every Member of this body, I do believe that we must apply a basic test of fairness to a deficit reduction plan. I believe that the reconciliation package before us today fails the fairness test by placing too much of the burden on low- and middle-income Americans. There is a fairer, more progressive way to reduce the deficit.

I support, for example, an increase in the tax rate of wealthy taxpayers. I believe we should go to a higher tax rate for those who are earning incomes above $110,000 individually or about $180,000 on a joint return. It is only fair that high-income Americans be called on to bear a greater portion of the deficit reduction effort. Indeed, I also support a 10-percent surtax on those with incomes above $1 million. I have no objection to doing that and think we should do so in this budget package.

I also favor the restoration of a windfall profit tax on those who make excessive profits on the price of oil. We should be taxing oil companies which take advantage of international events through gouging rather than taxing consumers, who are already the victims of high gas prices.

Restoring fiscal health to our Nation will require both new revenues and real spending cuts. I never took the "no new taxes" pledge because I believe that new revenues would be essential to balance the budget. New taxes alone, however, will not cure our fiscal ills. We need serious cuts in spending as well. Without spending restraint, new tax revenues will be for naught. We have already agreed upon significant defense cuts. I strongly support these cuts. In order to seriously reduce the deficit, we must also look to contain nondefense discretionary programs. Before this debate is over, I am sure that many proposals will be offered to better allocate the burdens of deficit reduction. I will consider each amendment on its merits and decide if, in my view, it improves the current reconciliation bill.

With respect to the amendment that is now pending in the second degree, I have some problems with the specific allocations provided for in the amendment. For example, I have problems with reducing the savings from the farm programs by 50 percent. I do support, however, the amendment by the Senator from Idaho to strike the increase in the gas tax. I do not think we ought to have any increase in the gas tax.

Because there are fairer ways to achieve deficit reduction, Mr. President, I do not intend to support the finance package that is currently before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). Who yields time?

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to add the Senator from Nebraska as an original cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which Senator is the Senator referring to?

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which one of the two?

Mr. CONRAD. Senator KERREY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, we have heard some novel and even creative arguments advanced against the amendment that I have offered with the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Nebraska. I heard my good friend from Minnesota say, well, the rich are already paying more taxes than other people, and of course that is true. They have more money than other people. That is not the question.

We have heard the Senator from Colorado say what we really ought to be doing is cutting spending more. Nobody agrees with that proposition more than the Senator from North Dakota. I believe we ought to be cutting spending more. I offered a plan in the Budget Committee that provided for $559 billion of deficit reduction, and I can tell you that plan cut spending more than the plan that is before us out of the summit that has now been refined through the Senate reconciliation process.

One of the areas where I proposed cutting more was in the area of defense spending. I have this chart that shows the pattern of defense spending since the end of the Second World War.

The blue line right through the middle of this chart shows the cold war average. Even after the defense reductions that are included in this proposition, we are going to be spending more for defense than the cold war average, even after the Warsaw Pact has collapsed, even after Germany has unified, even after the Soviets have announced massive reductions of their own.

I proposed that we reduce defense back to the cold war average in my proposal before the Budget Committee, but that was rejected.

Now we have before us a measure that cuts defense $180 billion over the next 5 years. It sounds like a lot of money. The hard reality is you would have to cut defense from what the projections of what the spending increases will be by $250 billion over the next 5 years just to get to the cold war average.

Mr. President, let us go back to the question of tax fairness. We have heard Senators in this Chamber say that those who have the most in our society, those who are the wealthiest among us, are already paying a lot of taxes. There is no question that is true. The question is whether they are paying a fair proportion of the tax burden in this society. That is the question.

I return my colleagues' attention to this chart which shows the annual change in taxes from 1977 to 1990. These are not my figures. These are the figures from the Ways and Means Green Book of 1990. That is an official record of the Federal Government. What this chart shows is that every income group is paying more taxes in the period from 1977 to 1990 with the exception of one group. What is that group? It is the wealthiest 1 percent. They have enjoyed a $39 billion tax reduction.

Mr. President, another way of talking about this question is to look at the percentage change in real income and Federal tax rates of the population ranked by income taken from the period 1977 through 1990, and this chart, too, reveals a very interesting pattern. What it shows is that the poorest 20 percent in our society have experienced a real income reduction of 9 percent while they have seen their tax rates go up 2.6 percent.

Contrast that with the wealthiest 1 percent in our society who over this 13-year period have seen their real incomes rise over 91 percent while they have seen their tax rates reduced 23 percent.

Mr. President, that is why when we sought to put together a package to make the Senate reconciliation bill—that is before us—more fair we first decided that we needed to pierce the bubble. Once again, I know there is confusion about what is the bubble. What is this bubble that we hear so much talk about?

Very simply, this chart shows what the tax bubble is. It shows that on incomes from zero to $32,000, there is a tax rate in this country of 15 percent; from incomes of $32,000 to $78,000, there is a tax rate of 28 percent; for incomes from $78,000 to $185,000, for a married couple with a joint return, they are paying a rate of 33 percent. But when you get to incomes over $185,000, they go back down to a marginal rate of 28 percent. That is not fair. That is what piercing the bubble is all about.

In addition, our proposal takes the alternative minimum tax from 21 percent up to 25 percent. What is the alternative minimum tax? Very simply, it is designed to get at those who have a set of exclusions and deductions that would allow them to avoid taxation altogether if it were not for the alternative minimum tax calculation.

Third, we provide for a 10-percent surcharge on millionaires; those who have incomes of over $1 million a year would in effect wind up with a tax rate of 36.5 percent instead of the 33 percent provided for by piercing the bubble.

What do we do with those revenues? Very simply, we try to make the package more fair: reduce the burden of the gas tax on the part of our population that is disproportionately affected. So we reduce the gas tax to 5 cents from the 9.5 cents in the Senate package.

No. 2, we try to take some of the burden off the elderly sick. They are seeing their deductibles go up from $75 to $150 in the Senate package. We knock that down to an increase from $75 to $100.

Third, we seek to be more fair with the farmers of this country. As I indicated before, the farmers are taking the biggest cut of any group by far, in real terms, a 40-percent reduction after they have already experienced a 60-percent cut from 1986.

Finally, Mr. President, we have sought to put together a package that is revenue neutral; it keeps the promise that there will be a package of $500 billion of deficit reduction.

Mr. President, I want to make clear this overall package is not the one I would have written. I, very frankly, would have made more cuts in spending, and I would have liked to have seen an expanded fair share program to go after the tax gap, the $100 billion a year that is hemorrhaging from this tax system from people who are not paying what they legitimately owe.

Once again, we find if you analyze who it is who is not paying, it is the folks who have the ability to hire the high-priced tax accountants, and the high-priced tax attorneys. They are the ones escaping what they legitimately owe.

I would like to see the fair share package I offered in the Budget Committee as part of this overall package and proposal that is before us. But only a fraction of what I offered in the Budget Committee is here, some $9 billion out of the $43 billion we offered the Budget Committee.

Nonetheless, Mr. President, I think it is abundantly clear that the provisions we have offered are more fair to the middle class, more fair to the elderly sick, more fair to the farmers, more fair to the rural parts of this country, and for the first time would take a very clear step in redressing the direction we took in the 1980's to lessen the tax burden on the wealthiest among us and stack it on everyone else.

This amendment that Senator BAUCUS and I and Senator KERREY of Nebraska are offering says we are going to go to those who are the wealthiest among us, and say to them: Now it is your turn; pay a little more. It only affects those who are over $185,000 a year, married couples with an income of over $185,000 a year. Certainly, they can be asked to do somewhat more so the middle class and the less able do not have to bear a disproportionate part of this tax burden.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield the distinguished Senator from Montana 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the chairman, the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, when you look at this tax thing, I think it has been referred to here today that everybody is just coming out talking about this tax thing, and nobody is doing anything about it. It is kind of like Mark Twain and the weather. Eveybody talks about it, but nobody does anything about it, or can.

I come at it in a little bit different light. About 2 or 3 weeks ago, we introduced a measure that sort of addressed some of the things that we are trying to address here today; that is, talking about taxes. You know, we look at the amendment that is before us now. You look at the budget package as it has been reported out by the Finance Committee. I want Americans to realize that 77 percent of that $500 billion so-called savings is still taxes and service fees.

That does not sound too delightful. This is a tax bill any way you look at it. Now, you take this amendment. If you look at the real cuts, the real cuts come not in defense; the real cuts in real dollars come in agriculture. They are the folks that took the hit. I do not like it very much when you take agriculture, because rural America is still hurting. This country still has a cheap food policy. They eat better than any country in the world. They do it on less money outlay.

So I am ready to look at spending priorities and take up the fight for agriculture, to spread the burden of spending cuts fairly. I am not talking about taxes. I am talking about the real cuts we took in agriculture in the Midwest.

The amendment does not do the job. It is talking about raising more taxes. All the charts show we are going to raise more taxes. If you put in another rate, then where does it stop? Do we go back to the way of doing business, the old way, again? It furthers the business as usual mentality around here: tax, tax, tax.

The amendment is being presented by its proponents as a fair, necessary amendment, when in fact it is an effort to continue the policies that got us here today, and it is a tax-and-spend mentality.

I will tell you. Two years ago, I can remember I was on the campaign trail. I did not run on that platform. So I am opposed. I am not in favor of raising taxes on the poor or on the middle class or the rich.

I also support the Symms amendment to eliminate the gas tax. If you look at Montana, we have 148,000 square miles out there. It is a long way to anywhere. So we know who is going to pay that tax, the amount of roads we have to keep up. We certainly would hate to see that go in.

I am opposed to taxes in this amendment.

There were some interesting figures floating around. Again we were talking about them the other day. I want to reiterate that because I think it is time. Somewhere, there are a bunch of voices running around here. We feel like we are just kind of the lonesome voice in the night. All growth, virtually all growth in income tax revenues has come from the top 13 percent of the taxpayers in 1987 and 1988. Those are not my figures. They are figures according to the IRS.

Seventy-seven percent of that growth has come from taxpayers over $100,000. I guess I call it the old 50-percent deal, because I will tell you, 83⅓ percent of the taxpayers paid 37.1 percent of the total taxes in this country. So again, we are back in this mentality, trying to find ways to finance the insatiable appetite that the Government has.

This amendment we are talking about now taxed the wrong side of the equation. It focuses on taxes and revenue. The proponents try to tell us that only the rich will pay it, or that the rich will pay more. That is not true. The tax increase in this package, even if the Conrad amendment passes, will affect each and every one of us. We will all pay.

Let us take a look. We are not going to reduce any deficit. They say our figures will not fly. You just run the graphs on this, and you tell me when this budget balances out. It will not be in 1995. We will not get rid of this debt. This deficit will still keep going up because we spend it as fast as we take it in, maybe a little bit faster. It just does not accomplish more.

We offered a 4-percent solution. I heard the Honorable Senator from Colorado get on this floor and talk about that a little bit. We will have every department in the country grow 4 percent every year, based on last year's outlays, and never levy more taxes. And then let this economy in this great country grow, get off of business' back, and put them back to work and give them some incentive. Incentive is what makes this old free enterprise work.

What is wrong with making a profit and paying taxes on it? Has anyone gone broke paying taxes? Nobody. We want to lump it on the guy that makes the biggest investment and makes things happen in our neighborhood, and there is not a man in America that does not understand that. You take his incentive away, and he goes away and takes his capital with him.

So let us get off of this tax thing. Let us talk about letting the Federal budget grow 4 percent a year based on the previous year's outlays. Then let us talk about priorities where we want to spend that money.

We do not have to do without those programs that the American people embrace. That is Social Security, WIC, Aid to Dependent Children, all of those programs, and our moneys for research, moneys for disease control. We can handle all of that without one more penny of taxes on the American people because revenues will go up.

Revenues have gone up every year since 1981—every year. In 1986, when that bubble we are talking about was 33 and 28 percent, that was fairness. We could talk about fairness.

But when real cuts come from military, and some should, and then from agriculture, into a sector that is really hurting and has to compete on a market that is subsidized by all the other foreign countries, and we want to fight that battle with one hand tied behind our back—this is wrong. It is unfair.

I realize it is pretty hard to say, well, the farmers have it pretty easy, especially when you have a mouthful of pork and beans, and you got them pretty cheap.

So let us get off this thing of tax and spend. Let us talk about the real problem. Let us attack those problems where they exist. If you tax gasoline, and the county or State roads, then you impede the county or State's ability.

How do you think they pay for their schools and their gravel roads in their county? Pull the money out of the air? Government mandates programs that we send to the counties and States that says pay for them. And then, do we take away the ability to find the money?

That is no way to do it. Let us attack it on the end it should be attacked, and let us start setting priorities and bring some responsibility. Yes, we are going to have to cast a hard vote here in this body, but I am not afraid to do so.

Mr. President, I, too, am against the deep cuts that Agriculture is being asked to take in this package. I am ready to look at our spending priorities and to fight for agriculture—to spread the burden of spending cuts more fairly. But this amendment does not do the job. It just raises more taxes so we can spend more.

It just furthers the business as usual mentality around here. Tax, tax, tax. This amendment is being presented by its proponents as a fairness amendment, when in fact it is an effort to continue the policies that got us where we are today—the tax-and-spend mentality.

I am opposed to this entire package. I am not in favor of raising taxes on the poor, on the middle class, or on the rich. I support the Symms amendment to eliminate the gas tax, a tax that is unfair to all Americans, a tax that hits my State particularly hard. But I am also opposed to the taxes included in this amendment.

Prior to this amendment, the budget reconciliation bill relied heavily on taxes, fees, and budgetary gimmicks; 77 percent of the package was made up of just those things. This amendment raises that percentage to over 80 percent.

This amendment attacks the wrong side of the equation. It focuses on taxes and revenues. The proponents try to tell us that only the rich will pay, or that the rich will pay more. That is not true. The tax increases in this package, even if the Conrad amendment passes, will affect us all.

If we could balance the budget by taxing the rich, we would have done it a long time ago, folks. The fact of the matter is that in order to balance the budget by raising taxes, every working man and woman will have to pay. This tax package still relies on cigarette taxes, the alcohol taxes, other transportation taxes, and payroll taxes.

All of these taxes are paid by the lower middle class, the middle class, and the rich alike!

This amendment also relies on the myth of "bursting the bubble." Let us look at the facts. Before 1986, we had 14 separate marginal tax rates.

Our Tax Code today has only two income tax rates: 15 percent and 28 percent. The reform not only reduced the number of brackets but moved 6 million lower income Americans off the tax rolls entirely.

There is a saying that goes, "Desperate times call for desperate measures." I believe this budget package has forced these desperate measures upon us. What was a good idea only 4 short years ago appears to be on the chopping block.

The Democratic controlled Congress is searching for needed billions in additional revenues at the last minute, and the bubble appears to them to be ripe for the picking.

I do not question the right of Members of this Congress to decide that more revenue is necessary and to advocate an increase in income taxes. But I think Members step across the line when they claim that the rates, which were so carefully conceived in bipartisan cooperation in order to bring fairness to the system are now somehow a Republican device to protect the rich.

Mr. President, the facts clearly show both parties voted for the bubble. Senator BRADLEY sent a "Dear Colleague" back on May 15, 1990, endorsing his bubble. This bubble was a great idea in 1986, and it is still a great idea in 1990.

The argument now for bursting the Bradley-Gephardt bubble is to punish the rich for all the benefits of the 1981 tax cut.

Well, if it had not been for those 1981 tax cuts the average middle-class family would now be paying $2,500 more than they do.

Americans also should remember that under the tax policies of the 1970's the average marginal tax rate on middle-income families soared from 23 to nearly 28 percent in 1981. Today that average marginal tax rate is less than 18 percent.

If the bubble is eliminated it would set a dangerous precedent for the American taxpayer. Do not think for a minute that it would stop there. If the bubble is eliminated, this would set a precedent to raise the bracket for all incomes.

Then the worst fear would come true—that the American taxpayer, who gave up many of his deductions with the promise of lower tax rates, would not be faced with higher tax rates and fewer deductions.

The effect of a 33-percent tax bracket on an already shaky economy would be devastating.

The issues of tax progressivity and balancing the budget by "soaking the rich" are based on the politics of envy. By pitting groups of taxpayers against one another, politicians who refuse to consider spending limits are using this issue to gain political support for a tax increase.

The American people should realize that the battle is not between the rich taxpayers and poor taxpayers but between all taxpayers and a Federal Government that refuses to limit spending and is chomping at the bit to take an increasing share of what you and I earn.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER], appear as an original cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRESSLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I want to compliment the authors of this amendment and join as a cosponsor. I think it addresses many of the concerns that some Members have had with the earlier budget deficit reduction packages that have been presented. This amendment addresses the tax bubble problem. It addresses the minimum tax issue. It scales back gasoline and diesel fuel tax, which is a very severe tax problem.

Incidentally, the barge traffic is not covered by the fuel tax increase. I have wondered if some members of the Finance Committee could explain later why diesel burning barge traffic was not included in this gas tax increase proposal, since both diesel burning railroads and trucks are included.

Also, the Medicare cuts are eased by this amendment. This helps our senior citizens. The proposed agricultural, cuts are partially restored. The agricultural cuts were among the hardest hit of any of the various budget areas. The 5-percent itemized deduction proposal is eliminated.

Mr. President, I think this amendment represents the kind of thinking that should have been considered in tax reforms and budget reform. My State would be especially hard hit by some of these proposals. That is the reason I voted against the earlier deficit reduction package, with agriculture suffering a $13.1 billion cut. In the underlying Budget Reconciliation Bill, the fuel tax is increased. South Dakota depends on short-line railroads, which would pay the additional tax, while diesel burning barges would not pay it. We have a large senior citizen population. This amendment protects them from excessive Medicare cuts. All these cuts fall heavily upon the State of South Dakota. This particular amendment does much to rectify that.

So I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senate, who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Indiana, does he wish to speak on the Conrad amendment?

Mr. COATS. No. I have a general statement on the budget process in general.

Mr. SASSER. How long does the distinguished Senator wish?

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I do not think it will take more than 5 or 6 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I will yield 8 minutes to the Senator, off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I remember once seeing an elderly woman asked by a television reporter why, after a lifetime, she had turned her back on liberal politicians and switched her vote. "They told me they would tax the rich," she replied. "Then they told me I was the rich."

There is a real appeal to soaking the wealthy. Giving up just one of the limos, after all, is not too much to ask. Taxing mink coats won't cause anyone to go cold. Maybe we could put a surtax on polo mallets and croquet balls.

It is all so emotionally satisfying—making the rich pay to close the deficit. There is only one problem. As an economic policy, it is deception pure and simple. And those who espouse it, know it.

Appealing as it seems, the hard fact is clear. There are never enough of the wealthy to soak. They are a tiny percentage of taxpayers.

Suppose the Government just confiscated—taxed at 100 percent—the entire income of people who made over $1 million. The money they raised would run the Government for precisely 12 days. If Congress took every cent in income from those who made over $200,000, just .39 percent—that is about one-third of 1 percent—of the returns actually filed, it would fund the Treasury for just 1 month.

So what do politicians do to raise the kind of serious cash they need to support their spending habits? It is very simple. They redefine what it means to be wealthy. And that new definition always includes most of the rest of us.

The middle class, because of its size, is where the real money is for politicians. When they say they want to increase taxes on the rich, they really mean they want to increase taxes. Period.

All this talk of a class war is just cover for the same old politics of tax and spend. It is the middle-class that always pays the bills for bigger Government.

Let me get specific. Again and again in recent weeks the House and Senate have come up with budget plans. As each one fell, the pressure built to put the primary burden on the rich. Now soak the rich rhetoric has reached a crescendo. Transcripts of the House floor debate read like passages of "Das Capital."

But even in these plans, sold as taxes on the wealthy, let us look at who actually pays. The people who always pay when real money is needed, average middle-class Americans.

The House plan delays inflation adjustments for tax brackets and the personal exemption. Who gets hit here? Everyone. That is right, every single one of the 87 million individuals and families that filed tax forms and paid taxes last year. Every single one of those people gets hit with the plan to delay inflation adjustments for tax brackets and the personal exemption.

The Treasury Department estimates that a married couple with two children making $34,000 a year would have their tax burden increased 6 percent. A single person with no dependents making $21,000 would pay 5 percent more.

Is a married couple with two children making $34,000 a year rich? Is a single person making $21,000 a year rich?

This plan that is being sold to us, the plan that the House voted on and accepted last evening, says we are just going to go after the rich. Let us make no mistake about it. The married couple making an average wage is going to get hit with a tax increase.

Are these the rich they are talking about? Families that are just getting by, trying to help their kids to a better future? Young men and women just getting their start in life

I worked hard in 1986 to help double the personal exemption, taking some of the burdens off families already bending and breaking under economic strain. Now, in the name of taxing the rich, will we press down those burdens again?

An increase in the payroll tax for Medicare would be a direct new burden on a large number of two-income middle-class families. New taxes on alcohol and cigarettes would hit the same group. The Senate's plan for a massive increase in gas taxes would be a regressive, deeply resented debacle—$42.6 billion over 5 years for every class of Americans.

Are these the rich who suffer? By what cruel deception, by what cynical sleight of hand, and are average Americans designated aristocrats in this tax package?

Congress promised to tax the rich. Now they inform us the truth—we are all the rich.

You are all going to pay the taxes. Congratulations. We redefined the rich. We are going to take you all in so that we can classify you as rich and tax all of you.

And in the process, the Congress heaps deception upon ineffectiveness. It pleads for national sacrifice. It promises Armageddon unless its tax demands are met. And still it spends with the same familiar recklessness.

Each new budget package seems more bloated in spending and taxes than the last. The one before us now cuts spending in only one area between now and next year—defense. Every other program will receive hefty increases in fiscal 1991. Not one dollar of pork or waste is eliminated. In fact, domestic spending will rise $60 billion next year. Government expenses are slated to rise 10 percent. Energy programs grow 20 percent, all in 1 year, all at a moment when crisis rules our rhetoric. These are not "emergency measures." It sounds more like it's "business as usual."

I have been at a loss to explain it. Every week we lurch toward dreadful new catastrophes, making a habit of hysteria. Every week we promise dramatic answers and significant departures. But every week the proposed solutions grow more tired and timid.

I am convinced it is possible to simply freeze spending at the current level plus 4 percent for inflation. No one would suffer unfairly. No one would need to bear slashing cuts. Along with planned defense reductions, we could balance the budget in 7 years.

But our failure in Congress is not a failure of ideas. It is a failure of political will. The cause of these problems is not a lack of innovation. It is a counterproductive political agenda.

I have come to a conclusion. Something that is obvious to most Americans. Many in the Congress have as their primary goal to increase taxes, not reduce the deficit. And the reason is simple. They are using this tax package, not as a means to limit spending, but as a means to increase it. They hope to build into the fine print of this deal a guaranteed growth in Government, and a guaranteed growth in revenue. Under the guise of spending restraint we are asked to approve a spending explosion.

In this package, nondefense domestic spending increases by $245 billion, or 34 percent, during the next 5 years. This increase is larger than the entire nondefense spending increase during the whole of the 1980's. This plan, in other words, increases domestic spending more dramatically in the first 5 years of this decade than in the entire 10 years of the previous decade.

This deal, in short, is a sham. Its tax increases are used, not to reduce the deficit, but to finance a barrage of new spending. New taxes go to the S&L bailout, to pet programs, to massive spending growth—everything except paying off our debt. It sets the policies of tax and spend in cement. It institutionalizes our spending incontinence. Its reductions are illusions. Its taxes hit the middle class and push us toward recession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 8 minutes allotted to the Senator has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield an additional 2 minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. COATS. I thank the Senator for yielding. I will not use the 2 minutes.

I will vote against this package or any package that looks like it. It is a con game. The American people know the American people deserve better.

Mr. President, I yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back the time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent the time be charged equally against the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, such time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee for his courtesy in yielding me time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator will suspend until the Senate comes to order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, when the mariner has been tossed for many days in thick weather and on an unknown sea, he naturally avails himself of the first pause in the storm, and the first glance of the Sun, to take his latitude, and ascertain how far the elements have driven him from his true course. Let us imitate this prudence and, before we float further on the waves of his debate, refer to the point from which we departed, that we may at least be able to conjecture where we now are.

So, in the words of Webster, let us refer back to what I shall call the point of our departure, the point of our departure from fiscal sanity. In doing so, I would like to talk about three of the deficits which face this country: the trade deficit, the Federal deficit, and the investment deficit—or the infrastructure deficit.

We have experienced an unbroken string of triple-digit trade deficits in recent years. The last time that the United States enjoyed a trade surplus was in 1981. I direct my colleagues' attention, and the attention of the press and the viewing public to the charts to my left.

The last year that the United States enjoyed a trade surplus, as I said, was the year in which President Ronald Reagan took office, 1981. That year, the balance on our current account was a positive $8.2 billion. So over the years immediately preceding that time, the country adhered to a fairly straight line, sometimes a little above, sometimes a little below the line. But since that time, in 1981, the United States has experienced an unbroken and unprecedented string of trade deficits. In 1984, our current account deficit approached the $100 billion mark for the first time ever; $99 billion, right at the $100 billion mark for the first time.

In 1982, the trade deficit was $7 billion; 1983, $40 billion; 1984, $99 billion; 1985, a $122 billion deficit; in 1986, a $145 billion deficit; in 1987, a $162 billion trade deficit; in 1988, a $128.9 billion deficit, and in 1989, a $110 billion trade deficit.

So what has been the result of this endless string of trade deficits? We have seen our manufacturing base erode. We have seen Americans lose jobs, high-paying jobs.

Do these deficits really matter? They do. Just as the recordbreaking budget deficits of the 1980's have left the country with $3 trillion of Federal cost, thereby placing a tremendous burden on future generations of Americans, the recordbreaking trade deficits of the 1980's have destroyed the international investment position of the United States.

At the start of the last decade, the United States was the world's largest creditor. At the end of the decade, we were the world's largest debtor.

On this chart we see the U.S. creditor position, and we see the U.S. debtor position. Running from 1976 until 1984, Senators will see that the United States maintained a strong creditor position. And then, beginning in 1984 we began slipping and did slip into a debtor position. For 1984, we were in the red, $38.7 billion; 1985, we were in the red, to other countries—in hock to other countries—$212.9 billion. In 1986, the U.S. slipped further to minus $452.8 billion. In 1987, it had gone in debt $577.5 billion to other countries. By 1988, we were in hock to other countries to the tune of $769.9 billion; by 1989, $963.9 billion.

So we see in this short span of time that the United States slipped from an advantageous creditor position, with respect to other countries, to a devastatingly low position in which the United States is head over heels in debt to other countries. In other words, this line, the red line on the chart, for 1989 shows that other countries' assets in the United States—bonds, stock, property, et cetera—exceeded U.S. assets in those countries to the tune of $963 billion, almost a trillion dollars; with the U.S. slipping from a creditor position in 1984 to a debtor position, to the tune of almost a trillion dollars, of $963 billion in 1989.

Today, the foreign ownership, then, of American assets, exceeds American ownership of foreign assets by almost $1 trillion.

How much is a trillion dollars? How long would it take to count $1 trillion at the rate of $1 per per second? 32,000 years. Think of it. At the rate of $1 per second, it would take 32,000 years to count $1 trillion. So that is the sad picture of the slipping of America from a creditor position to a devastatingly low position in the space of a half dozen years, starting in 1984.

Now I want to direct my remarks to the Federal deficit. This is what we are talking about here this afternoon, the Federal deficits. Let us see how these deficits began to accumulate.

In fiscal year 1976, this country had a Federal deficit of $70 billion. In fiscal year 1977, the deficit was $50 billion. That was the last fiscal year for which President Ford was responsible. In fiscal year 1978, the Federal deficit was $55 billion. That was the first year of Mr. Carter's administration.

To repeat, for the 2 years that Mr. Ford was in office, there was a deficit: his first year, $70 billion; $50 billion in his second year.

In Mr. Carter's first fiscal year 1978, for which he was responsible, the deficit was $55 billion. In the second year of Mr. Carter's 4-year term, this Government ran a deficit of $38 billion. In the third fiscal year of Mr. Carter's Presidency, the country ran a deficit of $73 billion. And, in the final fiscal year for which Mr. Carter was responsible, fiscal year 1981, the country ran a deficit of $74 billion.

So the country had never yet seen a triple digit deficit.

And then for the first fiscal year for which Mr. Reagan was responsible, beginning with October 1, 1981—fiscal year 1982 is what we are talking about—the Federal deficit plummeted to triple digit status for the first time: $120 billion. Then the next year, $208 billion; then the next year, $186 billion; then the next year, $222 billion; the next year, $238 billion; and the next year, $169 billion; the next year, $194 billion; the next year, $205 billion; and for fiscal year 1990, a Federal deficit of $220 billion.

This last figure represents the latest CBO estimate of the fiscal year 1990 deficit.

So if Americans want to see the trend of deficits, when those deficits first became triple digit deficits, and how the country has labored under triple digit deficits for these last 9 years, here is the chart for all to see, beginning with Mr. Reagan's first year in office.

The next chart indicates the national debt subject to statutory limit. The national debt on January 1, 1981, was $931 billion, a little under $1 trillion. That was the first year of the Presidency of Ronald Reagan.

On January 1, 1989, just shortly before Mr. Reagan left office on January 20, the national debt had risen to $2,669 billion.

As of October—just a couple of weeks ago—it was $3,189 billion.

(Mr. WIRTH assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, shortly after President Reagan first took office, he addressed a joint session of the Congress on February 18, 1981. Here is an extract from his speech. He said: "Our national debt is approaching $1 trillion."

I remember seeing the President on television that evening. He had a chart to his right and he pointed to that chart and he said: "Our national debt is approaching $1 trillion. A few weeks ago, I called such a figure—$1 trillion—incomprehensible, and I have been trying ever since to illustrate how big a trillion really is. The best I could come up with is that if you had a stack of thousand dollar bills in your hand only 4 inches high, you'd be a millionaire. A trillion dollars would be a stack of thousand dollar bills 67 miles high."

I seem to recall that the figure later was reduced to something like 62 miles.

On this chart, this bar represents what Mr. Reagan was pointing out to the American people on February 18, 1981; that a stack of thousand dollar bills would stretch 62 miles into the stratosphere, representing the national debt at that point in time.

I said many times during the Reagan Presidency, you will never see President Reagan on television again doing that. Why? Because the stack was growing higher and higher. On January 1, 1989, 19 days before Mr. Reagan left office, that stack of thousand dollar bills, if it represented the national debt, would have been 179 miles into the stratosphere.

What a difference! Remember that this stack to which Mr. Reagan alluded in February 1981 represented 39 administrations, over a period of 192 years; 38 different Presidents; one President, Cleveland, had been elected twice with an intervening term by Benjamin Harrison.

The stack of thousand dollar bills, to which Mr. Reagan pointed, was the accumulation of the debt beginning with George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Andrew Jackson, Martin Van Buren, William Henry Harrison, John Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Andrew Johnson, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison, Cleveland again, McKinley, Teddy Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Carter. That is what this bar represented: the accumulated debt throughout all of those 39 administrations, preceding President Reagan, $931 billion. The stack of thousand dollar bills went, during one President's administration—that of Ronald Reagan—to 179 miles—representing an increase during his years in the White House, of $1.738 trillion. Nineteen days later, Mr. Bush inherited that bar on the chart. Since that time, the stack of bills has increased, as I have already indicated, to where it would be 214 miles in the air on October 1, 1990, just 2 weeks ago.

I had a friend recently who said to me, "Senator, I just had an idea. If every working man in the United States contributed a dollar toward our national debt, we could pay it off."

I said, "No; that would not begin to pay the interest on it."

The per capita debt—the amount that each American man, woman, boy, and girl would have to contribute to pay off that national debt, as it stood on October 1 of 1990—would be $12,659.

I have now shown how much the Federal debt has grown in the past 10 years.

Let us take a look at Government spending over the same period and see where it has grown. Let us see what has caused these deficits. Let us see what has caused that debt to grow. Let us see what the chief offenders are.

I have heard a great deal of talk, and we all have, about Government spending. Let us now take a look at Government spending. A good many people in talking about Government spending forget that spending for defense is Government spending; that spending on entitlements is Government spending, as well as is domestic discretionary spending, which I want to get around to shortly.

This line on this chart is baseline. Baseline means last year's appropriation plus inflation. The chart indicates what happened between the years 1981 and 1990. So beginning in 1981, let us take a look at the entitlement bar, which will be pointed out to the viewers. In 1981, the baseline for entitlements was $320 billion.

What I am saying to our viewers is this. Each year we take the appropriation for last year and add inflation. The next year we take the appropriation for last year and add inflation. The next year we take the appropriation for last year and add inflation. The next year we take the appropriation for last year and add inflation. Now, that is what we call baseline.

What happened on entitlements, which started out with a $320 billion baseline in 1981? Entitlements over a 10-year period grew $599 billion above baseline—in other words, above inflation. What happened on defense? In 1981, defense spending and domestic discretionary spending were on a level. Defense spending was $158 billion. Domestic discretionary spending was $157 billion—a $1 billion difference between defense and domestic discretionary in 1981. What happened?

Defense increased above baseline $569 billion in 10 years. It grew that much above inflation. And what happened to domestic discretionary spending, remembering that it started out almost on a par with defense in 1981? Defense, $158 billion; domestic discretionary, $157 billion. What happened to domestic discretionary? Domestic discretionary spending: highways, bridges, mass transit, waste water treatment, water quality, rivers and harbors, et cetera, et cetera, decreased under baseline by a total of $326 billion—$326 billion below inflation.

While entitlements went up $599 billion over inflation, and defense went up $569 billion over inflation, domestic discretionary spending was cut $326 billion below inflation. Foreign operations almost held its own. It dropped just $10 billion below baseline over a period of 10 years.

Here is a chart that shows the share of domestic discretionary funding as related to the total budget in 1981, and the share of domestic discretionary funding out of the total budget for the upcoming fiscal year, 1991. In 1981, domestic discretionary, as I pointed out a moment ago, was to the tune of $157 billion. That was out of a total budget of $678 billion.

In other words, domestic discretionary—what we spend for education, job training, law enforcement, bridges, mass transit, railways, et cetera—constituted 23 percent of the total budget in fiscal year 1981—almost a fourth of the total budget—$157 billion out of $678 billion.

Ten years later, what had happened? The whole budget had grown to $1.434 trillion by fiscal year 1991, while domestic discretionary grew from $157 billion to $171 billion. So while the entire budget by fiscal year 1991 grew $756 billion over what it was in 1981, domestic discretionary grew only $14 billion over what it was 10 years ago. Where domestic discretionary was 23 percent in fiscal year 1981, it is 11.9 percent of the total budget for fiscal year 1991.

This chart again shows the pitiful plight of domestic discretionary. That is the little runt puppy. Ten years ago, it constituted 23 percent of the total budget. Today it constitutes 11.9 percent. It reminds me of the little puppy that cannot get enough to eat and it wiggles its way and tries to push aside the big dogs, it looks like it has the scratches, and it is all skin and bones. There it is right here on the graph: domestic discretionary.

Let us now take a look at the rest of the chart for fiscal year 1991: The interest on the national debt is 13.2 percent; Medicare, 6.1 percent; Social Security, 23.7 percent; "other," this one right here—that is civil service retirement, unemployment compensation, et cetera—is 8.2 percent; and the next one, moving clockwise, GRH mandatory—that is Medicaid, child nutrition, food stamps, veterans' compensation—items that are not to be cut, or not very much, at least, in the event of a sequester—is 13.5 percent. Then, moving further up clockwise, defense, 23.4 percent. That includes 1.5 percent for foreign operations, the two together making 23.4 percent. And then, finally, back to our little runt puppy, domestic discretionary spending, which a lot of people around here still want to cut. This little fellow has been on the operating table for 10 years, under the knife; yet, there are those who want to cut on it more.

So we can see how little we are investing in our own country. I am talking about investing in human infrastructure—people—and in the physical infrastructure—the roads and the bridges, airports, waterways, our need for clean water, cancer research, scientific research, and so on.

On this chart, viewers will see the situation that this country is going to be in by the year 1997 if things continue as they are going now. Right now there are 21 airports in this country in each of which there has been 20,000 hours of delay annually; 20,000 hours of delay at each of 21 airports in this country.

I know that every Member of this body understands what it is, and the people who are viewing from that electronic eye up there know what it is to have to fly around in the "soup" in fog, clouds, over crowded cities for a half-hour, for 45 minutes, for an hour, looking out the window, not being able to see the ground—planes wasting fuel, producing pollution, wasting the passengers' time, increasing the danger to all persons on the planes. Only one airport has been built since 1974, that being in Colorado. In 1997, there are going to be 33 airports which will experience in excess of 20,000 hours of annual delays. Here is the chart. And the red dots show where those airports are located which will be experiencing such delays by 1997 if we do not do something about it. That is domestic discretionary spending.

What about the Nation's bridges? The estimated cost of the Federal highway bridge repair and replacement program right today would be $50.7 billion. There are 577,717 bridges in this country, and some of these are interstate, some are urban, some are offsystem, some are primary, and some are on secondary or lesser roads. But these are the bridges in which there is some degree or some percentage of Federal participation in the cost.

According to the Department of Transportation, some bridges are structurally deficient. Some are functionally obsolete. Those that are functionally obsolete are no longer functionally viable in a way that meets the needs of today as against the days when they were built. But those that are structurally deficient are dangerous bridges. They ought to be replaced. They are like the bridge at Point Pleasant, WV, that collapsed just a few years back and carried many people to their deaths. To repair and replace these bridges today would cost $50.7 billion.

The Federal highway system makes up 22 percent of the Nation's highways, yet it carries 81 percent of the vehicles, more than 1.6 trillion miles a year, enough to make 8,600 round trips to the Sun, which is 93 million miles away. More than 40 percent of the pavement on the system is in need of repair. It is in poor condition or fair condition.

To meet the existing capital needs of the Federal highway system, the Department of Transportation estimates that a $40 billion annual investment is required. Of this annual amount, the Federal share would be $25 billion; $25 billion out of the $40 billion would be for the Federal share. The fiscal year 1991 baseline for Federal highway spending was only $14.6 billion. In other words, it was $10.4 billion below the amount required for the Federal Government to meet the $25 billion share of the $40 billion annually that, according to the Department of Transportation, would be required to deal with the existing capital needs for highways.

The poor and neglected state of the Nation's highways and bridges is a drain on the Nation's productivity. It is estimated by the Department of Transportation that the American people waste 1.38 billion gallons of gasoline every year and waste 1.2 billion hours every year because of traffic tieups and traffic congestion. And each of these figures is estimated to grow to over 7 billion gallons of gasoline and 7 billion hours of time wasted on the highways by the year 2005.

Let us see what our failure to invest in the Nation's physical infrastructure means in comparison with the nations that do make vital public investments. Let us look at the link between public investments in infrastructure and productivity of workers.

Over a 12-year period, 1973 to 1985, we will see, in looking at the chart, the blue bars, which represent nondefense public investment as a percentage of the gross domestic product—goods and services produced in this country and utilized in this country, a little different from gross national product. Looking at the blue bars, the United States invested three-tenths of 1 percent of its gross domestic product, on the average, annually during those 12 years, 1973 to 1985. Canada, meanwhile, invested 1.5 percent; the United Kingdom invested 1.8 percent; France invested 2 percent; and what was the Federal Republic of Germany at that time invested 2.5 percent; Italy invested 2.7 percent; and Japan invested 5.1 percent. Look at it again. Japan invested 5.1 percent of its gross domestic product in infrastructure annually during that period, while the United States was investing only three-tenths of 1 percent.

How did that correspond with the productivity? While the United States was investing only three-tenths of 1 percent of its gross domestic product annually in its infrastructure, its productivity grew only six-tenths of 1 percent. Less than 1 percent.

Canada invested 1.5 percent and experienced a productivity growth of 1.3; the United Kingdom invested 1.8 percent and had a 1.8 percent productivity growth; France invested 2 percent and grew 2.3 percent; the then Federal Republic of Germany invested 2.5 percent and enjoyed a 2.4 percent productivity growth annually; Italy invested 2.7 percent for a productivity growth of 1.8 percent the same as the United Kingdom; and in Japan, productivity growth of 3 percent—all while the United States invested only three-tenths of 1 percent and had only six-tenths of 1 percent growth in productivity.

So we can see there how nondefense public investment translates into increased productivity; and increased productivity means increased economic growth; and increased economic growth means increased national security. It also means an enhanced competitive position for a nation. It means a higher standard of living. And increased public investment also encourages increased private investment.

Why not? Mr. President, if you had a company, let us say, and you would like to buy a brand spanking new fleet of trucks, all outfitted in bright red paint and chrome, how would you like to put that fleet of trucks out on roads that are filled with potholes and on bridges in need of repair? How would you like to detour 18 miles around a bridge which was closed because it was unsafe? How much would that cost? How much would that lower your productivity? How much would that cut into your profits?

Public investment encourages private investment and is conducive to the profit-making of the private sector.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise only for a brief comment.

Mr. President, there was just a major study by one of the leading technical institutes of higher education in the United States, which focused on the precise point the distinguished President pro tempore is making at this very moment. A team of management analysts, economists, and scientists joined forces to analyze all of the factors that can be said to influence national productivity growth in nations around the world.

This is a controversial field of study, but it has grown increasingly sophisticated in recent years. And this particular team ended up by identifying as the one factor most influential in determining the relative rate of productivity growth in nations around the world, the level of nondefense public investment, such as in infrastructure.

I have been one who has argued that we should expand the definition of infrastructure to include not only roads and bridges, as has been the common definition in the past, but now fiber optic cables and information infrastructure and the like.

In any event, I was intrigued by this study and the close correlation between the conclusions of this team of experts and the point being made by the distinguished President pro tempore, which just now provoked this brief intervention.

I thank my colleague for his courtesy in yielding.

Mr. BYRD. I thank my distinguished colleague from Tennessee for the emphasis he has placed upon the importance of nondefense public investment and how it relates to productivity growth.

Let us take now the human side of infrastructure. This chart indicates the relative standing of the United States among a total of 16 nations, in respect to education spending—grades K through 12, for the year 1985.

We do very well with postsecondary education. Students come from other countries to the United States to study. But from K through 12, we are cheating our kids. On this chart, we find that in K through 12 spending, as a percent of gross national product, in 1985 the United States ranked 14th in a list of 16 nations—14th—spending just 4.1 percent of the gross national product. The lowest was Ireland with 3.8; and Australia, 3.9. The rest of the countries spent a higher percent of the gross national product on children's education from kindergarten through the 12th year.

Let us see how that reflects on the achievement in science. On the left of the chart is the rank in order for 10-year-olds, grades 4 through 5. This is a list of 15 nations. The United States is No. 8 in a listing of those 15 nations.

By the time they reach the age of 14 and are in grades 8 and 9, see how they have gone down. In a list of 17 nations, the United States is in a tie with two other nations for 13th place. Singapore, Thailand, and the United States are all tied for 13th place, with only Hong Kong and the Philippines at the bottom. And the other countries listed above the United States are: Italy, England, Australia, Norway, Poland, Korea, Sweden, Finland, Canada, The Netherlands, Japan, and Hungary—Germany does not show up on the chart because, it is my understanding, there were no figures for Germany; they were not available at that point.

Isn't this a drab, dreary picture of what we are doing to our kids? When it comes to spending Federal funding for the education of our kids in grades K through 12, look what it is ultimately doing to meet the country's need for scientists.

This is a chart that projects the supply and demand for science and engineering Ph.D's per year in the United States. The green indicates the number of science and engineering Ph.D.'s that are coming out of the reservoir of U.S. citizens and permanent residents annually.

Observers will note that the line is fairly level beginning in 1988 and going to the year 2006, fairly level, at about 10,000 to 12,000 Ph.D's per year that are being turned out in the United States from the reservoir of U.S. citizens and permanent residents. And the yellow coloring represents foreign students who come to the United States to get their science and engineering Ph.D.'s, but half of them return to their native countries. So, considering that there may be half who remain here, it means that we annually produce in this country something like from 11,000 to 13,000 or 14,000 Ph.D's from this reservoir of U.S. citizens and permanent residents and foreign students. The red coloring represents the projected demand for science and engineering Ph.D.'s showing that the year 2006 the demand in the United States will be for about 23,500 or 24,000 Ph.D's per year. And, of course as I have indicated, we will meet only a little better than half of that need by the year 2004.

Mr. President, I have taken the time of the Senate to address three deficits—the trade deficit, the Federal deficit, and the investment deficit.

Unless we do something to address the horrors that these charts portray, we are a Nation that is headed for a fall. The reconciliation bill before the Senate makes a start toward addressing these problems that I have been talking about.

And there are efforts in this Senate today, by way of amendments that are being offered, to tear the package apart.

I attended the summit. I never want to attend another. I do not expect to ever attend another one, even though I may live to be as old as Methuselah, and he lived to be 969 years old. I do not want to attend any more summits.

As the summit here is what we did. Everybody put on their green eyeshades and they looked at figures and formulas. I took the position there, and I take the position here, that while we not only have to deal with the Federal deficit, and the meeting of targets, and shaving a little here, shaving a little there, and shaving a little somewhere else, what we are really talking about actually is a 5-year plan for the Nation. So we ought to take off our green eyeshades and, in addition to discussing the figures, the targets, the outlay levels and all of those important things regarding Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, we also want to think about this country and where we are going for the next 5 years.

I tried to bring the summit away from the green eyeshades, away from a total concentration on figures and targets—important though they are—using pencils and erasers, and cutting a little here and a little there, meeting this Gramm-Rudman target, and meeting that Gramm-Rudman target, and all that, but also to stop and take a look at the forest and not just at the trees and to consider the fact that we are actually considering a 5-year plan for this country. Where are we headed in this country? And where are we going to be at the end of the 5-year period?

I happen to believe that this country still has the spirit to which de Tocqueville referred over 150 years ago when he came to this country when he said, "The incredible American," think of it! "The incredible American believes that if something has not yet been accomplished, it is because he has not yet attempted it." That was the spirit of the incredible American of that day.

Sampson took the jawbone bone of an ass and killed 1,000 Philistines. The early American took an ax, a Bible, a rifle, and a bag of seeds, and he hewed the forests, blazed the trails, and crossed the mountains to the prairies, from sea to shining sea, and he built a nation.

Moses struck the rock at Horeb with his rod, and the water gushed forth. The incredible American struck the rock of our natural resources and we have exceeded all other countries in the production of steel, coal, chemicals, and glass.

Elijah, when he came to the Jordan with his son, Elisha, tossed his mantle on the waters of the Jordan, and the waters parted, and the two crossed over Jordan on dry land. The incredible American built shining, massive, bridges that glimmer in the Sun, that span the Mississipi, the Missouri, the many great rivers of this country.

It took Moses 40 years to lead the Israelites out of Egypt and bring them to the land of Canaan. The incredible American invented the airplane in 1903. And when Lindberg took off in 1927 in the Spirit of St. Louis he crossed over New York City at the incredible speed of 100 miles an hour. And with that indomitable spirit, the American spirit, he braved the Atlantic alone, and set foot on the European shores, having crossed the mighty waters. The incredible American!

In high school, I read a book by Jules Verne, Around the World in 80 Days. JOHN GLENN and other American astronauts, as they have orbited the Earth, traveled at the speed of 18,000 miles an hour, around the world not in 80 days but in 80 minutes! Man had gazed upon the moon for centuries with longing eyes, wanting to see the other side. The incredible American put a man on that Moon and brought him back to Earth safely again.

This was the spirit that made our country great!

Jesus touched a dead Lazarus and he sprang from his bed.

Franklin D. Roosevelt led us in a time of Great Depression, when the country was prostrate—and I lived in that Depression; I know what it was. Men and women walking the country roads of this Nation, standing in soup lines in the urban communities, looking for a job. But the indomitable spirit of a crippled man and his vision brought the country back to its feet.

So he stretched forth his hand and the dead corpse of the Depression went away, and the country lived again and soared to greater heights.

What a proud heritage!

I think too many of us are unlike Lot's wife. She looked back. We fail to look back.

Cornelius Tacitus said, "when you go into battle, remember your ancestors and your descendents."

We fail to remember our ancestors. We fail to remember and to recall and to relive again the vision that was America, that made this country great; when men hewed the forests and built the bridges and the roads and traveled with their pioneer wagons and built a great nation. They believed they could do it, and they did it. And now, today, we face a challenge

Are we going to make it possible for America to again? Are we going to make it possible for our young people to study and to learn and to develop their talents and to become the best of whatever is in them?

America is in trouble.

Pericles, one of the greatest of Athenians, said to his countrymen, "Set your eyes upon the greatness of your country and remember that her greatness was won by men with courage, with a knowledge of their duty, and with a sense of honor in action."

In this time of trouble, America needs men, America needs politicians—statesmen who have courage and a knowledge of their duty.

Our country is in trouble, bad trouble. We have an S&L crisis. We have a deficit crisis. Some of our banks are on thin ice. Investors are nervous. The stock markets are shaky. We have a war threatening in the Middle East and a recession looming just over the horizon. It is time to stop posturing and pretending. It is time to stop all of the glib talk. It is time to do our duty.

We have almost 200,000 men in the Middle East. Those men and women are in the desert with 120 degree heat. They probably don't think it is such a great idea, being over there in that heat and in the sands of the desert. But they are not complaining. They are there to do their duty.

Now why can we not do our duty? Why can't Senators on both sides of the aisle do their duty? Why cannot House Members on both sides of the aisle do theirs? Why cannot the President? Why cannot all of us work together to do our duty?

Some of those servicemen, may I say to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. PRYOR], if a war breaks out over there, some of them will come home in flag-draped coffins. Some of them will never have seen their children who were born after they left these shores to do their duty in a land thousands of miles way.

And what about our children? In listening to all of the debate over the past several days, seldom have I heard a Senator or a House Member refer to our children. We talk about what is good for us politically or what would please the special interest groups. We are governed, we are owned, we are controlled; we are little men, controlled by special interest groups in this country. Let some of those special interests say "go," and we run. Let them say "jump," and we jump.

I tried eight times to close off a filibuster here when I was majority leader in the effort to enact campaign financing reform. The American people, if they really wanted a bargain, they would finance the campaigns of Members of the House and Senate. It would be a bargain for the American people. Because once again, the American people themselves would be heard and their elected representatives would no longer be cowards. That is what we have seen right at work here in the legislative branch of both Houses, political cowardice—speaking to the galleries, posturing to the cameras. Everybody has his own plan. I have a plan. He has a plan. She has a plan. And every one of us knows that my plan will not get 25 votes. His plan will not get 30 votes. Her plan will not get 50 votes. But we all have plans. And we all realize down deep in our hearts that if we get a plan through these two Houses, that will be signed by the President of the United States, that plan is going to have to have votes from both sides of the aisle.

It is tough. It is difficult. But that is what we signed on for. The American people think we are wimps. And they are right.

We knee-jerk to the drumbeats of the pressure groups, the special interest groups. Each of us tries to please this special interest group or that special interest group.

That is not to say that some of the special interest groups do not represent the views of a great many people in this country; it is true. But until the American people wise up and become awake to the fact, the bald fact, that the special interest groups are calling the tune and the American people are paying the fiddlers—you have to pay the fiddler when you call the tune—the American people are going to continue to get the shaft.

(Mr. GORE assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. So our boys are in the sands of the deserts—Desert Shield. I refer to what we have before us as deficit shield. Desert Shield; deficit shield.

Are we going to respond to the needs of our children? In all of this talk, as I started to say a moment ago, I do not hear anyone talking about their grandchildren. Everybody is thinking about how he is going to be affected out there in the campaign. We listen to the drumbeats of the special interest groups. What about the voices of the voiceless—our grandchildren, our children, our great-grandchildren? Are they represented here? They are voiceless.

We are passing on this tremendous debt and these deficits to the children and grandchildren who are not even knocking yet, knocking at the gates. They are being unheard of and unthought of.

We should remember them, think of them, and perhaps we will all stand a little straighter and a little taller and be a little more courageous. And we will pay less attention to the special interest groups if we listen and try to hear the faint whisper of the yet unborn or those who are our children or grandchildren today. They cannot speak here.

We are told in the Scriptures that who among you, if your son asks for bread, would give him a stone; or if he should ask for a fish, would give him a serpent; or if he should ask for an egg, would give him a scorpion?

These voices cry out and they are not being heard. I say let us think of our posterity. Let us think of our children. And let us put out of our minds and our mind's eye the special interest groups. Just for once. Perhaps the American people, then, would have a renewed faith in politicians. They would appreciate a little bit of candor, a little bit of courage on the part of their elected representatives.

Senior citizens of this country are patriots. They have worked in the fields, in the mines, in the harbors; they fought for their country. They are patriots. Others who are being asked to make a contribution in this reconciliation bill to this national problem are patriots. I believe if they were fully made aware of the trouble this country is in, the predicament in which this country finds itself, I believe they would be willing to be taxed a little more for the sake of their country.

The President had the courage to come out and say that he would support a tax increase. We have all made our glib statements and our political speeches about taxes—nobody wants to vote for taxes. I do not want to vote for taxes.

But as I said to Mr. Reagan in 1981, you cannot have a 3-year 10-percent-per-year tax cut, increase defense astronomically, and balance the budget all at the same time. Now, we cannot deal with this deficit, and it is getting worse and worse and worse, with the interest payment this year at $189 billion. That does not buy a single textbook; not one. That is the interest on the national debt. And it is going higher all the time.

Ten years ago it was $69 billion. Today it is $189 billion; $189 for every minute since Jesus Christ was born. That is the interest on the national debt.

I believe that if the American people were told the truth so that they understood the deficits and the national debt, the terrible things that are afflicting our country, they would be willing to give their share to deal with the problem. And we owe it to them to tell them the truth.

To my colleagues I say—to the distinguished Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS]—a fine Senator, a Senator who has courage and backbone. I have seen him stand up in this Senate many times when he did not have many Senators standing with him. But he took a stand. The American people should be told the truth.

Esther, in the Old Testament—I will not tell the whole story; anyone can go to the Scriptures, and find in the Book of Esther where Mordecai, her cousin, said to Esther, "who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" I say to Senators, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the"—Senate—"for such a time as this?"

This is a time when the country needs men. I will not take the time to recite the poem by J.G. Holland: "God give us men * * *"

Lycurgus the Lawgiver said it best when he said, "That city is well fortified which has a wall of men instead of brick."

I can understand why the American people are put out with the Congress. So many of us foul our nests; we badmouth the Congress; we run against the institution.

As one who reveres the history of this institution, I have seen men and women rise to the need of the moment in this Senate, during my time here. And I believe they can and will again.

Let us not be fooled by the glittering gewgaws of some of the amendments that are called up. Let us stand with the leadership in opposing the waiver of points of order and let us stand with the leadership in opposing amendments to the reconciliation bill, because that is the only way that we will resolve this problem. We are not going to wipe out the national debt or the deficit with this package alone. This is a start. It is a start in paying the bill and the tip for the feast on which the Nation has gorged itself during the past 10 years.

Benjamin Hill was a great Senator from the State of Georgia, and I am told that on his statue in Atlanta are these words:

> Who saves his country saves himself, saves all things, and all things saved do bless him. Who lets his country die lets all things die, dies himself ignobly, and all things dying curse him.

Let us not crucify the Nation on a cross of political expediency and political cowardice. Let us work to save our country!

I urge my colleagues to stand with the leadership in opposing waivers to points of order and in opposing amendments. Support the reconciliation and the leadership, because only in that way will we be able to make a start on the problem that confronts us, and only then will we merit the conference and the faith of the people who send us here. As Webster said at the laying of the cornerstone of the Bunker Hill Monument in 1825, "Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country."

Mr. PRYOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield such time as the Senator from Arkansas may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I will only take 2 minutes of the Senate's time.

Mr. President, I would just like to rise in tribute to the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia for giving a speech this evening on the floor of the U.S. Senate that is long overdue. I would like to compliment the Senator from West Virginia for the dedication that he has shown, not only in trying to resolve this particular budget crisis that we are in, but also in helping to educate and to illuminate the American public and even Senators, as colleagues of the distinguished President pro tempore, on some of these monumental problems and some of these critical choices that we have.

Mr. President, no other Member of this Senate could have brought that message more clearly, more forcefully, and with a greater commitment than the Senator from West Virginia. I am proud that I have had an opportunity, not only to serve with him, but I wish only that I could have stayed here during the entirety of his message. I hope many, many Americans watched that message because, today I think the impression that the American public is getting is exactly the opposite impression of what the Senator from West Virginia wants this Senate, and this House, and this institution, to become in the future.

Mr. President, I commend Senator BYRD for his speech, and I would like to say it is a privilege and a high opportunity to serve in this body with him.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased I was here to hear at least a portion of the statement of the distinguished President pro tempore, and to once again witness his tremendous memory and intellect applied to the problems of our Nation.

I am delighted to hear this reference repeatedly to the unborn children and even to some who are born in terms of our children and grandchildren, and the burdens they will bear if we do not support this work of the leadership.

I am one who sought to be part of that leadership and was not, but I have watched with great interest the work of the leaders in these past few months. I know the time that they have committed to this package that is before us. I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia, that I agree with his injunction to the Senate to support this package, to take it to conference, and to see what we can work out. It does seem to me that it is a request that we should heed.

With the long service that the Senator from West Virginia has given to the Senate and to the country, I think it was very timely for him to bring that message to us tonight. I thank him for it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I want to join this evening in expressing my appreciation to the distinguished President pro tempore for the address that he has delivered to the Senate. The distinguished Senator from West Virginia is an historian of note, and perhaps is the most distinguished historian of the U.S. Senate in its history to simultaneously serve in this body. He has done, I think, the Senate and the country a service with his message this evening.

I want to add my voice to that of our distinguished President pro tempore in saying that I think it is a shame when Members of this body or Members of the other body, for that matter, rise to castigate the institution in which they serve. Frankly, I am proud to be a U.S. Senator. It is a culmination of a life's ambition for me, as it is for many of those who serve here.

This institution is a House of the people. It is a reflection of the American people. It reflects the strengths of the American people. It reflects, I think, the courage and the tenacity of the American people, and expresses the compassion of the American people. And conversely, on occasion, it may also reflect, to some degree, the flaws, the weaknesses, that we may have as a Nation or as a people.

But the distinguished President pro tempore, I think, does us all a great service. With his message here this evening, and as we reflect on his distinguished career in this body, I think he makes all of us proud to have served, not only in this Chamber, but to have served with him. He is, indeed, correct that this budget reconciliation that we are considering here this evening, may very well serve as the beginning building block in providing the resources to, once again, move ahead with the work that needs to be done on the domestic front in this country, both with our capital resources, and with our human resources.

But simultaneously with that, this budget reconciliation provision that we are considering here this evening, will not only be building domestically, but will also be conserving on the fiscal side in reducing our deficit by as much as $500 billion over 5 years.

I thank the distinguished President pro tempore for his message here this evening and calling these matters to the attention of our colleagues.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Did the distinguished chairman desire to speak?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I simply wanted to thank my colleague for his very generous remarks. I apologize for speaking at considerable length.

While I am on my feet again, however, I want to pay tribute to the leaders who worked to put this package together. I saw Mr. DOLE at the summit almost every day. I saw the Speaker there. I saw Mr. PANETTA, the chairman of the House Budget Committee; Mr. SASSER, the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee; GEORGE MITCHELL, the Senate Democratic leader; and LLOYD BENTSEN, the chairman of the Finance Committee; Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, head of the House Ways and Means Committee; and those on the Republican side of those committees: Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. PACKWOOD, and others.

They worked long and hard and diligently, and I think they are all to be given great credit. We all received a good bit of castigation and criticism, but that is not the first time, I am sure, that we have had that experience in our lives. But this is a package that has now been placed before the Senate. I think it is one that should have the support of Senators. It is a bipartisan product.

I just want to pay my tribute to the two leaders and to the chairmen of the committees to which I have referred for the labors, the toils, and I would say almost, the tears they they have shed in attempting to do the work for all of us. It has not been easy. They are entitled to a tribute. They are entitled to the thanks of their colleagues, and they are entitled to my thanks.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want my friend from West Virginia, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, former majority leader, to know that I sought recognition and yielded to him, and that I was going to also pay my respects and compliment the distinguished Senator for his presentation tonight. I watched a great deal of it, if the Senator is wondering; there are other ways to do that other than sitting here, and I am fully aware of the Senator's premise and the point the Senator was making.

I just want to say to the Senator that there has been a lot of comment about how bad this summit was. Frankly, if we get a $500 billion deficit reduction package, maybe, at least from this Senator's standpoint, it is probably worth all the grief we have taken, because I cannot conceive, in spite of others saying there was a better way, of the House and the Senate and the President of the United States getting that done any other way. I just do not believe, had we not set those targets and taken all that time to get educated and learn—and believe you me, there was a lot of learning to take place. Appropriators had to learn about entitlements, and everybody had to learn about budgeting and a little bit about defense and a lot about the process. So we had to reform all those and fix a lot of them. So that set the stage. So if it works, for myself, I will say it was worth it.

But I also want to say there were some other things that made it worthwhile. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee is one of those. He devoted a great deal of time, and, frankly, the personal relationships in getting to understand and to know each other was a very big plus, perhaps not for some but for this Senator.

I have now found that if there is one thing that really is important, it is integrity. I can say that when the Senator from West Virginia spends enough time figuring out what he wants to do and when he agrees, frankly in the future the Senator from New Mexico does not need anything in writing. We sure need things in writing in order to pass laws, but I am firmly convinced when the chairman sat in the room and said, "I will do that," I have watched the last 15 days since we finished and we did not have to go back and worry about whether that particular Senator would do it. He did it.

As we put together the package for reform of these processes, because everybody says this will not work unless there is reform in these processes, we had a lot of disagreements, but there stood the Senator who had made an agreement, and unless we had not agreed, let me tell you the Senator from West Virginia did not have to go to meetings. We just knew that if we called up and asked, did he agree, and if he said, yes, he agreed, you could count on him. That is how I see it.

I want to close by saying I think it is good that the Senator finished the presentation with that particular graph of the United States of America. I want to share my own thoughts with the good Senator from West Virginia. Frankly, I have a new economic theory. I am not sure that I understand what is going to happen to this country from the spiritual standpoint. I do not know what might happen to our families, to our attitudes, to our sensitivity, more or less, our Judeo-Christian historic values. Obviously, if those continue to fall apart, I think we are gone.

But let me talk about the economy and my own new value, new concept because it comes from that chart.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield to allow me to thank him?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator for his kind references to me. I recall that when Senator Thomas Hart Benton, of Missouri, had an altercation with Senator Foote, of Mississippi, Senator Foote drew a gun on Senator Benton. This happened in the Old Chamber, I believe, down the way. Afterward, Senator Foote, who was a diminutive man in stature—Benton was a huge man—rose to say to Benton that he was going to write a little book and that Benton would have a big part in it, Benton answered, that he was going to write a very big book and Foote would have no part whatever.

I want to say to the distinguished Senator, my second volume will appear in the spring. I have about finished; the selection of pictures is going on, and galley proofs are being edited, and all those things. I have a little bit to do in it yet. But there is a part that I have already written, "the moving finger writes and having writ * * *"

I refer to some of the very bright Senators in this Chamber. I will not go into all of that now. But while I cannot in a book indicate the entire list of Senators who, with respect to my own impressions, loom large or loom small, I at least have mentioned a few names. I have mentioned the Senator from New Mexico, PETE DOMENICI, as one of the bright, effective Senators who sits on the Republican side of the aisle. I have mentioned some others, too. And there are some on this side whom I have mentioned.

But while I am saying what I think about the Senator from New Mexico tonight, I want to pay some credit to the President as well. The President made what I thought was an unwise campaign promise, but he had the courage when he saw the full picture, saw the real world as it is, he had the courage—and it takes a lot of courage—to say, "I was wrong. I changed my mind." He had the courage to say he would reverse his stand on taxes. Now, we ought to have the courage in this body, we ought to have the courage to take a stand that is difficult also. The leaders on both sides of the Capitol, as I have indicated already, have shown great stamina and dedication.

Credit should be given to all to whom credit is due. I thank the distinguished Senator, and apologize for interrupting him, but I thought he was then at a point in his remarks where he was going to turn away from the stage on which we were playing our little parts earlier.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. SYMMS. The inquiry is to the two managers of the bill. What is the intent of the managers of the bill? This Senator has waited all day long for a vote on my amendment. Are we going to get to a vote on the Symms amendment? Is that the plan of the leadership here tonight?

Mr. DOMENICI. Before I try to answer—of course I would like the chairman to answer. The majority is in control. Might I ask the Parliamentarian? How much time remains on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 8 hours and 44 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Equally divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The time remaining to the majority side is 3 hours, 3 minutes. The time remaining to the Republican side is approximately 5 hours, 15 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. From my standpoint, I might say to my good friend, Senator SYMMS, I have about 4 more minutes of my comments, and I will inquire of the distinguished Republican leader if he is ready to proceed. If he is, and if the majority is, we will proceed. We will vote on the Conrad amendment one way or another, and then that will be followed by whatever occurs next.

I am not sure whether the time has all been yielded on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from North Dakota he has 3 minutes 10 seconds remaining under his control on his amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. Might I make a further inquiry to the two leaders, the managers of the bill? In the event that the Conrad amendment would fall because of a point of order that I understood might be raised against it, it is my understanding that it is out of order. Then would it be the intention to go ahead and vote on the Symms amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. I clearly cannot tell the Senator what the leadership position is. I am sure they do not intend to unduly delay. The Senator asked a very precise question. I do not have an answer to a precise question.

Mr. SYMMS. If the Conrad amendment is voted on, and passes, then what is the situation with respect to the Symms amendment? Is it completely modified?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have to ask the Chair that. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question would then recur on the Symms amendment, as it is an amendment to strike language which would be modified by the Conrad amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. In other words, we would not get a clear up or down vote on the Symms amendment if the Conrad amendment passes? Would that be a correct interpretation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question would occur on the Symms amendment to strike the language, which language would have been modified by the Conrad amendment, should the Senate decide to adopt the Conrad amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. What language would then be left in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise that if the Conrad amendment passed, then the Symms amendment would strike the language of the bill as modified by the language contained in the Conrad amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I say to my friend, we were not trying to delay this much longer. As soon as I can speak to the Republican leader—I do not know what the disposition of the Symms amendment will be, but as soon as the Senator is through with his time, I will seek the Republican leader, and we can proceed as rapidly as possible.

Do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator retains the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 4 minutes.

Let me finish by saying to the Senator from West Virginia that I know he spoke of many aspects of American economic prosperity or lack thereof, and he closed with the notion of science in America, and what is happening to Ph.D. scientists, American style, American born, American citizens.

I was just going to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that a very, very famous industrialist appearing before a committee about 2½ years ago said, when asked about the future of the United States—it used to be that the future of this country was tied to its basic resources. He said, "I regret to tell you that such is no longer the case." The future of this country is tied to knowledge, and we will rise and grow and prosper only as we understand and pursue the fact that knowledge, in particular science, physics, engineering and mathematics, are chosen by the best and the brightest for their future.

I believe with the passage of each month I look back at it, and say he is right, right, right. Then I look at what is happening to America, and I regret to say that there are two trends going in the opposite direction. One is the constant growth of lawyers. More and more of the brightest and the best becoming lawyers; 40,800, Mr. Chairman, last year, 50 percent more than 10 years before, and growing almost exponentially.

The first theory of economics is that we will rise and grow and prosper in reverse order to the growth of lawyers. That is the first premise. I will not take credit for it. I will say that belongs to a very distinguished chief executive, Martin Marietta's chief executive, Mr. Augustine, who wrote a book, and one chapter is that. That is the theory.

The second one is the reverse. We will grow and prosper, absent falling apart from drugs and other things, in proportion to math, science, engineering, and that will be in direct proportion instead of reverse.

I regret to tell you that while the lawyer numbers are as I indicated, there were only 1,500 Ph.D.'s in physics and math produced last year in the United States that are American citizens, and American born. We have to do something about it. It is not easy. It is not all budgeting. But clearly we have to do our share.

I believe the country understands that those are the kinds of things we must do together. I also want to close.

I forgot to mention when I thanked the distinguished chairman for his 3, 4, 5 months of extraordinary effort and the Andrews effort. I forgot to tell him that I really have great respect for someone who is a partisan, a Democrat or a Republican, but when it comes to serious matters that affect the country, finds it relatively easy to be neither, and to be just a good American. I thank him for that because it has been very helpful to all of us.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the very distinguished Senator.

Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I, too, rise and commend the President pro tempore on his presentation, because the President pro tempore in his presentation, I believe, has captured the fundamentals that threaten the security of this country.

As I have said many times on the floor, I deeply believe that the greatest threat to our security, our national security, is our economic vulnerability. I have never seen a presentation—you can tell by the presentation of the President pro tempore—that so clearly identifies the problems that we have with the basis of a strong economy.

So I want to thank the President pro tempore for the time that he has taken to outline the things that leave us vulnerable, and the things that need to be done to make us strong.

Let me just conclude, Mr. President, with the presentation of my amendment.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield, I thank the distinguished Senator for his comments. I appreciate them very much.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I thank the President pro tempore for the effort that he has put forward in this process.

Let me say that it is from that same set of feelings about what needs to be done to strengthen this country that I, along with others, presented the amendment that we will vote on very soon.

Clearly, the Senate package is superior to the summit package. As I started this debate some 5 hours ago, I indicated that the problem with the summit package, from my analysis, was that it hit too hard at the middle income in this country. It hit too hard at the elderly sick. It hit too hard at the farmers in this country. It hit too hard at the rural areas.

We have designed a package to present to our colleagues to try to improve the package, to try to have one more fair to the middle class and to the other groups we have identified. We have done that by taking the top rate to 33 percent, which affects those who earn over $185,000 a year, increasing the alternative minimum tax for those who seek to avoid a tax liability, and a 10 percent surcharge on those who have incomes of over $1 million a year. Then we have moved to reduce the gas tax, reduce the hit on the elderly sick, reduce the cut in agriculture, and reduce the impact on the rural areas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

All time on the Conrad amendment has expired.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield such time to the majority leader as he might require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this is an ironic moment for me. Four-and-a-half years ago when the Senate was considering the Tax Reform Act of 1986, I stood on this Senate floor for an entire day and offered an amendment to provide for a three-rate tax schedule. The maximum marginal tax rate had been 70 percent until 1981, when it was reduced to 50 percent. And in 1986 we debated on how much further to reduce it.

President Reagan proposed and advocated a three-rate structure with a maximum rate of 35 percent. I agreed with President Reagan, and when the committee went to a two-rate structure of 15 and 28 percent, I attempted to persuade the Senate that we should have a three-rate structure at 14, the lowest bracket, then 28 and 35 percent.

I presented on the Senate floor a number of charts which are similar to those which the Senator from North Dakota has presented here tonight. And following the defeat of my amendment and the passage of the Tax Reform Act with a two-rate structure, I requested a series of studies by the Congressional Budget Office which produced the data which are on the charts the Senator from North Dakota has and are based on a series of subsequent studies building on that information. I still believe there should be a three-rate structure, 15, 28, and 33 percent, for many of the reasons suggested by the Senator from North Dakota and others, and for still further reasons not mentioned here this evening.

I believe that would be the most simple, logical, straightforward, and most important, fair method of dealing with the problem of fairness in the tax structure and raising the necessary revenue to address the problem we are here seeking to address.

But the reality is, Mr. President, that President Bush has stated clearly and unequivocally his intention to veto any legislation which includes a 33-percent tax rate on higher-income taxpayers. My proposal has consistently been that the third rate of 33 percent should apply to those taxpayers at the upper end of the bubble. Notwithstanding what I believe to be the logic and fairness of that argument, the President has been consistent and emphatic in his statements that he will veto any such legislation.

Therefore, we are now faced, again, with a problem which we confront regularly here in the Senate. It is whether we wish to make a statement or make a law. Adoption of this amendment will make a very strong statement. It will result in no law. Rejection of the amendment will permit us to go forward to make a law which, while not completely consistent with what the Senator from North Dakota has proposed, will still produce a fair and progressive tax package that deals with the deficit problem.

How can that be accomplished? Well, of course, as we all know, raising the top rate is not the only mechanism by which taxes can be increased on those at the very top of the income scale. There are a variety of other means by which to accomplish that objective.

The tax package that is included in this reconciliation bill, the basic bill now before us, does that in three ways. The first is a relatively modest and imprecise method of accomplishing the objective, and that is an excise tax on the purchase of certain luxury items. The second and third, however, are substantial and very precise mechanisms for accomplishing that purpose.

They are, first, an increase in the wage cap for the health insurance portion of the FICA or better known as the Social Security tax. Under current law, income in excess of $52,300 is not subject to that tax. This bill increases that amount to $89,000. By definition, that applies only to those persons whose incomes exceed $52,300 a year. It does not and, of course, cannot apply to those whose incomes are below that level because they are already paying a tax on the full amount of their earned income.

The third and largest, most substantial, and most precise mechanism for raising taxes from those at the very top of the income scale is the limitation on deductions now set at 5 percent in this legislation which, again, by definition applies only to taxpayers whose adjusted gross income exceed $100,000 a year. So any taxpayer whose adjusted gross income is less than $100,000 a year is unaffected by this provision.

The combination of those three provisions raises in excess of $50 billion or nearly half of the total amount of taxes, the net of $130 billion being the target under this legislation, and it raises it for higher income groups, primarily from those whose incomes exceed $100,000 a year.

So, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator and to my colleagues and especially to those who will be disposed to support this amendment, if this amendment prevails and we get no bill, we will not only fail to address the problem of the deficit, which is, after all, our principal target here, our main objective which we ought always to keep in mind, but second, we will leave in place a tax structure that is less progressive than it would be if this bill were adopted, not as progressive as if the Senator's amendment were adopted, but we know that is not going to become law because the President has said repeatedly and unequivocally that he will veto it.

I do not happen to agree with the President on that. I think he is wrong. There is no Member of this Senate who has spoken more often and consistently for a need for a third rate to apply to those with very high incomes than myself. But in the circumstances in which we now find ourselves, if we adopt this amendment, we assure no deficit reduction package and the resulting chaos which will flow from that decision and we assure that the tax system now in place remains in effect with neither the 33-percent rate nor the other provisions which raise taxes on the very wealthy that are included in the bill.

So the reality is if one believes that the tax structure should be made more progressive, as I believe many of our colleagues do, understand then that adoption of this amendment retains the current tax structure which is less progressive than it would be if we adopted the committee bill.

I wish it were otherwise. I wish we could get not just the votes to pass the 33-percent rate, but the 67 votes necessary to override the veto. The reality is that we cannot. So, as is so often in the case in life generally and certainly in the political process, we must play with the cards that are dealt to us. We must deal with the situation as it exists and the situation as it exists is as I have described it.

So while I commend my colleague for the presentation he has made—and I emphasize my agreement with the importance of piercing the bubble and having a third rate and have a more progressive tax structure—I must say and repeat to all of my colleagues that adoption of this amendment will prevent the adoption of a more progressive tax structure which would result from the committee bill now before us and from the results of the conference.

And, remember, we are going to conference with the House bill that is much more progressive than either this bill or the current tax structure.

So with the greatest of reluctance, and with respect for my colleague, I must ask and encourage all Members of the Senate to join in refusing to waive the Budget Act for this amendment so that we can proceed to get the job done, so that we can get a bill passed and get in a conference and get a conference report and have written into law the most meaningful deficit reduction legislation in our Nation's history. That is what we started out to do. That is what we should finish doing, and I hope we can do it before the Friday midnight deadline.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DASCHLE). The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to just briefly underscore what the majority leader has said.

I guess, as we look back over the past 2 or 3 months, many of us have been involved—maybe we cannot see the forest for the trees—but we have been involved in this process at different stages for several months and knowing at each step of the way that somebody probably had a different plan or a better plan but that our responsibility was primarily deficit reduction.

We were not going to write a new tax bill or see how many new taxes we could think of, or go after the "rich," whoever they are, but to try to find a $500 billion deficit reduction package that would have a majority of my colleagues on that side and a majority of my colleagues on this side and that would pass the House and be signed by the President.

I think many of my colleagues in the Senate probably chuckled when the House stumbled here 10 days ago and said that never happened over here. I hope it does not. But this is our first test. We thought we had the votes for the budget summit, we did not have the votes. I am with you particularly since you did not vote; I know I am with you.

Then we had the budget resolution that did not mean anything—it meant quite a bit, but not everything. We did not specify, so I will vote for this.

See now we are getting down to the nitty-gritty. It is payoff time. We have to tell the American people we are going to provide leadership and in some cases whether they like it or not because we are concerned about the future of America, and their children and their grandchildren, and their farms and their businesses, whether it is rural America, or whatever.

I do not have any particular quarrel with Senator CONRAD except I do not like his package. He has more new taxes that we have not even considered going to eliminate the bubble. I have been out here telling how the bubble really works, that it is progressive and it was praised by Democrats and Republicans alike in 1986 as being a way to have progressivity in the Tax Code and still make certain the upper incomes paid a higher rate and nobody paid more than 28 percent average rate, and a number of my colleagues in the Senate wanted a 15-percent flat tax. There is about a rate of 28 percent; you get a 15 and then 28.

I recall my colleagues from, I think, Arizona, Senator DECONCINI, and others who advocated a 15-percent flat tax, no deductions, no exemptions.

If you understand the bubble, once you come out of the bubble, you have lost your exemptions and you have lost the benefit of the 15-percent rate. Most people in the bubble paid maybe 20 or 25 percent and when you are outside the bubble you are paying 28 percent. That is the upper income, and that is how it works.

So the tax bubble being eliminated in my view does not make the Tax Code more progressive. It does not tax the rich.

While it is hard to understand, I think if the American people understood it—and more and more people are understanding it. In fact, I will repeat that I heard from a lady named Mary Harding in Charlotte, NC, who said she was neither Republican nor Democrat; she was not registered to vote. She said a pox on both our Houses. She had been convinced by the media and the Democrats that the Republicans were the party of the rich and she convinced herself that the Democrats were the giveaway party. She was unemployed.

But she listened to me explain the bubble. I had some good notes and a good staff.

She said, "I didn't know whether to believe it or not so I checked it out. So I got out my computer." She said, "I am unemployed. I have lots of time. I computed those with incomes of $3,500 all the way to $1 million." She said, "You know what? You are right."

So I said to myself, I finally convinced somebody that the bubble should not be burst and it turns out she is not registered to vote, and she lives in the wrong State. [Laughter.]

But there may be other Mary Hardings out there. If the media would tell the story, as the New York Times did it in last Saturday's edition about the bubble, instead of somehow fuzzing it up and saying this is something that helps the rich or taxes one income group at a higher rate than the rich, which is not true, then we would not have this debate.

Minimum tax increase; well, I guess that is all right if we want to make certain everybody gets to pay some taxes. And we try to put a lot of preferences in that group to make certain that happens. Who could pass up one like a surtax for millionaries? That is almost too good to be true. Who could be against that? Well, probably quite a few in this Chamber, come to think of it. [Laughter.]

But not me.

But they will rise above principle and vote to tax millionaires anyway. That is the courage we have in this body. That is about the easiest target. Big oil and millionaires are about the easiest targets in the country. So we ought to give them a little shot.

I could repeat—I will not do it now but I hope to before the debate—the statements by the former Speaker, Speaker O'Neil and my good friend Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and others in the House who are now in very prominent leadership positions, saying the 1986 Tax Code was the best thing that ever happened. We went after the rich. And the word fairness was used a dozen times by these speakers saying finally the Tax Code is fair. Well, that lasted 4 years. And we have not changed a thing.

Suddenly now it is unfair. Somehow the rich, who were being properly treated in 1986 are not being properly treated today.

Then we want to scale back. This is called the all-American plan. Everybody gets something. And we do not get anything. We do not get a package.

So I want to join the majority leader in suggesting that I think this is a testing time. This is a time we sort of have to belly up to the bar and say, well I think I better either stop making those deficit reduction speeches back home, maybe stop saying, well I want to cut the deficit but I do not want to do it this way, I want it my way. I do not have any votes, but I got mine. And if I could write a package, believe me, I would reduce your deficit in X State or Y State or Z State. But, unfortunately, it does not work that way. We have to have a majority.

I have to believe the American people are probably, as they usually are, about 6 months to a year ahead of Congress. In any event, they wonder what we are still doing here. We are working on this deficit reduction package. They cannot understand why we do not make the decisions. They are going to be painful.

Maybe this would be a recipe for a painless deficit reduction.

But in my view, despite the ridicule heaped upon the summiteers, they were Republicans, Democrats, and House Members and Senators who spent a lot of time, members of their staffs. Maybe we did not do it right. But we did come up with a $500 billion package over 5 years, which is historic as far as this country is concerned.

So now we have an opportunity to keep it going. I think there are 30-some amendments pending and they ought to all be defeated. We ought to go to conference with the House and we ought to sit down with the conferees and try to come back to the Senate with a conference report that we can pass and the President of the United States will sign.

One way to end the evening, get home early, is to adopt this amendment, because that would certainly be the end of the package. It would be all over. There would not be any need to do anything else. And I think that is going to be the case with a number of these amendments. We have to make a judgment that we have to decide. We cannot postpone it.

Let me just say one word about agriculture, because I share the views expressed by my friend from North Dakota and Presiding Officer and my friend from Iowa and others who represent farmers.

Farmers took a pretty good cut. Most of it is real. And it is very attractive to say, "well, I would like to change that, too."

As I have indicated to some of my friends, maybe there is still a way we can ease it somewhere in the conference.

I see the chairman walking on the floor.

It was not easy. In fact, it lasted until 4 o'clock in the morning, I understand.

But I do want to remind my colleagues that farmers are also concerned about inflation and interest. We can tinker around with what we call target prices or loan rates, but if the interest rates are going up and inflation is going up the farmer is not going to make it in any event.

A 1-percent-farm-inflation increase is going to cost the average grain/livestock farmer about $3,100 over 5 years and a 1-percent-interest increase is going to cost about $1,500 over 5 years for a total of about $4,650. You could change the target price considerably and the farmer would still be much worse off.

On the average, wheat farm inflation increased 1 percent, about $1,850; over 5 years, a 1-percent-interest increase would cost about $900; that cost to the average wheat farmer is $2,750. If you increase the target price 1.4 percent, that cost is $500.

So my point is that interest and inflation are the real enemies to the American farmer. It is not the amount of the subsidy. But I do believe that, and I hope we can find some way in the reconciliation process because the Agriculture Committee has completed its work. The conference has been completed.

There is still one provision that I think needs attention and that is where we already have the crop in the ground and where we cannot maybe absorb the so-called triple base in the first year if you happen to be raising wheat.

But in any event, the bottom line is, as much as I respect the Senator from North Dakota, and I do, I am constrained at this point, pursuant to section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act, to raise a point of order that the pending Conrad amendment is not germane.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904(b) of the Budget Act, I move to waive the relevant provisions of the Budget Act.

I make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONRAD. The inquiry that I would direct to the Chair is, as I understand it, the motion to waive the Budget Act is debatable, and I would have 1 hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CONRAD. Would it be appropriate at this time then that I start on that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform all Senators that the time will be equally divided between the Senator from North Dakota and the majority manager.

Who yields time?

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I would consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. CONRAD. I would notify the leadership that I certainly do not intend to consume the time available. But there have been arguments advanced here that I think require a response and I will do my best to make it a brief one.

First of all, I want to indicate to the majority leader and to the Republican leader the great respect that I have for them both. I think they have been very strong through a difficult time. Both of them have had to compromise on matters that they would rather not.

I especially recognize the difficult position of the majority leader. I certainly recognize that he has been a foremost advocate of making the tax structure more progressive.

I would acknowledge that the Republican leader is partially right in his argument on the bubble. But he is dead wrong when he suggests that my package is not more progressive, because it certainly is.

It clearly is. Going to a 33-percent marginal rate for couples earning over $185,000 from the current marginal rate of 28 percent is more progressive. The alternative minimum tax increase is more progressive. A 10-percent surtax on those with incomes of over $1 million a year is more progressive. Reducing the gas tax is more progressive. Reducing the cut for the elderly sick is more progressive. Reducing the farm cuts for our Nation's farmers, who have taken by far the biggest share of the cuts in this package, is more progressive.

Those are the issues that are before my colleagues when they vote on this measure tonight.

Finally, I would simply argue to those who say we cannot change this package in any way or the President will say, "No, no; veto"—I am not ready to give up. I am not ready to say let us not even try; let us not even try to send the President a package that is more fair for the middle class, more fair for the elderly sick, more fair for the farmers of this country, more fair for the rural areas.

It seems to me we ought to give the country that opportunity. And we have a chance tonight to pass a package that would meet those goals.

I urge my colleagues to understand that this point of order is simply a technical point of order that says my amendment is not germane because it introduces a new subject. Well, the new subject is a tax structure that is more fair for the middle class—more fair for the middle class. And because of the technical rules of the Chamber, that will allow the other side to bring a point of order.

There is no question that my package deals strictly with the package of deficit reduction that is before this Chamber. That is exactly what my package addresses.

Finally, I urge my colleagues to vote to waive this Budget Act, to send a signal to the conference that we want them to come back with a package that is more fair.

I yield the floor. I am ready to vote.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I must rise in opposition to this amendment. There is a lot in this amendment that I support. I believe that if taxes must be raised to help balance the budget, they should be raised on those who can best afford to pay. That is why I support busting the bubble in our tax structure.

As someone who represents a large population of senior citizens—they make up 35 percent of the voters in Nevada—I also support reducing the increased health costs imposed on our senior citizens by this budget package.

I would also like to see the proposed gasoline tax increases reduced.

However, I cannot in good conscience support a tax increase to provide greater subsidies for agriculture.

Is it good, responsible, public policy to dole out Federal dollars to as many farmers as possible? If the original intent of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was to keep as many Americans as possible on the farm, our programs have failed miserably: Since 1933 the U.S. farm population has fallen from 30 million to less than 5 million.

I am ashamed to say that what was once intended to assist Americans in rising out of the depths of the Great Depression has departed from that vision and become a policy ridden with disincentives to efficient production—the nightmare of any free-market nation.

According to the USDA, there were 2.2 million farms in the United States in 1988. Yet the USDA classifies a farmer as anyone who sells over $1,000 a year in farm commodities. This means that if my neighbor sells his horse for more than $1,000, USDA classifies him as a farmer. Needless to say, USDA farm statistics are grossly skewed by this inclusion of $1,000 a year "farmers" who are obviously not earning a living in this endeavor. In spite of the inclusion of these gentlemen farmers, the 1988 average net farm income of all U.S. farmers was a healthy $45,644 a year.

In 1986, 55 percent of the USDA's so-called farmers' income came from off the farm. This could come from occupations such as teaching and consulting, or even investment income. Farmers are relying less and less on actual farm income. Because of the USDA's generous definition of farmer, it often appears that the American farmer is truly in a crisis position. Perhaps he is, but who could be sure with such deceptive accounting by the USDA?

By refusing to make a responsible classification of just who is and is not a farmer, the USDA guarantees the overspending of billions of our tax dollars.

Since the New Deal era, it has been proclaimed that farmers have a right to their cost of production. This says that if a farmer grows a certain program crop, the taxpayer is obliged to pay for it, and provide him a profit, too. If farmers have a right to the cost of their production, then why are we not subsidizing all fruits, vegetables, and livestock? If economic arguments for subsidizing the commodities which we do made sense, then no one would produce commodities not protected by Government programs.

In any other business, an owner must either lower his costs of production, or try another business if he cannnot make ends meet. Our taxes are increased when farmers of certain commodities can't stay afloat.

How can it be logical to subsidize certain foods we eat and not others? Who has the right to decide for us what we will and will not eat and what price we will pay for it? Why have we not pegged the price of a dozen eggs, or a pound of hamburger or chicken? I find it hard to accept Americans will go hungry if farmers are allowed to stop idling their land and are permitted to grow whatever they want, and as much as they want. Why do price fluctuations, heavy debt, and bad weather affect farmers of some commodities and not others? Why are some farmers dependent on government programs, and not others? It just does not make sense to me.

Current agricultural policy seems to be based on the assumption that America will benefit from federally mandated inefficiency and waste, rather than allowing farmers to produce at maximum productivity.

Supporters of farm programs often justify them based on farmers' needs. But since the New Deal, the programs have not targeted benefits according to need. It is morally inappropriate to provide farm program benefits to all but the most needy. Why should any but the most destitute farmer be treated better by the Federal Government than any other American citizen? Prevailing agricultural policy assumes that the Federal Government treats all farmers equitably and ethically. This is not so. Providing agricultural subsidies to affluent farmers contradicts the realities, priorities, justice, and moral principles important to most Americans.

Some argue that our Nation's food supply needs protecting. While no one would dispute the importance of food to our survival, controlling its supply was not the original intent of our programs initiated during the Great Depression. There are many other goods and services crucial to our well-being which are not directly subsidized. Medicine is vital to our well-being. We do not, however, subsidize doctors, and Government-provided health care is available only to the poorest of the poor who are lucky enough to obtain it. Clothing is essential to us, yet our tax dollars do not subsidize textile mills. If there was a moral imperative to provide our citizenry with what we politicians deem are necessities, we would not be able to afford to subsidize prosperous farmers the way we do. This is the sort of Government intervention which creates victims. We cannot reward economically one group without punishing another group. What is lavished on wealthy farmers must first be taken from other citizens. In a free market society, what gives one citizen the right to another's paycheck? In order for Government to control agriculture in our country, we insist on subsidizing wealthy farmers. By doing this, the poor are sacrificed again, and again, and again.

The moral and economic debate for Government control over agriculture either includes all sectors of agriculture, or no sectors of agriculture.

Our farm programs are in need of fixing for several reasons. One, our food prices can and ought to be lower, two, we need not spend billions of dollars a year on agriculture in these times of tightening budget constraints, and three, since the moral and economic arguments for farm subsidies hold no water, program benefits should be targeted to the neediest farmers, period.

I am not alone in my belief that the distribution of agricultural payments is grossly disproportionate. When the National Public Policy Education Committee surveyed 12,000 American farmers—farmers, I repeat—it was found that 53 percent of these people agreed that agricultural programs should give more benefits to needy farmers. This tells me that farmers, like other Americans, recognize that our limited resources need to be carefully distributed.

I hope, Mr. President, that we will have the opportunity to vote for busting the bubble. I will support that. I also hope that the benefits gained by busting the bubble can be used where it is really needed—to avoid increasing health costs to our senior citizens; to avoid other more regressive tax increases; and to help balance the budget. However, I cannot vote for increasing taxes to subsidize agriculture.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this revenue-neutral amendment offered by my colleagues, Senator BAUCUS and Senator CONRAD. I am supporting this alternative to the Finance Committee package because it brings us closer to the more equitable package adopted by the House last night. It takes the right steps toward reducing the Federal deficit.

As importantly, it removes the disproportionate burden placed on elderly and disabled Medicare recipients and scales back the gasoline tax to 5 cents a gallon.

It's wrong to say this amendment is an attack on the wealthy. I don't see how anyone can oppose fair taxes on those earning more than $200,000 a year. This amendment ensures that the wealthiest few pay their fair share. By piercing the tax bubble, the measure would return fairness to our tax structure.

The amendment correctly rejects the Finance Committee proposal to disproportionately increase out-of-pocket expenditures for elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries. By limiting the current $75 per year deductible for Medicare part B to $100, the measure ensures that the elderly, particularly lower income beneficiaries are not pushed over the poverty line.

Mr. President, the key provision of this amendment that directly affects Hawaii's consumer is a rollback of the gasoline tax to 5 cents a gallon. The Finance Committee proposal would more than double the current 9½ cents a gallon tax to 18½ cents. We already pay a higher toll at the gas pump than any other State. A month ago, I saw gas being sold at $1.98⁹/₁₀ a gallon. To ask that Hawaii residents shoulder a further increase in gasoline prices is out of the question. We already know that lower and middle-income families use more of their income to pay for gasoline than wealthier drivers.

Again, the issue is fairness. And again, this proposal gives us a program that remedies the dramatic shift in the tax burden during the 1980's.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President I am voting not to waive the Budget Act on the Conrad amendment. The reason is not that I don't support the Senator's intention to increase the Tax Code's progressivity by creating a 33-percent rate and imposing a 10-percent surtax on those with incomes over $1 million. I support both of these proposals with one important proviso—that the revenues raised by increasing the tax burden on the wealthiest taxpayers be used to insulate middle-income families from the impact of deficit reduction. The amendment before us does not do that. Instead, it uses a large portion of the additional tax revenues to restore funding to agricultural programs. In other words it raises taxes on people in New Jersey and sends the revenues to North Dakota.

Mr. President, one of the few things I like about the pending legislation is the substantial cuts in the Federal role in agriculture. Spending on agriculture is reduced by $13 billion over the next 5 years. That is real progress, although my own preference would be to cut these programs by twice that amount. The Conrad amendment would restore almost 50 percent of those cuts. That would be a mistake, not just in terms of equity but also in terms of the long run productivity and efficiency of the agricultural sector.

Accordingly, I will oppose the amendment in the expectation that the Senate will shortly consider an amendment to be offered by Senators GORE and MIKULSKI that will also raise the top tax rate to 33 percent and impose a 10-percent surtax on millionaires but use the revenues to delete increased costs for Medicare recipients and remove the limits on itemized deductions. The use of increased revenues from the wealthy for that purpose is more appropriate than sending those revenues to North Dakota and a few other States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? Does the Senator yield back the remainder of his time?

Mr. CONRAD. I yield back the remainder of my time if the other side does.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, we yield back the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question occurs on the motion.

The Chair would advise Senators the yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 67, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Mr. Hatfield

So the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The amendment falls. The amendment is not germane.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3014

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], for himself and Mr. DOLE, proposes an amendment numbered 3014.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this amendment maintains the amount of the gas tax increase that is in the pending bill, but it modifies the allocation of receipts from that tax to the highway trust fund so that 60 percent goes to the trust fund and 40 percent in deficit reduction. That is an increase in the amount allocated to the trust fund over the 50-50 split that is contained in the pending bill.

The gas tax increase would still sunset in 1995 as it does under the current bill.

The amendment also contains a sense-of-the-Senate provision stating our intention to modify the diesel fuel tax applicable to the railroads to 40 percent when we reach conference. That is to accommodate that increase to the proportion that goes to deficit reduction as opposed to the trust fund.

Many Senators have expressed an interest in seeing a higher proportion of the revenue from the gas tax going to the highway trust fund as opposed to deficit reduction. The bill now provides a 50-50 split. This substitute, which I offer on behalf of myself and Senator DOLE, would modify that allocation so that 60 percent goes into the highway trust fund and 40 percent goes to deficit reduction.

Mr. President, I yield to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that I will offer a second-degree amendment when the time on the first-degree amendment has expired. I understand there are 2 hours allotted to the first-degree amendment and 1 hour for the second-degree amendment, but I do not think we will use all that time. In fact, I would inquire of the majority leader at this time—I have had a number of inquiries on this side of the aisle—as to the program for the balance of the evening.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as all Senators know, the deadline for completion of action on the reconciliation conference report is midnight Friday. So we must work backward from that time. That means we must complete action on a conference with the House after we complete action on this bill. It is imperative, therefore, given the complexity of the issues and the differences in the legislation, that we complete action on this bill as soon as possible.

After we deal with this amendment—and it is not my intention that we use the full 2 hours. I think we can use a very small proportion of that, unless other Senators wish to address the subject. It is a relatively simple and straightforward modification. I propose to discuss the matter with the managers, discuss how best to proceed this evening and tomorrow.

There has never been an all-night session since I have been majority leader, and I hope we do not start tonight. But we have to finish this bill, and it requires cooperation by all Senators.

We are going to have to discuss with the managers what is the best way to proceed, what number of amendments are intended to be offered, and hopefully discuss with some of those Senators whether or not they might be willing to forbear in the interests of not being in all night and after completing action at a relatively early hour tomorrow, because we have to be in conference tomorrow.

The conference with the House must occur tomorrow. We still have, I am estimating now, about 8 hours remaining on this bill. In fact, I might inquire of the Chair, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 8 hours.

Mr. MITCHELL. Approximately 8 hours.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the majority leader yield for a point?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. BENTSEN. If we go on through the night, we have staff working through the night also, and then try to go into the complexities of a tax measure with the House of Representatives and the Ways and Means Committee, we have an incredible task in front of us. So I would strongly urge that we try to expedite this as much as possible.

As the majority leader has said, we are talking about moving from 50-50 trust funds to 60-40. That is a relatively minor modification and should not take too long to debate.

Mr. DOLE. Will the majority leader yield further?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. DOLE. In addition to knowing what the schedule will be this evening, a number of my colleagues would like to know what it will be the rest of the year. Some would like to get out Saturday night sine die, including this Senator. Others may be as late as Sunday with a few thinking it probably would not happen until Monday. They probably are in the majority.

But if we complete action on this, I understand that we could probably go to conference tomorrow evening on the bill, and of course the primary conference will be Ways and Means and Finance. I understand that may be ready by tomorrow evening.

It seems to me if we came in early tomorrow morning we would still complete action on this bill even if we use every minute of the 20 hours by 4 or 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

The House with 435 Members did this in 4 hours. We only have 100, but it is taking us 20 hours. I guess that says there is a difference in the two bodies.

I know there are probably 30 amendments still pending. As I understand it, if we get to the end and you have not had a chance to offer your amendment, you can offer it and have a vote without debate. So everybody will have a chance to have their amendments voted on.

But I would like to encourage my colleagues to let us yield back a little time. Maybe if we could yield back a couple hours, we could go home now, and that would leave 6 hours tomorrow; and come in at 9; be finished by 3 o'clock. But if nobody wants to yield back time, I do not think the majority leader has any choice but to stay here and eat it up. We can eat up 3 hours with the amendments, the first- and second-degree amendments we have. So I would be willing to do that. That would be 3 hours. That would only leave 5 hours.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. I address a question to both leaders. The problem with the bill as it stands now is it has material subject to the Byrd rule, in my judgment. The reason for some of us opposing yielding back the time is that if the Byrd rule is not applied we each need time to discuss the extraneous material. I would like to encourage the leaders to address that question, and to tell us is there an intention on the part of the leadership to take action to apply the Byrd rule across the board to this bill?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the ranking manager and the manager.

Mr. DOMENICI. The delay was not caused, I say to my friend from Alaska, because we have not been working on that issue. We have. I think it is safe to say that we are fully aware of his concern. We intend to work together with a list of extraneous material, and present it in the earliest part of the morning to see if we can get some concurrence to offer that in behalf of the leadership, and perhaps the distinguished author of the amendment, Senator BYRD, who has indicated he wants the extraneous material removed.

We are going to work on that I say to my friend. I cannot assure him at this moment that every single bit of extraneous material in this bill is on the list. It is subject to interpretation. We are working on it, however. We are going to try to get it done in a reasonable manner.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if the distinguished leader will yield once more, I urge the leaders on both sides to defer yielding back the time. This Senator would be perfectly willing to a limitation of 10 minutes on each side if we apply the Byrd rule uniformly to the materials that are in this reconciliation proposal which are extraneous and ought to be stricken.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Alaska has raised a relevant and important issue. We will discuss how best to proceed in that regard. I will discuss it with the distinguished Republican leader, and the managers. We have already done that previously. I know they have been working on it with their staffs very actively. We will discuss that.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader retains the floor.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the majority leader yield for a question? The Mitchell amendment that is now pending affects the Symms amendment to strike the gas tax from this bill. Will the Senator from Idaho be able to have any time to speak on the Mitchell amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Absolutely, yes.

Might I make an inquiry? My understanding is that there are 2 hours on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. Since it affects the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, it is my intention that the Senator from Idaho have whatever time he wishes within reason.

Mr. SYMMS. I do not need a long time. I would like to explain to my colleague what happened.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly. Might I complete this?

Mr. GORE. Will the majority leader yield? I respect very much what both leaders are attempting to do. I feel that it is understandable. Nevertheless, some of us do have some amendments which we would like to discuss, not for a long period of time.

The junior Senator from Maryland, Senator MIKULSKI, and I have an amendment which we would like to introduce for the Senate's consideration. We are perfectly willing to enter into a time agreement and not spend a lot of time on the amendment.

Again, I understand what the leaders are trying to do but let us be clear about one thing. The process by which the Senate considers this measure is not intended to give solely to two, or three, or four Senators so much prerogative——

Mr. SASSER. May we have order, Mr. President?

Mr. GORE. To design the outcome that other Senators——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GORE. If the majority leader will continue to yield, the procedures are not intended to give so much power to the leaders as to preclude totally the opportunity of other Senators to engage in a reasonable effort to bring up issues that ought to be considered by the Senate.

I will say that regardless of what the Senate decides on the amendment which the Senator from Maryland and I intend to propose, I will support the leadership package whether it passes or does not pass. If it happens to get enough votes to make a point, I think the Senate will be all to the better. If it happens to pass, I think it will be better still. But I would like to have an opportunity other than at 4 o'clock in the morning to present the amendment and to have a short and reasonable debate of the amendment.

So, after we have had about 13 hours, 14 hours, of debate and we voted on one amendment, and now the leaders are talking about yielding back all time, I understand what they are up to, and I respect it. But I would just like to put down that marker, say we are willing to have a short time agreement, and then vote on our amendment. But we would like a chance to discuss it just briefly before the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not in order. Senators will cease audible conversations.

Mr. DOLE. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, obviously we want to accommodate everybody who wishes to offer an amendment. I just say for those on this side who intend to offer their amendments if we can be notified then we can take a look at how much time we have remaining on this side, and determine how much time is left for each amendment. We are not trying to shut anybody off. But I think much of the debate today has been general debate.

Second, if we do decide to go out fairly early tonight, say at 11, 12, 1 a.m., I would like to then move to the Executive Calendar, and the State Department. We have been holding up about a dozen ambassadors, 10 ambassador rank, since October 1, and about 14 other nominations not ambassadors.

It is being held up on this side. I will make that clear.

All these people have families. They have all been out of the committee since October 1. They all have children. They all have a right to make plans.

I think the only way we can get these holds off, and they should not be honored this late in the session, is to bring them up. Whoever has a hold then can come out here and filibuster all these ambassadors and others. It just seems to me we are doing an injustice to the system to permit this to happen.

I do not know how many families are involved here. I guess a couple dozen. We are not serving our country, and at least I am speaking now for those on this side, by holding up appointments made by our President for 16 or 17 days for some unknown reason.

My view is if somebody has a legitimate complaint, that is fine. But I cannot believe they have a legitimate complaint to the Ambassador to Belize, Uruguay, Venezuela, some of these countries I am not too familiar with, Swaziland, and others. So, I think we ought to hear what the objections are to all of these folks. They probably would like to move. It probably has cost them a lot of money waiting for somebody to lift a hold, some arbitrary hold on 20-some nominees on the Executive Calendar.

If we have to stay all night, that is good enough for me. If there are only two of us here, whoever objects, maybe we can resolve this issue this evening.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I may make one comment with respect to what the Republican leader has said, I agree with the concern expressed by the Republican leader. I wish to emphasize, so there can be no misunderstanding, that I have sought to proceed with respect to these nominations, but they have been blocked by a Republican hold. This is a Republican Senator or Senators preventing consideration of nominations made by the Republican President. I have made an effort to proceed to them but have been prevented from doing so.

I am certainly prepared to accommodate the concerns of the Republican leader and the President. Although I must say I am willing to go a long way for the President, I hope I do not have to stay up all night for him because a Republican Senator objects to the nominations by a Republican President. Maybe doing it will, in the manner suggested by the Republican leader, enable us to proceed.

But to accommodate that request, I now announce that when we complete action on this legislation tonight, I am going to attempt to proceed to the Executive Calendar, and any Senator who has an objection to the nominees to which the Republican leader has referred should be present to stand in the Senate and express that objection. Then we will do the best we can to proceed from there.

Mr. President, I understand the matter is subject to debate. I would like to yield some time to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I would like to make a suggestion to the majority leader so we can expedite this vote tonight. In this Senator's opinion, I think I can summarize this from my side in 5 minutes, and I am ready to move to table the majority leader's amendment, if it is in order. And we can vote on it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The distinguished Republican leader has a second-degree amendment to offer when the time is used or yielded back.

Mr. SYMMS. Well, I say that I do not care to delay my colleagues. It will take me a very brief time to explain here and frame this so everyone knows what they are voting on.

Mr. MITCHELL. Might I suggest that the Senator indicate how much time he would like. We control 2 hours.

Mr. SYMMS. Ten minutes is all the time this Senator needs.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why does the distinguished Republican leader not yield off his time, and when the Senator from Idaho finishes, I will make a brief statement and yield back my time, and the distinguished Republican leader can offer his second-degree amendment; is that agreeable?

Mr. SYMMS. Yes, 10 minutes is fine.

Mr. President, if the minority leader will yield, I learned my legislative training in the House, and they operated in 5 minutes.

What we have here is, the Senator from Idaho offered an amendment to strike the gas tax. Because of the parliamentary situation, it will be nearly impossible to ever get a vote up or down on that amendment.

Mr. President, what has happened is that the majority leader now offers an amendment that changes where the gas tax goes from 50 percent to the trust fund to 60 percent for the trust fund. The truth of it is that none of this money that is on the gas tax is going to be spent on highways, because there is a cap on highway spending, and you are going to see an artificial number built up in a trust fund, but the money will be spent for other obligations of the Government.

So this amendment is totally a sham, so that Senators will not have to vote on whether they want to raise the gas taxes or not. So the vote will be on a motion to table the majority leader's amendment.

If we vote to table it, we are voting to not have gas taxes in this package. If you vote with the majority leader's amendment, you are voting to have gas taxes in this package.

So once again, the men and women that work in this country are going to have their pockets picked because we refuse to cut spending.

I must say I am not in a comfortable position. I do not like to put any Senator on line to make a vote, because I am not up for election and some of you are. No one wants to vote on whether they want to raise taxes. We have heard countless speeches about it. But, Mr. President, the question is not deficit reduction. That is a wordsmith's use of the words. The question is how much money do you want the Government to spend? It is what the Government spends that causes the problems.

I have said it over and over in this Chamber, a freeze on the budget, and some of the Senators have said a freeze on the budget will not do it. I urge you to look to reducing the deficit spending and revenue options report to the Senate and House committees on the budget, Congressional Budget Office, on page 30, and it goes through the different choices. A 1-year freeze in the appropriated accounts would make up over twice what it is we are talking about picking the Americans' pockets on another gas tax. We can accept that, and we can freeze the appropriated accounts for the 1990 levels and put them on a baseline, and the accrued savings would be incredible. There are all kinds of options.

Mr. KERREY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SYMMS. Yes.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he intends to offer an amendment to reduce the budget.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the Senator for the question. The way the parliamentary situation is, you cannot offer it all at once. Some Senators might do that. That would be an option some Senator could do, or this Senator, at the appropriate time.

I want to make the point that a vote for the Mitchell amendment is a vote for the 9½ cents gas tax in this package. There will be no other vote because of the parliamentary situation. It is an up-or-down vote or a motion to table, and this Senator is willing to do it however the leaders want to do it, but that is basically what is there.

And the text of the amendment means absolutely nothing, absolutely nothing. The way the bill is written, 50 percent of the funds go to the highway trust fund. The way the amendment is written, 60 percent of the funds go to the highway trust fund, and the truth of it is that not one thin dime will be spent back in your States for highway construction, because the highway appropriations will be capped in the package, and the money will not be spent on the highways. The money will be spent for deficit reduction, and the problem is the deficit reduction is a play on words, Mr. President.

What we need to do is hold the line on spending, and the rest of this argument is really not that relevant. If we raise the tax on the American people, as this package calls for, we are going to deal a real blow to the American people whom we represent.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, does the Senator from Idaho control half of the time? I suppose he has an hour.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader controls half of the time, and the Republican leader or his designee controls the remainder of the time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will give my time to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the Senator, and I yield 10 minutes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not need 10 minutes. I want to ask a question. I am confused.

Do I understand the Senator to say that we have worked ourselves into a parliamentary situation where the only way that Senators can express their opinions on the gas tax issue is by voting to table a motion on the amendment of the majority leader? In other words, we are not going to get an up-or-down vote on the question of whether we favor raising the gas tax?

Mr. SYMMS. It would be this Senator's wish, I say, that we would. But this Senator is not the majority leader or the minority leader and I cannot bring that to a vote.

If we vote down their amendment, then the Symms amendment is still pending.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I want to clarify the situation. As I understand it, the bill comes with a built-in gas tax increase that doubles the gas tax during the 5-year period of this bill; that is, it goes from 9 cents to 18½ cents as a result of this bill.

The Symms amendment—in fact I hope it is the Symms-Armstrong-Wallop-Kasten-Lott amendment, I think there are a number of us joined in cosponsoring—as I understand the amendment we offered simply strikes that provision from the legislation, leaving the gas tax right where it is.

I think it is important that we get an up-or-down vote on it, and I gather that the purpose of the pending amendment by the Senator from Maine, the majority leader, is exactly to preclude that possibility. So the real reason that I have risen is simply to emphasize what the Senator from Idaho is saying. We are not going to get an up-or-down vote by adopting this reconciliation procedure.

When we voted for the budget resolution, we worked ourselves into a parliamentary situation in which Senators do not have their usual rights and very likely in this parliamentary situation and with the determination of the leaders and the managers they can prevent any Senator from getting a straight up-or-down vote on any amendment that they may wish to offer.

So the only way Senators can express their view on this is a kind of round-the-barn way in this instance if the Senator is advising us that if we are against the gas tax increase we have to vote to table the Mitchell amendment.

If that is the Senator's best recommendation, I intend to support him on it. My interest is only to support the Symms amendment which is to strike out the gas tax increase in this bill.

Mr. SYMMS. If the Senator will yield for a reply to that, it would be either we table the Mitchell amendment, and no Senator likes to table the majority leader's amendment, or if we just vote it up or down, vote it down and then the Symms amendment is still the pending business.

We can vote on that. I cannot control that course. I believe the Republican leader may have a second-degree amendment to offer to the Mitchell amendment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if I have any remaining time, I observe to the Senator, first of all, that I think he is to be congratulated for attempting to bring this issue before the Senate. It is an important issue; it is an issue which affects the lives and economic well-being of millions of American families.

I think the overwhelming majority of them will be on the Senator's side. But I think if they fully understood the round-the-barn, back-door process that we have to go through to get a vote on this, they would be as upset about it as some of the Senators are tonight.

At this point, we do not have any choice. The only way to get to where we want to go is either to vote down the Mitchell amendment or vote to table it. But I hope when it is all over, however it turns out, there is not any Senator that has the temerity to go home and say to constituents "No, on the gas tax, I did not vote against the Symms amendment on the gas tax; I was just voting on procedural amendments or voting on another subject, just a parliamentary situation."

Every Senator should recognize what they are voting on is the gas tax amendment and that is what they will be recorded on when the time comes.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am happy to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I shall not use 10 minutes but I would like to echo the words of the Senator from Colorado. Whether or not people think that his amendment is responsible, given the emergency, as we have all been led to believe exists, the fact is that those of us who support it ought to be by rights entitled to a vote on it. We will not be. I understand that. But the more awkward thing for someone who is a Senator, who claims to have pride in representing his State and people of America in this so-called world's greatest deliberative body, it seems a shame we are not going to be permitted to deliberate on that specific amendment.

It also seems a shame to this Senator that the situation as described by the Senator from Idaho as it relates specifically to the distribution of funds to the highway trust fund and to deficit reduction is simply not quite the case, and Americans should understand it.

We cannot devote a proportion of the money to the highway trust fund and then cap the amount of moneys that can be appropriated from that fund and in all honesty, and I say that word specifically, in all honesty claim that you are doing anything for the highway trust fund for the Senators' States. For the Senator from Tennessee who was worried about a bridge that fell in his State and killed some people, it is not going to be affected or helped or aided in any single way by the action that the Senate is about to undertake tonight.

So, to be honest with the American people, that seems a difficult thing for the Senate to do and the Congress to do in these days. We really should tell them that what we are doing is raising their taxes on the gasoline that they buy, not to improve their highways, their roads, their infrastructure, and all the things that the Senator from West Virginia spoke of, but in fact to spend more money on more programs such as that we passed last night when we started a brand new program and a brand new spending program for Americans, and I am speaking in particular about that volunteers in service to America bill.

Curiously enough, the volunteers are all paid volunteers, too, and that is another one of those curious uses of the English language that the Senate has become quite adept at trying to persuade Members they are doing something to appeal to their generosity when, in fact, they are appealing to their avarice.

But it is not the right thing for this Senate to do, to deny any Members of the Senate the opportunity to vote on the gas tax. My State is affected more than any other State by the gas tax. We have to drive farther to work because we have fewer people and an enormous territorial expanse, and statistically our people drive farther to work than do all the rest of Americans.

But even if it were not the case of just Wyoming, I would ask the Senate tonight to examine who it is that is affected by the gas tax. Who drives the oldest cars? Not the richest Americans that our colleagues on the other side would have us believe they are trying to ding and to get to pay their fair share. It is the bottom edge of the middle class that has the oldest cars that consume the most gasoline and who, by and large, drive the farthest to work.

Think of the carpenter who lives out in Olney, MD, who is under subcontract in a project in the District. He has to drive every day or he does not have a job. You are taxing his livelihood and not to give him better roads or to give him better transportation. Or the nurse who may come in from 40 or 50 miles outside of Washington to work in a hospital in Washington. These are the people most affected by this rise in the gas tax.

Yet our leadership is saying tonight that we do not deserve a vote on that, much the same way the leadership in the House denied the Republicans an opportunity to present to the House of Representatives an opportunity to vote on the means of securing the reduction in the deficit that this program does without taxes.

Why? Because it had a chance of passage.

Somehow or another we have fixated ourselves on some sort of guilt trip that somehow Americans are overindulged by their Government. I remember days in the Finance Committee when they used to talk about tax expenditures. And the theory of a tax expenditure is very simple. The theory of a tax expenditure is that everything you earn belongs first to the Government and you get to keep what you keep by grace of that Government, not in support of that Government but by grace of that Government. And that is what the Symms amendment on the gasoline tax is all about.

I regret the situation that the Senator from Idaho finds himself in. I hope the Senate understands that the vote they are being asked to take is to deny the Senate an opportunity to express itself directly on whether or not Americans, working Americans, traveling Americans, commuting Americans, should have a very specific doubling of the tax that they now pay for the privilege of working in this great land.

It is not a fair thing to do. It is not a right thing to do. And it clearly is not going to be the kind of vote that at the end of it anybody could have said I was in favor of the Symms amendment but, lordy me, the processes of the Senate just did not give me any opportunity.

Oh, woe is me; I am with you Americans. I am with you fellows that drive. But I never had a chance. I just could not do it. I am sure you understand. I had to vote because this is the only act in town.

Mr. President, that is not a fair way to treat Americans, and it is not a fair way to treat Senators. I say to my friend from Idaho that I am with him. We have three votes to go through to get to his amendment. I hope the Senate understands that and gives us an opportunity to do just exactly that.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator from Idaho yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 43 minutes remaining.

Mr. SYMMS. I am happy to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. I wish to congratulate my friend from Idaho. I share his concern. I think a lot of us have amendments. I happen to have a couple. They are not the same as the one of the Senator from Idaho dealing with the gas tax.

Frankly, I think most everybody knows what the gas tax provision is in this bill. I personally am a little more concerned about what we do not know that is in the bill than what we know.

Mr. President, I am just scanning through this bill, and I see there are 1,084 pages in this reconciliation package. I have been spending all day and my staff has been spending all day, but I would venture to say that we do not know everything that is in here. And I would venture to say there is not a Senator on this floor that knows everything that is in this package.

As a matter of fact, I have gone to some of the leaders on this package, and I have expressed concerns about various things in here that I have reservations about. I said: Well, can we change them? Well, if we are going to change them, it is going to take amendments. Maybe it is on gasoline tax; maybe it is on something else. But right now the way this procedure is working, I do not think we are going to be able to have the amendments to make the changes.

Some of them, Mr. President, need to be changed. I noticed on page, on one page 488, line 15, there is a little provision dealing with the debt limit. There is a little increase in the debt limit.

I saw my friend from West Virginia, Senator BYRD, hold up a chart not too long ago and talk about the increase in debt limit. And it has increased dramatically. In the last 10 years, the debt limit has increased from less than $1 trillion to $3 trillion; $3.1 trillion.

Well, this bill, on page 488, has one little line that says the debt limit has increased by $1.9 trillion—not billion—$1.9 trillion, an increase in the debt limit, enough to take care of us for several years; 5, 6, maybe more. Why should we increase the debt limit for 6 years—I do not understand—or for 5 years? Do we want to avoid tough votes in the future? Do we want to avoid making budget reforms in the future?

I have an amendment. I want to reduce that. I think the debt limit increase should be no more than a couple hundred billion dollars. I have an amendment to do it. Maybe that is the right figure; I do not know. But I think we should have the opportunity to offer that amendment. I am afraid we are going to be denied that opportunity. I hope we are not. I have the amendment.

I heard my friend and colleague from Kansas say that amendments will be taken up at the conclusion of the bill. This is going to be one of them. I hope that it will be adopted. I expect that it will. I have a hard time seeing how people are going to vote against an amendment that will reduce the increase in debt limit by $1.9 trillion. So that is one amendment.

I look at other provisions and I see some labor provisions that really have nothing to do with reconciliation. They increase the cost on small business, increase the fines and penalties by 5 times.

That means an OSHA inspector—and I happen to have been a small businessman coming to the State. I would have inspections by OSHA. They might drop by and say, "Your exit sign is not visible." That used to be a penalty of $100 or $200. Now it is a penalty of $1,000 or $10,000. They increased the penalties 5 times.

OSHA is not supposed to be out raising money. The whole idea of OSHA is to make workplaces more safe, to increase the quality of the environment and safety for employees, not to be raising money for the Federal Government. But yet that is in here.

There is a provision that increases the penalty for employers if they make a mistake or they have a teenager, somebody that is 16 or 17 years old—right now, present law says that they should not work more than 18 hours a week. If they work more than that—which incidentally, I expect our pages work a lot more than that—if they work more than that, the penalties go up 10 times. The employer can be fined not $1,000, but $10,000; $10,000 because they hire somebody and they are 17 years old. And if they work 20 hours a week, and it happens to be a week that they are in school, they can be fined $10,000 per employee. And that is in here, Mr. President.

There are a lot of other provisions that are in here. There are provisions dealing with pension funds, a little tax on reversions. Oh, reversions, that must be a bad provision. So the present tax, which is 15 percent, basically they increase it to 40 percent. We do not want anybody to overfund their plan and have that revert back to their employer, so they are going to tax it away.

They say they are going to raise $1 billion. What they are going to do, as a result of that provision, people are not going to overfund their plans. They are going to underfund their plans. When they underfund their plans, that jeopardizes the entire health of the defined benefit pension plan community; that is, pension plans for the majority of Americans are going to be jeopardized because they try and raise more taxes on those plans. They try and help the employer. They cannot do that. Therefore, we are going to have a heavy tax if you overfund the plan.

So the employer, instead of overfunding the plan, they are going to underfund it. They are going to put minimum funding in those plans. They do not want to be taxed. The net result is 10 years from now, we are going to find a lot of pension plans going upside down. They are going to be underfunded. That is a mistake.

It raises some money. At least maybe it is somewhat germane to the reconciliation bill. But it is a bad mistake. It is bad pension policy, yet we are going to have that taxed at 40 percent reversions.

There is a little provision dealing with labor protection provisions on airline companies. This really has nothing to do with this bill whatsoever, but it is in this bill right now. It says that if an airline employee was laid off for whatever reason—maybe there is a merger; maybe there is a sale of the airline company, or whatever—that the unemployed employee could receive 60 percent of his benefits for 60 months, for 5 years.

Now if you are talking about a pilot, the pilot may have an income of $150,000 a year, so their unemployment compensation would be $100,000 for 5 years. That happens to be in this bill.

It may not be a pilot. It might be another employee of the airline company, most of which are well compensated. That does not belong in this bill, but presently it is in this bill.

Again, I would like to have an amendment to strike that provision. Maybe the managers will strike it. I hope that is the case.

But, Mr. President, my point is there are 1,084 pages in this bill. There are a lot of provisions in this bill that we do not know about, that no Senator knows about, that some staff person might have put in. Certainly, a majority of the Senators do not know about them. We need to have the opportunity to take some of those out. It will take amendments to do so.

I hope the managers will move to strike a lot of these provisions that I have mentioned. If they do not, at least this Senator or other Senators would like to have that opportunity to do so. I am afraid if we allow ourselves to continue to get bogged down in long debate over amendments which even the author of the last amendment said is a miniscule amendment, that would deny us the opportunity to improve this piece of legislation, which at least in this Senator's opinion needs significant improvement.

I thank my friend and colleague for yielding me the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KASTEN. Will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. SYMMS. I am happy to yield the Senator 5 minutes.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KASTEN. At the present time, it is my understanding that before us is the Mitchell amendment, which is an amendment in the first degree; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KASTEN. And therefore, if I were to send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration, my amendment would be in the second degree?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. But the amendment cannot be sent up until all time has expired on the amendment in the first degree.

Mr. KASTEN. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the easiest way that we can get to the votes that we are seeking is simply to amend the Mitchell amendment to the original Symms amendment, which would mean that the Symms amendment would then be voted on first.

If the Symms amendment for a straight elimination of the gas tax were defeated by the body, then the Mitchell amendment, which is a compromise amendment, would be in order. But at least by doing this, by offering the repeal amendment first, we could get the amendments in the logical order.

In other words, if the body wanted to eliminate the gas tax completely, that would be the first amendment. Then if we chose not to eliminate the gas tax completely, the logical next step is the Mitchell amendment, which is somewhere between straight out repeal and the position that the bill is in now in which a disproportionate part of it goes, not to the infrastructure improvement but to reducing the overall deficit.

I am disappointed that again procedurally I am unable to get us, at least at this moment, back to the place where we would be voting on repeal of the gas tax straight and, instead, are clouding it with a procedural question.

Let me, if I can, address myself not only to the gas tax but to the question with regard to the overall agreement. I think the easiest way of doing this is to quote from some comments of a number of people who have been active in the budget process in Government in this town, even members of previous administrations.

I oppose this budget agreement * * * it is a disaster. The ambitious enforcement program is full of loopholes. The package doesn't reduce the deficit, the deficit goes up by $50 billion.

If this agreement is approved, I think it is vitally important that we take the table with the outlays and the revenues, and we frame it, put it on the wall, and then every year we compare the numbers and see what they are. I'm willing to bet that the numbers will not comport with reality.

That statement is by James Miller, Ph.D., chairman, Citizens for a Sound Economy, but most importantly, former Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The Symms amendment to reduce the gas tax or to eliminate the gas tax would be a step in the right direction, not the wrong direction in the view of Citizens for a Sound Economy.

If I may, could I ask the Senator from Idaho, maybe to yield me a couple more minutes, if I could have his attention? Will the Senator yield me 3 more minutes?

Mr. SYMMS. Yes, I will be happy to yield the Senator more minutes.

I might just say to the Senator before I yield to him, this Senator does not like to be in a position to move to table this majority leader's amendment or any majority leader's amendment. I have the utmost respect for Senator MITCHELL. I do not like to come in and move to table the majority leader's amendment, but it seems to me, as the Senator from Wisconsin outlines, the easiest thing to understand on this vote is, if Symms moves to table it, that is the closest thing we can get to vote for the Symms amendment tonight. If we table it, then maybe the leadership will give us a vote on it. If not, I have a couple of other ideas I would like to try to pursue.

Mr. KASTEN. I think without question, if it is necessary to table——

Mr. SYMMS. I yield the Senator 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KASTEN. It seems to me what we ought to do is put this in a logical order. If there is going to be a slight change here, we still ought to be able to vote for a straight repeal by sending an amendment to the desk in the second-degree. That would work.

Let me just take two other people whom I respect and read their quotes.

Contrary to what the President asserts, this agreement will exert a strong contradictory influence on the economy. * * * The President should tell us how a whopping tax increase and virtually no cuts in spending other than in defense outlays will help the U.S. economy to grow.

What we really need are real expending cuts, and we need basic tax reform that will make the economy more efficient, remove impediments to growth, and remove impediments to the competitiveness of American businesses in the world economy.

That is Norman Ture, Ph.D., president of the Institute for Research in Economics and Taxation and a former Under Secretary of the Treasury. These are not yahoos somewhere out there who do not know what they are doing. These are people who have been in charge of policy.

Last, I quote:

This is the tenth year of budget agreements. Higher taxes have always been permanent, and budget savings have never been realized. If you reached into a hat and pulled out something it would be better than this.

Paul Craig Roberts, a former Assistant Secretary for the Treasury for Economic Policy.

The Symms amendment is a step in the right direction. I am hopeful we will not be prevented, by parliamentary procedure, from dealing with a straight up or down vote on the question either before or after we get through the efforts with the majority leader.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this involves an amendment by myself and a second-degree amendment by the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE. I would like to suggest we yield back the time on this amendment so Senator DOLE can offer his and some of our Republican colleagues can start referring to this as the Dole amendment, which it really is, which is the substance. Mine is just a shell.

Perhaps they can repeat those speeches with respect to the Dole amendment. There will be 1 hour on that. I wonder if my good friend, the Senator from Idaho, might not permit us to yield back the time on this amendment so we can have the Dole amendment, and then Senators can get up and make all those speeches about the Dole amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. Before I do that, I would like to say to the majority leader—and I said this while the majority leader was off the floor—I do not like to be in a position, because I am being denied a vote on my amendment, that I have to move to table the majority leader's amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Tabling the Republican leader's amendment.

Mr. SYMMS. And I doubly hate to move to table the Republican leader's amendment. I suggest I confer with the two leaders for 1 minute, if we could just go into a quorum call, and talk to them about an alternative I have.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the Senator withhold? Might I have 2 minutes to express some ideas with the Senator from Oklahoma which he raised?

Mr. SYMMS. I withdraw my suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 2 minutes off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am glad my friend from Oklahoma is still on the floor. Let me say, he has been around the Senate quite a while. I have been here a few years. It is not with great pride that I look at a bill of this magnitude and say we are going to vote on it and that everyone in here knows everything in it, because they do not, or that everyone should know it, because they should not.

I can remember a tax bill produced in a box once. I do not know if my colleague was here, but they carried it over in a box. We did not even have a chance to do this to it. It was carried over from the House one evening, down this aisle. I am not saying that is good.

I want to say to the Senator from Oklahoma, however, that it pertains to specific provisions of the type that he referred to. Some are clearly extraneous under the so-called Byrd rule, which is intended to keep material from getting in a reconciliation bill and thus being protected which truly is not related to deficit reduction or only incidentally so. This is pretty subjective sometimes. But we are going to try to deal with some of the provisions the Senator referred to in that manner.

Some of the others—while I may agree or disagree with the Senator in terms of whether they deserve the support of the U.S. Senate as this package goes through, or should they be taken out—I will try my best to give the Senator an opportunity to get a vote on, under the motion to strike.

My colleague might wonder if there is a difference between what he discussed and what is occurring here. I do not know if there is or not in other people's minds, but frankly I do not believe anything my colleagues have talked about—I am not sure—but I do not think anything my colleague has talked about I would call an amendment calculated to kill the deficit reduction package.

I tend to see a bit of a difference between that and something that is overtly—not incidentally—but overtly intended to kill the package. I think there might be a difference, and I thank the Senator for raising those issues. We will try our best to accommodate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator from Oklahoma wish to complete the colloquy?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the Senator 1 minute off the bill.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank my friend from New Mexico. I think several of the provisions I did talk about should fall under the Byrd provision. Labor protection provisions do not belong on this bill. They have nothing to do with reconciliation. Certainly criminal penalties under OSHA do not belong in this bill.

Also, this Senator has concerns about multiplying the OSHA penalties by five times, or the violations under the labor laws by 10 times, or increasing the Federal debt limit by $1.9 trillion. I have those concerns as well.

So I do hope we will have a chance to have amendments to strike some of those provisions.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I will vote to table the amendment by Senator MITCHELL to modify the gasoline tax provisions of the reconciliation bill. I am doing so because approval of this amendment would have the affect of making it impossible for the Senate to vote directly on the question of whether the deficit reduction package should contain an increase in the gasoline tax.

I believe the Senate should have the opportunity to vote directly on the question of increasing the gasoline tax. I am opposed to an increase in the gasoline tax at this time even though I have in the past advocated a higher Federal gasoline tax as a means to increase revenue and to encourage energy conservation. The reason for my vote today is my concern about the immense impact a sudden additional increase in the cost of gasoline would have on the working men and women of my State who must rely on their automobiles to get to and from their work. In just 10 weeks the average cost of gasoline in Rhode Island has increased 45 cents a gallon. And this is occurring in a State already in a recession with more than 7-percent unemployment and headed into a possibly much deeper recession. Some day—should the price of oil go down—I could see the merit in reexamining the gasoline tax question. But to vote to increase that tax for Rhode Islanders in today's circumstances would not be correct.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, the budget reconciliation package that is before this body today is held together by the thinnest of threads. Weaken a single thread in any part of this package and the entire package could unravel. Mr. President, raising fuel taxes is not popular, it is especially difficult to do at a time when the Iraqi crisis has caused gasoline and diesel fuel prices to increase 30 to 40 cents per gallon in a little more than 2 months.

But, Mr. President, if this country is ever going to develop a rational energy conservation strategy; if we are ever going to make a dent in our Federal budget deficit, then we inevitably have to consider raising the cost of fuel. Everyone likes cheap gasoline until we wake up one day and find that our addiction to cheap oil has made us far too dependent on oil from the Middle East. Our entire economy, the transportation sector, the heating sector, the manufacturing sector, every service in this country, is affected by the sharp runup in oil prices in the past 2 months.

The budget deficit package seeks to encourage conservation by incrementally raising the gasoline and diesel fuel tax. Part of the increase in funds will be used for deficit reduction. Mr. President, while I do not like the idea of separating gasoline tax revenue from the trust fund, I believe the urgency of the budget deficit requires that we do so at this time.

Simply stated, if we eliminate the gas tax provision, we might as well give up on the idea of congressional input into deficit reduction. The Symms amendment would not only unravel the threads of this deficit reduction package, it guts the package. It would tell the American people to live with a $100 billion across-the-board sequester because the Congress cannot make the hard decisions.

Mr. President, I think we can make the hard, but less popular decisions. This is one of those times when we should stand up for the national interest and vote against an amendment to kill this package.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like to renew my suggestion that we yield back the time on the first-degree amendments and then permit the distinguished Republican leader to offer the second-degree amendment. There will be 1 hour debate on that.

I move that all of the time so far has been used by the Senator from Idaho and those supporting him. Will that be acceptable to the Senator?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I will be happy to yield back my time right now.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 3015 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3014

(Purpose: To change the allocation formula)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] proposes amendment numbered 3015 to amendment No. 3014.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the Republican leader controls 30 minutes. The majority manager or his designee controls the balance of the time. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this amendment retains the 9½-cent gas tax. It does shift the mix. Instead of 50-50, 60 percent goes into the trust fund and 40 percent is deficit reduction. That in essence is what it does and it does avoid a vote on the gas tax amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

I have heard a lot of complaints about not having a vote up or down. I think I have been here long enough to know we all know we are within the rules. Nobody is violating the rules. We are using the rules. We are offering amendments.

I think the majority, at least I trust the majority understands we are working on a package here of about $500 billion. This would take out $33.6 billion and put nothing back. That would not only unravel the package, that would probably finish the package. If not, someone can offer a motion to strike the next tax and then offer to strike the Medicare savings and then offer to strike defense savings. And then, of course, the interest savings would fall on their own. Maybe the leaders can offer that motion.

Those who want to kill this bill certainly ought to use every opportunity, but we should not have to cooperate with them. If somebody is going to hang me, they are going to furnish the rope. I am not going to furnish the rope. You get your own rope.

I am trying to do the best I can for President Bush. The last time I checked, he was a Republican. It is my job as a leader in the Senate to try to move the President's agenda. I regret that some of my colleagues on this side disagree. That is their right. We all have our rights. I might find myself in disagreement sometime.

If we put a COLA freeze in here, we would have people all over us about the COLA freeze. If we taxed Social Security benefits, they would be all over us about taxing Social Security benefits. We left those out.

I defy anyone to put together a $500 billion package to pass—I can put one together—but put one together that will pass. We will be glad to remove this one and bring another one up by unanimous consent. But that is not what we have before us. We have some people who want to kill the package, but they want to do it an inch at a time. This is more than an inch. It is about 10 percent of the package, so we will just have 90 percent left. Then somebody says, let us take out another 10 percent.

This Senator would like to finish this bill and leave Washington. But certainly every Member has a right to offer every amendment, and we have every right to try to frustrate every amendment. That is the way it works, and this Senator does not know the rules that well. I agree with the Parliamentarian. If he did not vote, I would not try to interpret him. So we have an understanding. I do the voting and he would do the interpretation.

What we are doing is legislating. We are playing by the rules in an effort to preserve this package. And to those who do not want the package, they can do everything they can to try to frustrate it, defeat it, chop it up. But, in my view, if we think there is a chance that they might prevail and kill the package, then we will look a little foolish out here. Oh, I do not want anybody to be denied their vote. It is only a $500 billion package, so what. We can dream up another one in a couple of years.

We may lose in any event, but I want the RECORD to show at least we tried to protect the package and not give everybody a free shot like it is a turkey shoot around here, to shoot until you win. If somebody wins, the country loses, in this Senator's view.

So I regret we cannot have an up-or-down vote. I regret we cannot support any of the amendments that are pending, unless they are agreed upon by the managers. Some may be and there may be good questions raised by the Senator from Oklahoma and others, and they ought to be addressed, and they are. But this takes 10 percent of the package and it is gone and does not substitute one dime; not one dime.

I understand that this will add about $20 to the average motorist per year. Not quite a tank of gas. This tax, not quite a tank of gas. We turn on the evening news and we see the boys over in Saudi Arabia. We say, "oh, well, boys, we feel sorry for them, but we do not want to do anything to inconvenience us. We keep on driving, you keep staying over there in the hot sun; you keep on protecting that oil over there so we can keep on driving. We do not want to conserve anything, so you just stay over there 2 or 3 years." You tell that to somebody's son or tell that to the parents.

This is about the best policy in this whole bill, trying to conserve energy. As I said earlier, I respect the Senator from Idaho because he is one to stand up here and vote to cut spending, whatever it is. He does not care what it is. If it is necessary, he will vote to reduce spending and so will the Senator from Wyoming and so will the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Oklahoma. and others who have spoken. But that is not a majority. And I will do the same.

I do not know what the answer is. We try to please everybody and let everybody have an up-or-down vote on every amendment and let the package unravel. This amendment can still be offered later. All you have to do is say notwithstanding anything in this bill, and you put your amendment in. But then it is subject to a point of order, and it takes 60 votes. That is the difference. We are talking about 10 votes.

So I just suggest we vote on this amendment. The distinguished Senator from Idaho is going to move to table the amendment. He may prevail. I would say to those who want to kill the package, vote with the Senator from Idaho. We can get home by 11:15. That may be the best argument we have.

Mr. DOMENICI. Be careful. We are going to lose votes.

Mr. DOLE. Then let us make it 11:30. We always want to compromise.

I just suggest we are taking the proper course as leaders. Sometimes it is not much fun being a leader when other people have better ideas and better judgment and ought to be the leader, but they have to have an election first.

In an effort to keep the package together, I am opposed to doing what my friend from Idaho wishes to do and, therefore, I have offered the second-degree amendment. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WALLOP. Will the Republican leader yield 3 minutes to me?

Mr. DOLE. I will be happy to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senate the manager is not in opposition to the amendment. The Republican leader may designate the 30 minutes to someone else.

Mr. DOLE. I designate the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. We will not use 30 minutes.

Mr. President, when the Senate was asked to vote on the budget resolution last week, I doubt there is a Senator who cannot fail to remember that we were told not to argue the budget resolution because that was just a shell. Time for the debate on the specifics of it would come now and we would be permitted that opportunity.

Now, basically, that is being denied. I guess I cannot say we are being denied debate. We are just being denied the consequences of that debate.

That is unfortunate. I again would suggest that a body which calls itself deliberative ought to be permitted deliberation.

I have the utmost respect for my leader, Mr. DOLE. I certainly do not intend to substitute myself or offer myself in his place in the elections that are coming up, and I do not think that is the point. I think all of us are entitled to press a view on the floor of the Senate.

One of the views that I have was expressed by the President of the United States. We were told by him just yesterday, and half a dozen times in the weeks preceding it, that our presence in the Middle East is not about oil but about naked aggression. I think it is a bit unfair to say that those of us who are opposed to this amendment are opposed to or threatening the young men and women who serve this country at the request of the President, and with the general agreement of the Senate and the House, to confront naked aggression in the Middle East.

So do not make any mistake about it. We are not here arguing about whether or not we ought to be in the Middle East, and we are not here arguing about whether or not this is supporting the boys in the Middle East, or neglecting them and saying we just want to drive.

Some of us feel really seriously still about taxes. Some of us feel really seriously still that taxes, no matter where you take them from the pocket of Americans, comes out of the pockets of Americans. If I were persuaded that this whole package was really something about diminishing the deficit, I might feel differently and might even be on the other side of my friend from Idaho, but I am not. I am not persuaded to that.

I am persuaded that the package is based on a house of fees, a house of taxes, a house of requirements, a house of brutally unfair treatment of America's business.

Think for a minute of that one provision that is in this package which says that American corporations can no longer deduct the interest on their business expenses with regards to a confrontation with the Internal Revenue Service over an argument on taxes. You tell me, Members of the Senate, what corporation is going to be able to dare to confront the IRS, already arrogant, trying to justify what they believe to be an honest difference of opinion with the Internal Revenue Service of America and their view of what tax law says.

I always believed that this country had courts to settle that argument for a purpose, but we are being told by this package that it does not.

Returning to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, I again say we were told to vote for the budget resolution, which I did not—I will admit that—because this would be the arena for debate, and this would be the arena in which we had the opportunity to express ourselves. Now that opportunity is cleverly, within the rules, being denied us.

Do not tell us that we are ignoring the young men and women serving their country in the Middle East. That is as unfair a comment as was the comment that this is a Nation now divided amongst rich and poor, middle class and lower class, earners, nonearners, homeowners and renters, and others.

We are not a Nation divided until we get to the debate on the floor of the Senate. Then all of a sudden nobody can have an opinion that is different from that prevailing without having chosen a side amongst the divided classes of America. That is not the America that I know. This is not an America divided by class. It is not an America divided by envy. It is an America based on the premise of opportunity and the premise of fairness. This gasoline tax is not a fair tax. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALLOP. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Three minutes.

Mr. WALLOP. Three minutes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President and the Senator from Wyoming, maybe I could suggest another argument. How about let us just move the process along, sort of dovetailing what the Senator was saying a minute ago. We were told a week or so ago, vote for the shell, move the process along.

Now we have the bill that fills in the blanks, the reconciliation. And we are being told: Do not mess with it. Move it along. Move the process along. Let us get it into conference. Friday night, Saturday, Sunday, we are going to get a conference report, and then we are going to be told let us move it along again. Let us see if the President will veto it.

I understand the leadership has a tough job, and they are doing a great job. They are doing what we would expect them to do. But it has been said: "We are not going to allow you a turkey shoot." We are not asking for a turkey shoot, not even one shotgun blast. Give us just one single bullet—one .22 shot—just one vote on this reconciliation package. That is all we are asking.

For my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I would like to talk just a minute about procedure. Let us just look at this day. It has been an interesting day. No votes this morning, no votes early afternoon. I was headed for the Ethics Committee. At 3 o'clock, when I was told we were expecting a vote on the Symms amendment to knock out the gasoline tax increase. So I dropped by the floor, and that was not happening.

I thought it might be 15 minutes or 30 minutes more. I think I was told that. I motored on up to the Ethics Committee. An hour goes by, 2 hours go by. No Symms amendment.

Then this becomes a bipartisan thing. The Conrad amendment is offered. We got right up to within 3 minutes of when the Conrad amendment was going to be voted on. It disappeared.

Then came this magnificent speech, as it always is by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who is always magnificent in his remarks. He knows the history of the body, the history of everything that has happened in it. His speech was beautiful, but after 3 hours, there still were no votes.

I am sitting up in the Ethics Committee at 7 o'clock. Still no votes. I thought we were going to have a vote at 3 o'clock. Great procedure!

Lo and behold, I drive home tonight to Annandale, VA. I eat supper, and guess what? A vote at 9:30. All day, not one vote. Not a shotgun blast, not a turkey shoot, not a single vote.

And what do we vote on, on the Conrad amendment? A motion to waive the point of order to avoid getting a vote on his amendment.

Now here we come again. Are we going to get a vote on the Symms amendment? No. We have an amendment by the distinguished and very capable majority leader. Now a second-degree amendment by our leader, Senator DOLE. The idea is, look, nobody will ever figure out what we are voting on. We have this procedure figured out. Nobody will understand the motion to table the second-degree amendment to the amendment, going around the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Look, it is not going to work. We are going to get one single shot at least at this turkey. This is a tax increase turkey.

All we ask is one single .22 bullet aimed at it to knock out gasoline taxes for heaven's sake. Conservation? What if you live in Kansas, or in Mississippi and to get to a low-income minimum wage job, you have to drive 60 miles? How are you going to conserve it? You drive 120 miles a day to get to a minimum wage job. That is the only way you get the job. If you do not drive there, you do not have it. So you are going to pay not only 9½ cents a gallon more under this bill, you already have seen it go up 50, 60, 70 cents a gallon since August.

Listen, my colleagues, Democrats and Republicans. You think you are going to get a clean vote on an amendment dealing with capital gains? If you are a Senator from Georgia or from Oklahoma, do not believe it. You are going to get a clean vote on an amendment dealing with medicare? Forget it. You think you are going to get an amendment to knock out taxes? No way.

So understand, we can cloud it up all we want. But this single shot vote is on whether or not we are going to knock out a 9½ cent-a-gallon tax increase on the working taxpayers of America. Cloud it up all you want to, but that is what this vote is going to be.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. How much time? Does the Senator from Wyoming have any more requests for time?

Mr. WALLOP. I know of no more.

Mr. SYMMS. I would like 1 minute.

Mr. WALLOP. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to say in my 1 minute that I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Mississippi, but I also appreciate the comments of the Senator from Kansas. I want to say to my leader that I am not challenging him for his job, and I am one of his big fans in this Senate. I just disagree with him on this tax-and-spend issue.

I want to make it clear. The Senator from Kansas made it clear in his remarks that if you vote against or vote for the Symms motion to table the Mitchell-Dole substitute, you are voting to cut out the gas tax. That is what he said. That is all this vote is about.

So this is the closest we are going to get to it. But this vote—and I want to apologize to my two leaders—to have them move to table the underlying Mitchell amendment with the Dole amendment is so they both go down so that we can get to the Symms amendment. But the vote, my colleagues, is when you vote for the Symms amendment you are voting to cut out the gas taxes in this package.

I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. I yield to the distinguished majority leader 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, life in the Senate is full of irony. But I do not think I have seen so much of it in one evening as I have tonight.

Let me begin with the Senator from Mississippi who expressed his concern for the minimum wage workers of Mississippi.

On April 12 of this year we had a chance to express our concern for the minimum wage workers of Mississippi, and Wyoming, and Idaho, and Maine, and Kansas when we voted on the minimum wage bill. The Senator from Mississippi voted against that bill. Everyone has a right to vote as he or she wishes. But the minimum wage workers of this country ought to know that what really matters to them was an increase in the minimum wage. The opportunity existed to do something for them. The Senator from Mississippi was nowhere to be found.

Now we have heard tonight a lot of discussion about the procedure. Oh, the procedure we have been told, good heavens, the majority leader is offering an amendment and the minority leader is offering a second-degree amendment, and what a procedure. My good friend, the Senator from Colorado, expressed his deep concern about that.

Mr. President, Members of the Senate, in the nearly 2 years I have been majority leader no Member of the Senate has more frequently and more skillfully used the rules to his advantage than the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Just last Friday the entire Senate was rendered incapable of anything—not a first-degree amendment, not a second-degree amendment, not a bill—because the Senator from Colorado rightfully insisted upon his rights under the rules. He appropriately insisted on his rights under the rules as he has regularly in the past 2 years, and always to advance his point of view. And I respect him for that because he vigorously pursues his point of view. But now let someone else employ the rules in an appropriate manner to advance their point of view, let the majority leader offer an amendment, let the minority leader offer a second-degree amendment, why, suddenly, that is not fair. That is not right. Why can we not have this vote?

Those who have prevented vote after vote after vote, those who have used the rules over and over again to advance their point of view, suddenly, if someone else does it, why, that is not right.

Ladies and gentlemen, we cannot have a double standard in the Senate. Surely, my colleagues are not suggesting a double standard. Surely, my colleagues do not think that one set of rules should apply in their case, and another set of rules should apply to everyone else. No one would suggest that, would they?

As he always does, the Republican leader cut right to the heart of what is involved in this debate, in this vote. And that is whether we are or we are not to have deficit reduction. Whatever the intention—and I never make an effort to read people's minds or impugn motives. I expressly disclaim any intention or any effort to define someone else's intention. Whatever the intention, the effect of this amendment will be to destroy this deficit reduction effort. The first serious deficit reduction effort in 10 years, a $500 billion deficit reduction package, will be undermined and fatally affected by this amendment. That is what is at stake here. Are we for deficit reduction or are we not for deficit reduction?

And the final and greatest irony in this Chamber, which has heard so many words and listened to so many speeches to overflowing on the need to reduce the deficit, from many of those who now argue in favor of this amendment, now we are being asked to destroy the one serious deficit reduction effort that is being undertaken—just take out the gas tax.

Well, what is next? Take out the tobacco tax. What after that? Take out the tax on beer and wine. What after that? Take out the luxury tax. What after that? Take out the savings. And we will be right back where we were, piling up debt, having our Nation consumed by rising interest payments on that debt. And I predict to you the Senate will be back listening to speech after speech about that awful deficit, and how we have to do something about it. And the words will once again fill and overflow this Chamber from those who will warn the Senate and the Nation about how bad the debt is, and how we have to do something about the deficit.

Well, now we have the chance. This is the test. Senators have suggested what this vote means on the gas tax. Well, let me suggest what it means.

The vote for the Symms motion to table is a vote to destroy this effort at deficit reduction. The Senator from Colorado suggested no Senator who votes against the Symms amendment should have the temerity to go home and say he really was not against the gas tax.

Well, I say, no Senator who votes for the Symms amendment should have the temerity to go anywhere and say he or she cares about the deficit, because they will have demonstrated by their deeds here tonight that the only thing they are prepared to do about the deficit is talk about it, talk about it—words, words, and more words; speeches, speeches, and more speeches; press releases, press releases, and more press releases. But when it came time to do something, to actually act, to actually reduce the deficit, the deeds did not match the words; the deeds did not match the speeches; the deeds did not match the press releases.

That is what is at stake here. This is a killer amendment. If you want to kill this bill, if you want to end this deficit reduction effort now, then vote for the Symms motion to table, because that is what the effect will be.

So we have to decide that tonight. No one likes to decide it, none of us. But that is why we ran for the Senate, so we could participate in the shaping of national policy. And it means, on occasion, difficult, painful votes. That is what we are going to have tonight, and tonight we will find out who meant it when they said the deficit was a problem and who was just speaking words.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, who controls the time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEVIN). The Senator from Wyoming has 18 minutes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the Senator yield 5 minutes?

Mr. WALLOP. I would be happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I was surprised to be the subject of a compliment at this point from the majority leader. Actually, he is mistaken; there are many Senators who are more skillful than the Senator from Colorado in protecting their rights.

Since he mentioned a specific occasion on last Friday when, in fact, I did seek to protect my rights and in some way gave the impression that it was the equivalent of the circumstance we found ourselves in tonight, I want to set that record straight. It, in fact, was diametrically the opposite of the situation tonight.

Last Friday I found myself in exactly the same boat the Senator from Idaho does tonight. Hour after hour, day after day, I had been seeking to get a vote on a simple amendment which—ultimately the Senate, when it got a chance to vote on it—was agreed to. And hour afer hour Senators, exercising their rights within the rules, sought to prevent me from getting that vote. All I did was exercise an option under the rule to bring the issue before the group.

Mr. President, that is the opposite of the situation tonight. The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Kansas are using their rights to prevent the Senator from Idaho from getting a vote on this issue. It is their right to do so, but we should not mistake what is going on here. At the outset, there was an effort to provide a cover vote, a chance to vote for something that would not somehow be seen as an up-or-down vote on the gas tax question. Now this debate has clarified that. There will not be even one Senator who will be able to go home and have the temerity to say "I did not understand what was going on with the parliamentary situation so confused." It is not confused. If you are for the gas tax increase, vote against the Symms amendment. If you are doubling the gas tax, then you vote in favor of his motion. That was the only point I was seeking to make.

We have been told tonight that Senators run for the Senate so they can participate in national policymaking. But the Senator from Mississippi is absolutely right. A week or so ago we were told if we would vote for the budget resolution, it would keep the process moving, that was merely a procedural vote, and that the real policymaking would occur when this reconciliation bill came to the floor. "We will be shooting with real bullets then." We were told that the budget resolution does not count. Now we are told that the real decision was made when we passed the budget resolution and that, after all, we do not have any choice; this is the only serious alternative around; this is the only package.

In fact, we have never had a fair shot at it. The reality is, after the budget resolution was passed, the committees went to work. And I cannot speak for all of them, but in the Finance Committee it was all done, with the exception of a very small portion in open session, behind closed doors, without the kind of normal procedure and input that we have, without the hearings, or the input from the lobbyists, and yes, from the interest groups, from those people who represent our senior citizens and taxpayers and corporations and people who care about legislation.

That is important from the standpoint of custom and tradition, but that is not why it is especially significant. The reason why it is customary around here to seek the input from our fellow citizens is to avoid bringing to the floor legislation that is going to backfire—just as we have done in the past, just as it backfired in the House.

I do not know how this vote will come out, but it deserves to backfire from start to finish. Since last May the effort has been to put this package together behind closed doors, to bring it to the floor of this body and in the other body under parliamentary rules that prevent up or down votes on other issues which compromise the package. That is the real issue.

I understand we do not all agree, and I honor those who think this is a good package. I do not think so. I think raising taxes in the teeth of a recession is bad policy. I think it means fewer jobs for our sons and daughters. I think it means that communities in this country, some of them in my own State, will wither and die on the vine.

I understand there are others who have a different view, who think a tax increase, a huge tax increase, is a responsible thing to do at this point. I respect that difference of opinion.

But I do not think that. I think to pass this bill is a huge mistake, and I absolutely reject the notion that this is the only alternative available to us. It is the only alternative, if that is what we decide. If we defeat this bill, then a whole range of alternatives open up before us, and we all know that to be the case. That, however, is not the issue when Senator SYMMS makes his motion.

A vote on this up or down, whether you are for or against it, is not a vote on the package. All we are voting on with the SYMMS amendment is whether or not we want to include in the package a doubling of the gas tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. I repeat again, Mr. President, and I admire the expertise with which the majority leader is such a wonderful wordsmith, but if he has listened closely, he had never heard the Senator from Idaho stand in here and talk about deficit reduction. I talked about spending reduction. There is a big difference.

What seems to be the big craze in this town is that we have to reduce the deficit. Nobody ever talks about reducing spending. It is the percentage of the work and labor—sweat, blood, and tears—that we jerk out of those people that we spend in Government that matters. That is the issue. And this tax is regressive. It hits those that are the least able to afford it. It hurts the low-income, the retired senior citizen on Social Security that has to drive somewhere, worse than any other group. If we would just reduce spending, we would not have to worry about the so-called deficit. It is the percentage of the gross national product the Government spends that is so detrimental to our economy and our people. There is a big difference between spending control and deficit reduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WALLOP addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the able majority leader says that those of us who are in opposition to this tax are not serious about the deficit.

I do not know what constitutes serious in the majority leader's mind, but in this Senator's mind he could not be more wrong. I bring to the attention of the body that we have in this year—this body of Senators—increased our spending by 14 percent. Our deficit package is a great deal bigger than it would have been had we just restrained ourselves to a level of spending similar to inflation, or similar to that of a year ago.

The ones who have been voting for those things are the ones not serious about the deficits. I can tell you who the special interests in America are; the special interest in America is reelection. I was flailed about the head 2 years ago in my reelection effort for being against women, for being against farmers, for being against the elderly, for being against truckers, for being against all these kinds of things, because I made it a point to vote against those things which were huge increases in spending over a year before.

That is serious. That is serious to have to put your seat on the line for having voted to restrain spending.

The Senator from Colorado is correct in stating this is not the only tool that is available to the United States or to the Congress to reduce spending and to reduce the deficit. Make no mistake about that. It is the only tool available to us tonight, and it has been characterized as Dooms Day; this or nothing. And it is simply not the case, and this amendment does not destroy the effort on the part of all of us who care seriously about the deficit to reduce it.

The Senator from Idaho is quite correct; the issue is much more spending than revenue. Revenues have been increasing at an astonishing rate over the last 8 years, but not nearly so astonishing as our rate of using them.

I am reminded from time to time how this Senate has an enormous appetite to authorize new pieces of ground to the National Park System and no stomach at all for paying for them. We just take the land from people, freeze them in their spot, and then say we are serious about the deficit; we have taken your land, but we are not going to pay for it. We are adept at stealing, and this is an effort at stealing, this tax.

Some of us would really prefer real deficit reduction to tax increases. I have been told that I could not stand the heat if we went to sequester. Try me out. Try me out, because therein, I would know that those portions of the deficit which were reduced would be real, would be permanent, would be lasting, as will be these taxes real, permanent, and lasting, but they will not have an effect on the deficit anything like that which is proclaimed, anything like that absurd assumption and intrasavings that is going to come as part of the $65 billion of this $500 billion package.

The majority leader says our deeds do not match our speeches. I suggest that those in this body last night who voted for a new spending program, a brand new start in spending, are the ones whose deeds do not match their speeches. Oh, yes, it looks good at home to have volunteers in America cleaning up parks, and everything else, but it looks rough on the deficit side of the ledger, too.

It is brand new; it was a luxury. It is great for reelection, but it is not great for the deficit, make no mistake about it. It was new spending, and it requires new spending next year and the year after, and as far down the road as you can see.

No, my friends, those of you who are not serious about the deficit are those of you who vote to spend and spend, and add new programs. And we have a lot of them yet to come, if the majority has its way, before the Senate has finished its work.

Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a couple minutes?

Mr. WALLOP. I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I would like to correct the record in a couple of instances. First, I do not mean to infer that what the leadership is doing here is unfair or that it is not right. It is in the rules, and they are masters at making use of the rules. And I hope someday to be able to do the same in return.

But what I am trying to make clear is the novelty of how things did not occur during the day. No vote at 3 o'clock; finally one vote at 9:30. Even though we are going through this protracted process, everybody needs to understand here and across the country that this vote is a vote on whether or not to raise the gasoline tax 9½ cents.

All I am trying to do is make clear what is being done. We will have as tough votes as ever the Senate cast tough votes. This Senator over the years has voted for more budgets than I voted against—7 out of 10 times. I voted for TEFRA and apologized time and time again for that horrible vote. I view this package as another TEFRA. I got trapped once and do not want to do it again.

It is interesting to me that we are being told if we knock this gas tax provision out, the whole bill goes down; it is destroyed. "The bill is sacrosanct; we cannot touch it; we cannot breathe on it." Yet, in the other body, there were three packages floating around, two of which had no gasoline tax increase, the Republican taxes and then one so-called Democratic one. The one that passed, I believe, only had 3 cents.

Why is it if we breathe on this package anyway, all of a sudden the whole thing goes down? I do not understand that. You know we are going to wind up not with a 9½ cent increase, but somewhere between 3 and 9½ cents. Maybe if we knock this part of it out, we will wind up eventually with 3 cents. I do not understand how, if we change one little piece, the whole house of cards comes tumbling down.

Press releases? Hey, look, we are putting them out on both sides. We all have a fair amount of complexity in that area.

I remember all the press releases also coming out when the leaders were at Andrews Air Force Base. I could not wait to see the paper every morning for the new release or leak, or whatever it was.

Finally, on the minimum wage, I think the leader knows that on November 8, by a vote of 89 to 8, the Senate passed a bill the President signed into law after we had been dinging back and forth for the year with the President saying, "This is what I am going to sign." We did pass it. I did vote for it, the President signed it into law, and that is the law today.

I thank the Senator for yielding that time, and if I control the remainder of the time, I yield back.

Mr. WALLOP. I am prepard to yield back.

Mr. LOTT. I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, will the minority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. GRAMM. I got lost in all the speechmaking as to what the underlying amendment is that we are about to vote on tabling. Can someone simply tell me what it is? Everybody has told me that they are voting for or against. I would like to know what the underlying amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CONRAD). The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the amendment merely provides that the allocation to the highway trust fund of the receipts from the gas tax will be 60 percent, with 60 percent going to deficit reduction.

Mr. GRAMM. In the bill now, it is 50-50; is that right?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. All the bill does is change the allocation from 50-50.

Mr. GRAMM. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to respond to those who have asked the question whether the Symms amendment is a killer amendment. Frankly, I do not think we have to imply; we have to ask the author. He is filled with integrity and honesty, and we have all said that today. He said: This is a killer amendment; I intend to kill the package. That is what he said.

I told him I did not disagree, but I truly respected his honesty. That is what he is trying to do, as I understand it.

I thank the leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to make one comment. The Senator from Wyoming indicated, as I made myself clear, as far as our mission in the gulf, and certainly I did not imply, but I made this statement so many times maybe I did not make it at length. My message is that the American people want us to demonstrate leadership, and I recited this Time poll. About four or five times, I think, Time magazine asked people if they are willing to make a sacrifice to help in the gulf crisis. Eighty-four percent said yes.

Question No. 2: Are you willing to raise the gas tax; 73 percent said no. The point I am making is we are there for oil. We import about 8 million barrels, about 45 or 46 percent. We consume about 30 percent of the world's energy in this country, and we need to conserve a little bit. Maybe this will not do it.

Yes, that is the point I wish to make, and of course the House does not have any gas tax, I say to the Senator from Mississippi, zero gas tax in the package passed by the House. But to make up for that, they delay indexes for 1 year, which takes $30 billion out of the pockets of the working people, indexing the tax brackets and indexing exemptions. And that is how they avoided the gas tax in the House package.

I do not think this Senator or the Senator from Mississippi would care to delay indexes for 1 month or 1 year. So it all gets back to the point that to some, this may be deficit reductions; to some, it is not the way we like it.

The Senator from Idaho is correct. He talks about spending restraint, and he is right and votes that way. And so do other Senators that I have referred to earlier.

But, unfortunately, we are not in the majority, and, unfortunately, or fortunately, depending on your point of view, we agreed to work out some kind of agreement, and we are trying to stick with it.

I do not fault anybody who does not like it, who is trying to upset it. But again I say that it is the leader's responsibility to try to see that that does not happen. If it does, it is not the end of the world. But what happens if this amendment is adopted? If we are alert, we will recommit the bill to the Finance Committee and say find $43.6 billion in taxes somewhere else. If all those who support the amendment would please give me a list of the taxes they like better—maybe you like some taxes better—give me a list of about $43 billion that I could give the Senate Finance Committee chairman and the ranking Republican and say, "I do not like gas taxes. I would rather raise the income tax or the cigarette tax or the beer tax or the wine tax or the HI cap or the luxury tax or something we have not thought of; or take it out of the savings side."

That would be my hope. This, I guess, does not kill the bill completely. It will just take a few days for it to die, because the Senate Finance Committee then would be under the obligation to report back forthwith with $43.6 billion in additional revenues. And I am certain that those $43.6 billion additional revenues would not meet with any more approval than the present provision.

So there are not any easy choices. I do not fault those who have a better idea. I say to my colleagues that I understand my friend from Idaho is going to move to table the amendment. I hope Senators will support the leaders in this instance and vote against the tabling motion.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I move to table the Mitchell amendment, with the underlying Dole amendment, and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 3014 offered by the majority leader. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 59, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 278 Leg.]

REALLOCATION OF STATES' SHARE OF HIGHWAY TRUST FUND

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I fully support the efforts and statements previously made by my colleagues, Senators BAUCUS and PRESSLER, with regard to this provision in the Senate Finance Committee budget proposal which changes the distribution to the States of certain money that are collected into the highway trust fund. I, too, oppose this reallocation and will support any effort to have it stricken from this agreement.

States are categorized as "donor" or "donee" depending on certain formulas which allocate highway trust fund money. Now if we want to analyze a complicated program—dig into the highway trust fund. They have more programs, initiatives, obligations, targets, estimates, estimated estimates—it is quite a system. But, back to the point,—as that system stands, calculations are made on how much a State contributes to the highway fund via the gas tax and trucker fees versus how much that State needs from the trust fund to adequately take care of its highways. They consider population, land area, and lane miles. Obviously, States with lower populations won't contribute as much to the trust fund—but, with large land areas to cover, we have extensive highway systems that need more funds. Hence—the donor-donee system was born.

Donee States, and there are 27 of which Wyoming is one, receive $1.15 in highway trust funds for every dollar we put into the trust fund. Donor States—and there are 23 of which Texas is one, receive .85 cents for every dollar they contribute. But don't misunderstand this system—they aren't coming out short. They get millions of dollars from other pockets and accounts and budget provisions. Our counterparts on the House side make sure of that—so I have no reservation whatsoever in making sure that this donor-donee allocation remains the same.

The Finance Committee's budget proposal would use one-half of the revenues generated from the gas tax directly for deficit reduction. The other half would be placed in the trust fund. This is the half of revenues—an estimated $4 or $5 billion—that the committee suggests be reallocated. Donee States would receive $1.05 for every dollar they contribute, and donor States would receive .95 cents for every dollar.

Donee States will still receive revenues—that's true. We will just receive a lot less than we would have otherwise, and the more heavily populated States will receive even more than they would have. Wyoming stands to lose $5 million from this reallocation. That's a loss—a loss that we can barely afford when we may already have to take the hit from an increased gas tax. The fact we may have to swallow a gas tax is bad enough, but I can't accept Wyoming taking a double hit and losing more highway money to boot.

I work very hard to represent the constituency in Wyoming. But I must now make some difficult decisions for the constituency of future generations, in Wyoming and in this Nation. So often, we in Congress are pressed to do what is politically expedient—solving the current crisis or appeasing the interest of special interest groups—we lose sight of what is down the road. That must come to an end.

I'm prepared to have to tell the people of Wyoming that a gas tax may be one solution to our problems. And I'll take a hit for that. But I can not tell these people that they will have to pay more in taxes, but can receive less. I join 26 of my colleagues in telling you all today—we can not do that.

America is over 3 trillion bucks in the hole. The economic backlash from that situation—which can very easily continue to worsen—will hit our kids and their kids the hardest. It would be quite easy to keep on spending and opposing any regional taxes and just hold off on the heavy lifting and difficult decisions for years to come—but when this budgetary chicken finally does come home to roost, it would just wipe out the economy. We must deal with it now. The time has truly come to show some real leadership and political courage to tackle this problem.

So although I am not in favor of an increase in gasoline taxes, I may have to support one in order to get a budget agreement. I am sure there will be some heavy artillery wheeled out and leveled at me, but I must remain more concerned with the future of our great Republic than with any political fallout that may occur now. But I can't ask them to take a double hit.

I thank my colleagues and urge you to support this effort by Senator BAUCUS and a number of others to strike this reallocation language from the budget agreement. It does not affect budget revenues—and striking it will not affect the budget agreement made by the Finance Committee.

MINIMUM ALLOCATION PROVISION

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I would like to express my disappointment with the point of order that was sustained earlier today against the 95-percent minimum allocation provision contained in this bill. I regret that there was not sufficient support in this body to retain this important provision.

Mr. President, I supported the change in the minimum allocation formula contained in this bill. Wisconsin is a donor State, and has been a donor State for a long time. Since 1956, Wisconsin has sent to Washington more than $1.5 billion in Federal gas taxes that have not come back to the State in Federal highway or mass transit funds. That's an average of $44 million each year that Wisconsin has generously contributed to some other State's highway and mass transit systems.

Wisconsin's status as a donor State would be less objectionable if our generosity under the Highway Trust Fund was being reciprocated under other Federal aid programs. But it isn't. According to a study released by the Northeast-Midwest Coalition this year, Wisconsin averaged an $0.82 return on every tax dollar it sent to Washington during the 1980's.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana argued that the more appropriate time to consider a change in the minimum allocation formula would be during next year's debate over the Highway Trust Fund reauthorization. And I will assure my colleagues that it will be considered during that debate. Yet that did not absolve us from addressing a fundamental inequity here today.

Today we are asking Americans to shoulder a 9½-cent increase in the Federal gas tax. I cannot say I am happy about this level of increase. I would prefer that we look to the wealthy to pay their fair share of taxes rather than resort to regressive taxes such as a gas tax. And I will support amendments today that will place more of a burden on the wealthy than on middle-income Americans.

But if this measure is going to require a gas tax increase, regardless of the level of that increase, then this measure should also require a more equitable distribution of revenues that result from that increase. Why should the residents of Wisconsin, who have donated an average of $44 million a year in gas taxes to other States, be asked to not only continue that donation but increase that donation substantially in fiscal year 1991 just so that this issue can be "more appropriately" debated next year? This delay means that Wisconsin will lose an opportunity to receive an additional $27 million in its fiscal year 1991 apportionment.

Mr. President, it is easy to understand why the Senator from Montana and others who represent States that have benefited from the current formula objected to this provision. Their States would have benefited substantially less than they would have otherwise under this bill. But it's important to note that this provision would not have resulted in any State receiving a lower apportionment under the Highway Trust Fund than its current apportionment. By tying this change to only the new revenues generated as a result of this bill, no State would have lost highway funds as a result.

Mr. President, I regret that the Senate did not agree today to offer donor States such as Wisconsin a small degree of overdue equity. But this issue will be debated again next year. And I will do all I can at that point to see that the formula is rewritten in a way that provides some fairness to donor States such as Wisconsin.

MEDICAID

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in November 1989, I introduced S. 1878, legislation to allow states to finance their State Medicaid match through any tax or donated funds. This legislation would protect State Medicaid budgets from unwarranted Federal intrustion.

On February 9, 1990, the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] published a proposed regulation, 55 FR 4626—February 9, 1990—to prohibit the States' right to use special taxes and voluntary donations as sources of the State Medicaid share.

The administration, however, has a short memory. A few years ago, the administration urged States to pursue innovative approaches to finance escalating State Medicaid budgets. With increased Federal mandates and diminishing State resources, should not we continue to encourage flexibility for State Medicaid programs?

For many States, taxes and/or voluntary contributions are vital sources of revenue. The proposed regulations would restrict for the first time the wide latitude States traditionally have had in financing Medicaid programs. States affected would include Florida, Tennessee, Texas, California, New York, Alabama, Georgia, and Ohio. Several other States have passed legislation to utilize provider taxes or donated funds but are awaiting HCFA final action.

In my State of Florida, we passed landmark legislation creating the Public Medical Assistance Trust Fund (PMATF) in 1984 to provide indigent health care to the State's neediest citizens. The PMATF is funded through a 1.5-percent assessment on the net revenues of all hospitals in Florida and through general State revenues. Florida was the first State to use a hospital tax for Medicaid funding.

If HCFA prohibits hospital taxes for Medicaid use, Florida would lose $150 million from its Federal share next fiscal year. Florida spent the entire hospital tax revenues to keep up with just the new Federal mandates from the 1989 reconciliation bill.

In addition, if the administration succeeds in restricting how States can raise their funds, States will have to cut already insufficient benefits and reimbursement.

HCFA's reasons that the donations and special taxes are essentially a kickback if facilities which put up Medicaid money—whether through taxes or donations—get State and Federal reimbursement for their services. This is no more a kickback then when taxpayers receive subsidized health care or other benefits. Strict rules already exist which prevent real kickbacks.

The administration also assumes that my bill would cost significant amounts as other States would initiate programs if S. 1878 passed. This is a specious argument. Raising taxes in any State is not an easy feat.

The real basis for the administration's policy is clear. If the Federal Government refuses to match the whole State Medicaid portion, there is a budget savings. But this is not a real savings. States will only find other ways to raise their State match. It may take some time, but States will have no other choice. And when States do find the funds, the Federal Government will have to match them.

My bill would fight this subjective logic in two ways. It would allow States to finance their share of health care funds through taxes. It would also allow donated funds to be utilized as part of the State Medicaid share with two limitations to prevent abuse. The donations cannot amount to more than 10 percent of the State's Medicaid spending or 10 percent of the donating facility's gross revenues.

Although these provisions were included in the House Budget Reconciliation Act last year, the final reconciliation bill included only a moratorium on issuance of final regulations.

The House-passed reconciliation bill included the text of S. 1878. The Senate reconciliation bill, however, establishes another moratorium on final HCFA restrictions.

We must act now to end 2 years of moratoriums. We need to permanently resolve this issue and give States latitude to raise Medicaid funds through innovative mechanisms.

MEDICALLY NEEDY INCOME LEVEL UNDER MEDICAID

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to highlight one particular provision in the budget reconciliation measure now before us. It's not a major provision, but one that is very important to elderly and disabled low-income individuals in my State and many others. This provision would prohibit the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] from implementing regulations concerning the medically needy income standard for single individuals under State Medicaid plans.

Mr. President, I must applaud the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee Senator BENTSEN, for his tremendous assistance on this issue during the course of the last year. Without his diligent efforts on behalf of myself, the Senator from Vermont, Senator LEAHY, and other concerned Senators, thousands of single aged, blind, and disabled adults would have been rendered ineligible for Medicaid in many States.

Mr. President, the provision I speak of prohibits the administration from implementing a draconian revision of the Medicaid regulations with respect to the medically needy income levels for single adults. Last year, the administration sought in its fiscal year 1990 budget complex regulatory changes which would have affected 95,000 low-income disabled persons in California alone.

With the assistance of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. BENTSEN, language was included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 which placed a 1-year moratorium on the implementation of the proposed regulations. In February of 1990, 22 Senators joined in writing a letter to Secretary Sullivan requesting that he review and reconsider his proposal to change the regulations with respect to the medically needy income levels. Secretary Sullivan acknowledged our correspondence, but I am unaware of any forthcoming efforts on the part of the administration to withdraw or reconsider the regulations.

In light of the administration's lack of response to this compelling situation and the impending deadline for the discontinuation of the moratorium on the regulations, we were again forced to approach our good friend from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, for his assistance.

Mr. President, I want to commend the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. BENTSEN, for working with myself, Senator LEAHY, and others in permanently resolving a situation that promised to have a devastating impact upon many low-income medically needy individuals who would have been excluded from receiving Medicaid services.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of the correspondence relating to this matter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 19, 1989.

Hon. LLOYD BENTSEN,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR LLOYD: I am writing regarding the Finance Committee's upcoming consideration of the FY 1990 budget reconciliation legislation.

I understand that the Administration proposed in its FY 1990 budget a regulatory change regarding the Medicaid Medically Needy Income Levels for single aged, blind, and disabled Social Security recipients, pensioners, and other medically needy adults. This proposal would impact California disproportionately hard.

Current regulation states that, in determining the Medically Needy Income Levels (MNIL) for a single person, states may utilize a methodology that is 133⅓ percent of the amount "reasonably related to the highest money payment which would ordinarily be made under the State's AFDC plan to a family of two without income and resources." The statute and regulations reflect the fact that a medically needy family of one ordinarily will be an aged, blind, or disabled adult, while an AFDC family of one ordinarily will be a child.

HCFA further clarified this regulation in the Regional Office Manual (1979), which states, "[w]here there is no amount of payment for one person in the AFDC program which is reasonably related to the AFDC payment for two-person families, for example, because the AFDC plan does not provide for payments to single individuals, or such payments are based on reduced need standards applicable only to dependent children and are therefore not related to reasonable maintenance needs of medically needy adults, an amount for one-person families must be established by the State to meet the requirements of this provision" (emphasis added).

The regulations and the ROM manual cited above both stress the statutory requirement of setting a MNIL for individuals on the "basis of reasonable relationship" to the AFDC level for a family consisting of two or more persons. HCFA's current regulations correctly interpret this to mean that even if a State has an AFDC payment level for a family of one child, since that level is not related to the reasonable maintenance needs of medically needy adults, a State may set different levels to take into account the greater needs of adults.

I understand that HCFA may propose new regulations that would forbid states from implementing the "reasonable relatedness" requirement when such states have an AFDC payment standard for one person. I would very much appreciate your including a provision in the reconciliation legislation that would protect the single person MNIL in those states which, as of June 1, 1989, had relied upon the current regulations. I have included draft language for your review.

Since this is codifying current practice and regulation that find ample justification in current law, I do not believe that there should be a cost associated with the amendment. An analogous provision that was adopted in section 4106 of Public Law 100-203 provides precedent for this amendment and cost analysis. You were very helpful in enacting that provision, which protected California's adult couple MNIL, which was set at 133⅓ percent of the AFDC payment standard for a family of three. The rationale underlying this formula is analogous to the rationale for setting the medically needy income level for individuals described above and was authorized according to the same ROM and regulations.

Similar to the Administration's current proposal, HCFA attempted to revoke the authority for higher adult couple standards. P.L. 100-203 prohibited HCFA from taking such action. In that case, CBO found no cost associated with the provision.

Lloyd, in California, the MNIL for single aged, blind, or disabled SS recipients is $600 a month. California's standard was set according to current law and regulation. I am very concerned that the Administration may move forward with this regulation in the near future, which would result in a reduction of nearly 25 percent in California's MNIL and would affect 94,500 Californians. Thousands of individuals in other states would similarly be impacted.

Thank you for your assistance on this crucial matter.

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
Washington, DC, December 19, 1989.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: The Fiscal Year 1990 budget reconciliation cycle presented some unusually difficult challenges for all of us in Congress and I wanted to take a moment, now that we have adjourned the first session of the 101st Congress, to express my appreciation to you for all your extra effort and advice, particularly with respect to a resolution for the issue of medically needy income levels for one-person families.

While it was not possible to arrive at a permanent resolution of the issue of the medically needy income levels for one-member families under State Medicaid programs, the conferees did agree to a provision that prohibits the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) from issuing final regulations on the issue until Congress has an opportunity to examine its merits. This ban, which expires at the end of 1990, is contained in section 6411(h) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89).

I very much regret that we were unable to include the legislative language you sought in the final version of the budget reconciliation legislation adopted by Congress, but, as you are well aware, provisions that were not critically time sensitive or that did not have the effect of reducing the deficit were stripped from the final bill in the closing hours of the session. In any case, I hope that there will be an opportunity to address your concerns during the second session of the 101st Congress. In the meantime, I want you to know how deeply grateful I am to you and to your excellent staff for all the special assistance, long hours, and hard work during an especially difficult budget cycle.

Best wishes for the Holiday Season.

Sincerely,

LLOYD BENTSEN.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, February 13, 1990.

Hon. LOUIS W. SULLIVAN, M.D.,
Secretary of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY SULLIVAN: We are writing concerning the September 26 Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (54 Federal Register 39421) issued by the Health Care Financing Administration in which modifications of 42 CFR 435.1007 are proposed. The regulations concern the medically needy income level (MNIL) for single aged, blind, and disabled Social Security recipients, pensioners, and other medically needy adults. This proposal would impact residents of California, Vermont, Rhode Island, Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Montana, Oklahoma, North Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Tennessee, Iowa, Georgia, Utah, Minnesota, Missouri and possibly other states.

Current regulations—which have been in effect for more than 20 years—state that, in determining the Medically Needy Income Levels for a single person, states may utilize a methodology that is 133⅓ percent of the amount "reasonably related to the highest money payment which would ordinarily be made under the State's AFDC plan to a family of two without income and resources." The statute and regulations reflect the fact that a medically needy family of one ordinarily will be an aged, blind, or disabled adult, while an AFDC family of one ordinarily will be a child.

HCFA further clarified this regulation in the Regional Office Manual (1979), which states, "[w]here there is no amount of payment for one person in the AFDC program which is reasonably related to the AFDC payment for two-person families, for example, because the AFDC plan does not provide for payments to single individuals, or such payments are based on reduced need standards applicable only to dependent children and are therefore not related to reasonable maintenance needs of medically needy adults, an amount for one-person families must be estalished by the State to meet the requirements of this provision".

The regulations and the ROM manual cited above both stress the statutory requirement of setting a MNIL for individuals on the "basis of reasonable relationship" to the AFDC level for a family consisting of two or more persons. HCFA's current regulations correctly interpret this to mean that even if a State has an AFDC payment level for a family of one child, since that level is not related to the reasonable maintenance needs of medically needy adults, a State may set different levels to take into account the greater needs of adults.

HCFA's proposed regulations would forbid states from implementing the "reasonable relatedness" policy when such states have an AFDC payment standard for one person. Since all states have such AFDC payment standards, no state would be permitted to continue its current policy.

We do not support such a change in regulation. There has been no change in statute to require or support this reinterpretation. In our view, it is simply an attempt to save a few dollars at the expense of the most vulnerable members of our society—low-income elderly and disabled individuals. We are concerned that if this regulation is implemented, many frail individuals will be faced with choosing between food, heat and rent or vital medical care, including physicians' visits and prescription drugs. Many will no longer be able to live independently and will be forced into nursing homes in order to gain access to medical care. That will result in greater, not lesser, Medicaid costs.

As you may know, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 included a one-year moratorium on the implementation of the proposed regulation. With this additional time, we urge you to review this proposal and the comments you have received about its potential impact. We hope that, upon such review, you will agree not to proceed with the final regulations. We look forward to hearing from you about your decision on this matter.

Sincerely,

Alan Cranston, J. Robert Kerrey, Kent Conrad, Patrick Leahy, J. James Exon, Paul Sarbanes, David Pryor, Tom Harkin, Barbara A. Mikulski.

James M. Jeffords, Quentin N. Burdick, Claiborne Pell, Orrin G. Hatch, Jake Garn, Conrad Burns, Max Baucus, Jim Sasser, Sam Nunn, Rudy Boschwitz, Pete Wilson, Dave Durenberger, Albert Gore, Jr.

WASHINGTON, DC,
April 19, 1990.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: I am responding to your letter urging me to review carefully a proposed Medicaid rule which was published on September 26, 1989.

The rule proposed to establish the maximum Federal financial participation limit for medically needy families consisting of one person at 133⅓ percent of a State's Aid to Families with Dependent Children payment standards for one person. As you indicate, Congress imposed a 1-year moratorium in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 which prevents implementation of a final rule. I assure you that I will carefully review this issue and will give your comments every consideration.

Thank you for sharing your concerns with me. A similar letter has been sent to the other Senators who signed your letter.

Sincerely,

LOUIS W. SULLIVAN, M.D.,
Secretary.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 18, 1990.

Hon. LLOYD BENTSEN,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR LLOYD: We are writing regarding the Finance Committee's upcoming consideration of the FY 1991 budget reconciliation legislation.

Last year, the Administration proposed in its FY 1990 budget a regulatory change regarding the medically needy income levels for one-member families under state Medicaid programs. This regulation would have had the effect of rendering thousands of single aged, blind, and disabled adults ineligible for Medicaid in at least 17 states.

With your assistance, language was included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 which placed a one year moratorium on the implementation of the proposed regulation. In February of 1990, twenty-two Senators joined in writing a letter to Secretary Sullivan requesting that he review and reconsider his proposal to change the regulations with respect to the medically needy income levels. Secretary Sullivan acknowledged our correspondence, but we are unaware of any effort within the Administration to date to give this matter serious reconsideration. Because this ban is due to expire on December 31, 1990, we are seeking your assistance in resolving this issue permanently.

As you may recall, current regulations—which have been in effect for more than 20 years—state that in determining the medically needy income levels for a single person, states may utilize a methodology that is 133⅓ percent of the amount "reasonably related to the highest money payment which would ordinarily be made under the state's AFDC plan to a family of two without income and resources." Thus, even if a state has an AFDC payment level for a family of one child, since that level is not related to the reasonable maintenance needs of a medically needy adult, a state may set different levels to take into account the greater needs of an adult. This practice is wholly consistent with current law.

The Administration's proposed regulations would forbid states from implementing the "reasonable relatedness" requirement when such states have an AFDC payment standard for one person. Since all states have such AFDC payment standards, no state would be permitted to continue its current policy.

Lloyd, we would very much appreciate your including a provision in this year's reconciliation legislation that would protect the single person medically needy income level in those states which, as of June 1, 1989, had relied upon the current regulations. We have included draft language for your review.

Since this provision is codifying current practice and regulations, we do not believe that its inclusion will result in increased costs. This provision is very similar to one adopted in section 4106 of Public Law 100-203, which protected California's adult couple medically needy income levels. CBO found no increased costs associated with that provision, which also sought to codify existing practice. We are currently in the process of requesting a cost estimate of our proposal from CBO and will share the results with your office as soon as it's available.

Thank you for your assistance on this crucial matter.

Sincerely,

ALAN CRANSTON
PATRICK LEAHY.

THE MEDICAID MEDICALLY NEEDY PROGRAM

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to join Senator CRANSTON in thanking Chairman BENTSEN for including in his Finance Committee reconciliation package our provision clarifying how States set income tests for single individuals in the Medicaid medically needy program. This is good news for the 2,000 low-income and disabled Vermonters whose Medicaid benefits have been threatened since the administration requested a change in the income tests last year.

In its fiscal year 1990 budget, the administration proposed a regulatory change that would remove an option States have had for the last 20 years allowing them to set more generous income levels for single adults in the Medicaid medically needy program.

The medically needy program covers individuals who are not eligible for cash assistance under the Mediciad program but who need help with medical expenses and meet a financial standard established by the State. The medically needy income standard is based on 133⅓ percent of the State's AFDC payment standard for a household of similar size. But for 20 years there has been an exception. States have had the option of calculating the income standard for medically needy single adults based on the AFDC payment for a household of two instead of one.

This option reflects the fact that a medically needy household of one ordinarily is an elderly, blind or disabled adult with greater needs than an AFDC household of one, ordinarily a dependent child.

Vermont and other States have taken advantage of this flexibility in order to make Medicaid available to more single individuals. For thousands of elderly and disabled Vermonters, receiving medical care under the medically needy program has meant a chance to live independently and avoid nursing home care.

During last year's reconciliation debate, Senator CRANSTON and I worked with Senator BENTSEN to place a 1-year ban on the administration's proposed rule with the understanding that we would work this year to permanently resolve the issue.

In February of this year, twenty Senators joined us in writing to Secretary Sullivan requesting that he review and reconsider his proposal to revise the provisions for establishing income tests in the medically needy program. To our knowledge, the administration has made no effort toward this end.

Mr. President, I have never understood the wisdom of the administration's proposal. In my view, it is simply an attempt to save a few dollars at the expense of the most vulnerable members of our society: low-income elderly and disabled individuals. Loss of Medicaid benefits would mean that many frail individuals would be forced to choose between food, heat and rent or vital medical care. Many would lose their independence and be forced into nursing homes in order to gain access to medical care. In the long run, that would mean a much greater commitment of Federal and State Medicaid dollars.

I am grateful to Chairman BENTSEN and his Committee for including the language Senator CRANSTON and I drafted. It will protect the single person medically needy income level in those states which, as of June 1, 1989, relied on the current regulations. It is my understanding that the House reconciliation package includes a similar provision.

I especially want to thank Senator CRANSTON for his leadership and hard work in seeing his provision through the Finance Committee. This is a good provision that will help many elderly and disabled Americans with their urgent medical needs. I urge all Senators to support this effort.

I also would like to thank Chairman BENTSEN on another matter regarding access to health care. His reconciliation bill includes a provision assuring that Medicaid beneficiaries continue to receive urgent medical care while they appeal a decision of "not disabled" made by the Social Security Administration [SSA].

In another example of the ongoing effort by this administration to deny people access to disability benefits, the Health Care Financing Administration adopted a rule in January 1990, that limits the States' flexibility in providing care to thousands in need. In this rule, HCFA denied States the right to provide Medicaid benefits to persons determined "not disabled" by the completely separate Supplemental Security Income Program.

Chairman BENTSEN included legislation I drafted that rightly allows States to continue providing Medicaid benefits to persons needing urgent medical care, until a final decision is handed down by SS. This is absolutely essential in light of the serious problems with the Social Security Administration's handling of disability cases. A report issued by the General Accounting Office [GAO] last year determined that over half of those applicants who are denied disability benefits by the SSA should have been granted those benefits. The reconciliation provision assures that beneficiaries will not face a 1-year delay in Medicaid benefits if they do not get fair treatment from the Social Security Administration.

I had hoped that the Finance Committee would accept my proposal to allow States to make Medicaid disability determinations independent of Social Security decisions. For years Vermont has provided an effective appeals process through which the State could overturn SSA determinations of "not-disabled." Other States have made the initial determination of disability independent of SSA. Through these processes, States provided Medicaid for persons it considered disabled and in need. Eligibility was not restricted by the very narrow interpretations of disability characteristic of Social Security Administration decisions. In addition, States like Vermont made determinations in a timely and accurate manner, as mandated in the Social Security Act.

However, the chairman has shown foresight by asking the General Accounting Office to study the feasibility of establishing a definition of "disabled" for the Medicaid program that differs from the standard definition used for the Supplemental Security Income Program. These two programs address vastly different needs. The GAO study will determine if a more flexible definition of disability is needed for determining Medicaid eligibility.

I look forward to working with Chairman BENTSEN and the General Accounting Office in developing this study.

REFORMULATED GASOLINE

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am very concerned with the reformulated gasoline provisions agreed to by the Senate and House Clean Air conference staffs. Several aspects of the agreement on reformulated gasoline will cost the American public dearly, could force a significant amount of domestic refining capacity to shut down, and are simply not cost effective as environmental mitigation measures. Further, the reformulated gasoline requirements in the staff agreement raise serious technical feasibility questions, and could have substantial adverse consequences for energy policy and the economic health of the country, while providing questionable environmental benefits. Above all, the deadlines imposed in the agreement are probably unachievable when you consider that EPA will probably need at least 1 year to write its regulations before the refiners even begin to navigate the maze of a multiyear permitting process.

Moreover, in strictly prescribing the recipe percentages and prohibitions nationwide for numerous ingredients in the complex hydrocarbon mixture we call gasoline, refinery engineers and chemists will be unduly constrained in the methods they may employ to achieve this legislatively designed gasoline. For example, what if refinery engineers could cost-effectively achieve 14 percent aromatics reduction and 1.1 percent benzene reduction, but find that incremental costs necessary to meet the recipe mandates are very large, or require massive reconfigurations of some refineries using certain types of crude? Consumers would be subjected to severely higher pump prices for an arbitrary and tiny increment of formula change and marginal environmental benefit. This could force many refineries to shut down, impairing energy security by dramatically increasing gasoline imports, and in effect, levying a multibillion dollar tax on the motoring public with no revenues flowing to the Government.

In June 1990, soon after the House passed its version of the Clean Air bill, I wrote to the Congressional Research Service requesting that its experts analyze and evaluate the environmental benefits, costs, and feasibility of the proposed changes in gasoline. At that time, I also requested that the Office of Technology Assessment evaluate reformulated gasoline in its report on alternative fuels, a part of its ongoing assessment of "Technological Risks and Opportunities for Future U.S. Energy Supply and Demand."

CRS concluded that, among other things, the phase-in schedules for oxygenates are unrealistic, unnecessarily constraining for refiners, costly to the public, of questionable environmental benefit, and do not account for the long refinery reconfiguration permitting process. For ozone nonattainment areas, there would be increased NO_x emissions, actually exacerbating ozone problems. CRS warned of the inability of refiners to meet demand, leading to significant short term economic costs, increased imports, and market distortions, as well as transportation, storage, and distribution nightmares. We would have to build vast new storage tank farms and pipelines dedicated to ethanol, methanol, and ethers to meet these requirements. Ethanol and methanol are simply incompatible with our current storage and pipeline infrastructure. Yet the agreement ignores these realities despite the alarms sounded in the CRS reports.

A warning repeated throughout the CRS reports is the great scientific uncertainty as to how legislated reformulations will be measured or accomplished, and whether the legislated approach would even materially benefit the environment and public health.

In September, OTA released its study, "Replacing Gasoline: Alternative Fuels for Light Duty Vehicles." As with the CRS reports, the OTA Report underscored the speculative and as yet unquantified nature of potential benefits and costs that would result from a mandate to reformulate gasoline using a specific recipe. OTA emphasized the lack of critical tests that have been performed, tests that measure the specific chemical constituents of the emissions, and employ those results in air quality models to estimate urban ozone levels in a meaningful way. OTA asserted that "collection of this type of speciated data has been extremely limited thus far". The report said that there was "a significant lack of knowledge" about the impact of reformulations on actual emissions, especially in cars with the catalytic converters of today. "The ultimate ability of reformulated gasoline to lower emissions is unclear at this time" because science "can't as yet quantify the effects of reductions, and emissions benefits may be strongly non-linear". OTA asserted that the scientific community would know much more about the impact of changes to gasoline after the first phase of the oil-auto industry research project on reformulated is completed later this year. OTA concluded: "We cannot overstress the uncertainty associated with projecting the emissions-reduction potential of reformulated gasoline".

When these important reports were made available to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, I wrote to the chairman of the Senate Environmental Protection Subcommittee urging the Senate Clean Air conferees to study the reports and consider fully the conclusions of CRS and OTA before making the final decisions on fuels in the conference. I implored the conferees to consider the energy policy, national security, and cost-effectiveness implications of these provisions, especially since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait and the consequent oil shock. These considerations have apparently been ignored by the staff who negotiated the fuels package. The warnings of CRS and OTA were simply not reflected in the provisions agreed to by staff.

In a recent hearing held on natural gas vehicles, the Energy Regulation and Conservation Subcommittee heard testimony that Senate Environment Committee staff simply would not consider energy security implications in the Clean Air bill, but would only focus narrowly on clean air during the conference negotiations. I am astonished that we as a Nation cannot afford to adopt this ostrich-like attitude to policymaking. This myopia is simply irresponsible.

Conference committee staff even introduced an entirely new provision into the agreement during the early hours of one morning, effectively prohibiting an inexpensive octane enhancing additive, MMT, for use in reformulated gasoline. The MMT manufacturer, Ethyl Corp., asserts that it could save us 100,000 barrels of oil a day. The additive has been used in Canadian unleaded gasoline for over 10 years, with no adverse health effects. MMT is currently undergoing the legal waiver process at EPA, where scientists and public health professionals are dispassionately sifting through the environmental and health risk assessment data and literature in order to make a reasoned decision based on substantial environmental, technological, and economic evidence. Yet, Clean Air Conference staff preempted this decision for fear that narrow environmentalist opposition to MMT in the EPA proceeding would not withstand scientific scrutiny. MMT was never discussed in either Chamber during the consideration of this bill. It was never the subject of title II hearings or markups. It has simply materialized from thin air in the conference bill, further restricting the ability of refiners to meet their recipe requirements in a cost-effective manner. How many other provisions are being developed in the same outrageous manner, reflecting hidden agendas of staff and certain interest groups?

I am now beginning to question some of the basic assumptions that have been advanced by those who decry the vast public health threat resulting from changes that refiners have made to gasoline since the lead phasedown. The constant warning of the massive carcinogenic poisoning of the American public has been one of the prime motivations for redesigning gasoline and imposing very stringent new tailpipe standards for new cars. Archer-Daniels-Midland, the manufacturer of 70 percent of the fuel ethanol in this country, even ran public service type TV ads demonstrating how mothers could protect their children from cancer at the pump.

Despite this hysteria, data from EPA itself is most revealing. In September 1989, EPA published its analysis of the economic and environmental effects of methanol as an automotive fuel. Page 60 of that report reviews the air toxics impact of the President's proposed methanol fueled fleet of 1 million cars sold per year in the 9 worst polluted cities by 2005 over the baseline of cancers caused by gasoline powered vehicles. The EPA report states: "The use of methanol will also reduce the air toxic impacts of motor vehicle emissions * * *. This analysis indicates that methanol would, under the given example, result in about 9 reductions in cancer cases in 2005." That is a reduction of 9 hypothetical cancer cases in the 9 worst polluted cities by 2005 if the President's original methanol auto program had been adopted. Nine cases; not deaths, but cases.

In fact, the chart on the following page of that report shows that EPA modeling predicts 69 cases of cancer a year by the year 2005 attributed to automotive pollution in the 9 cities if gasoline use continued unabated.

To put these numbers in context, there are 1 million cancer cases reported annually in the U.S. today, and 400,000 annual cancer deaths. The President's methanol program promised to reduce air toxics by 80-90 percent by 2005, which EPA predicted would reduce cancer cases in turn by 9. The toxics reductions proposed for reformulated gasoline would start at 15 percent and increase to 25 percent. That equates to somewhere less than 9 case reductions. Yet we would spend many billions of dollars to accomplish this goal.

Should not the EPA administrator be mandated to determine the cost effectiveness, energy policy implications, and technical feasibility of the transportation fuels sections of this bill? Should not the administrator have the authority, in consultation with the Secretary of Energy, to propose changes to the transportation fuels requirements after notice and comment rulemaking? Should not EPA, in consultation with DOE, be authorized to delay implementation dates for these fuel provisions if economics, technology or cost effectiveness of benefits demonstrate the need? I believe the answer must be yes.

Mr. President, I believe very strongly that we must strive to protect and enhance public health and welfare, and environmental quality. I believe that Congress has sent a very strong message to the oil companies, electric utilities, the automakers, and other industries that we must work very hard to reduce the air pollution, water pollution, hazardous wastes, and stratospheric ozone depletion that are plaguing our planet.

But we cannot afford to legislate with blinders on. We cannot ignore the dispassionate conclusions of scientists and engineers who question the costs and benefits of these and other provisions. Especially in light of the new world energy situation, we cannot remain oblivious to the interrelationships between environmental and energy policy, and the budgetary and economic implications of our actions. I urge my colleagues to make sensible changes here to ensure that a very effective Clean Air bill is enacted, which at the same time adequately addresses economic, tax, energy security, timing, and technical feasibility considerations. Scientists, engineers, EPA and DOE must be able to work together to design cost effective, environmentally beneficial fuels of the future within reasonable, achievable time frames.

I ask unanimous consent that the material in the EPA report to which I referred to printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF THE ECONOMIC AND ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS OF METHANOL AS AN AUTOMOTIVE FUEL

AIR TOXICS

The use of methanol in motor vehicles will also reduce the air toxics impacts of motor vehicle emissions. The potential reduction in cancer cases in the year 2005 has been estimated earlier. This analysis indicates that methanol would, under the given example, result in about 9 reductions (a reduction of 13 percent) in cancer cases in 2005.

Methanol is not generally considered a toxic pollutant at levels likely to be inhaled from use as a motor vehicle fuel. Available information indicates that methanol is not a carcinogen. The Health Effects Institute, an independent non-profit research organization funded jointly by EPA and the motor vehicle industry, concluded in a May 1987 report that "the weight of available scientific evidence indicates that exposure to methanol vapors is not likely to cause adverse health effects. Health concerns regarding methanol vapors should not prevent government and industry from encouraging the development and use of methanol fuels, assuming that such development and use are otherwise in the public interest." [1] Nevertheless, EPA and HEI are conducting further research in this area, especially with respect to chronic exposure to low levels of methanol.

Table 4 provides a pollutant specific analysis of the air toxics impacts of methanol.[2] A range of total cancer case reductions of 9.3-22.6 is presented. The lower number represents the minimum benefit of the proposed program in the nine affected areas in 2005. Cancer cases are estimated for the year 2005 assuming a 50/50 split of FFVs (utilizing M85 year round) and dedicated vehicles in these areas. The larger number represents the benefit in the nine areas in 2015. Replacement of 30 percent of gasoline vehicles with dedicated methanol vehicles is assumed in the year 2015 in these nine areas. As many as 75 cancer case reductions could be realized, assuming complete replacement of gasoline vehicles with dedicated methanol vehicles in the year 2015 in these nine areas.

The following toxic pollutants were examined: benzene (including exhaust, evaporative, running loss, and refueling benzene), gasoline refueling vapors, exhaust 1,3-butadiene, polycyclic organic material (POM) adsorbed onto gasoline-derived particulate matter, and formaldehyde. These pollutants are emitted by gasoline-fueled vehicles and are classified by EPA as either known or probable human carcinogens. The base motor vehicle cancer cases in the year 2005 or 2015 from gasoline-fueled vehicles and light-duty trucks in the nine affected cities were used as a starting point.[1]

To obtain reductions in cancer cases for each pollutant, the base urban cancer cases are multiplied by the per vehicle reductions (expressed as a fraction), and the fraction of the urban gasoline fuel consumption displaced by methanol. As seen in the table, vehicles fueled with neat methanol emit little or no benzene, gasoline refueling vapors, 1,3-butadiene or POM. The virtual elimination of these pollutants with neat methanol use is responsible for most of the cancer reductions. Vehicles fueled with neat methanol also do not emit any diesel particulate; however, since the analysis was only performed for gasoline vehicles, the base cancer cases due to diesel particulate are unaffected and not included in Table 4.

VETERANS PROGRAMS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I wish to comment on the provisions in title XI of S. 3209, the fiscal year 1991 budget reconciliation measure.

Mr. President, the reconciliation instructions contained in section 4(c)(10) of House Concurrent Resolution 310, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1991, require the Committee on Veterans' Affairs to report changes in laws within the committee's jurisdiction sufficient to reduce outlays for veterans' programs by $620 million in fiscal year 1991 and $3.35 billion in fiscal years 1991-95.

Pursuant to section 4(a) of House Concurrent Resolution 310 and action of the committee at an October 12, 1990, meeting, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs submitted to the Budget Committee legislation recommending budget savings. Estimated savings resulting from enactment of the legislation we submitted would exceed the 5-year total of $3.35 billion in required reconciliation savings by $2.71 billion. According to CBO estimates, the committee legislation would achieve net savings of $6.059 billion in outlays over fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

Mr. President, title XI of the bill contains provisions that would make changes in the areas of compensation and pension, VA health care, educational and vocational assistance, home loan guaranties, burial benefits and gravemarkers, and in other miscellaneous areas. In summary, these provisions would:

COMPENSATION AND PENSION

First, in section 11001, suspend payment of service-connected disability compensation to an incompetent veteran without dependents whose estate exceeds a value of $25,000 and resume compensation payments when the value of the estate reaches $10,000.

Second, in section 11002, eliminate the presumption of permanent and total disability for veterans over age 65 for purposes of pension eligibility. VA regulations currently provide that nonworking veterans aged 55-59 are considered permanently and totally disabled if they have disabilities rated 60 percent or more or are 60 to 64 years old and rated at least 50-percent disabled. It is expected that VA would extend this system of presumptions for veterans age 65 and older.

Third, in section 11003, limit monthly pension payments to $90 for Medicaid-eligible recipients of VA pension who are in nursing homes, other than State veterans homes, participating in Medicaid.

Fourth, in section 11004, eliminate dependency and indemnity compensation and pension benefits for surviving spouses who have remarried and again become single.

Fifth, in section 11005, round down to the nearest whole dollar the fiscal year 1991 cost-of-living adjustment for disability compensation and DIC and reduce by $1 the COLA for veterans rated 20-percent disabled or less.

HEALTH CARE

Sixth, in section 11011, authorize VA to bill third-party insurers for the cost of health care provided for non-service-connected conditions of veterans who have service-connected disabilities; establish the medical care cost recovery fund [MCCRF] to receive collections from billing third-party insurers for certain health-care services and from copayments by veterans for VA-furnished care and to pay the administrative costs of these collection activities, including the costs of 300 full-time equivalent employees [FTE] in addition to those currently engaged in billing and collection efforts; and provide that collections in excess of the administrative costs would be paid from the MCCRF into the Treasury.

Seventh, in section 11012, require payment of $2 for each 30-day supply of medication dispensed by VA for the care of non-service-connected conditions of veterans who do not have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more disabling.

Eighth, in section 11013, modify health-care categories and copayment requirements by: Eliminating the distinction between the current B and C categories; and requiring all veterans other than category A veterans to make copayments of $10 a day for inpatient care—in addition to a copayment equal to the Medicare annual deductible for the first 90 days of care in a year, plus half that amount for each subsequent 90 days of care in the year—$5 a day for nursing home care—in addition to a copayment for each 90 days of care equal to the Medicare deductible—and $16 per visit for outpatient care—with no cap.

EDUCATIONAL AND VOCATIONAL ASSISTANCE

Ninth, in section 11021, reduce education benefits payable for certain intervals between school terms or quarters to 33 percent of the full amount.

Tenth, in section 11022, eliminate vocational rehabilitation benefits for veterans with disabilities rated 20 percent or less.

HOME LOAN GUARANTIES

Eleventh, in section 11031, allow lenders to file guaranty claims for manufactured home loans upon the lender's receipt of the VA estimate of the resale price of the manufactured home.

Twelfth, in section 11032, increase all fees for VA-guaranteed home loans by 0.75 percent.

BURIAL BENEFITS AND GRAVEMARKERS

Thirteenth, in section 11041, limit the VA plot allowance—$150 paid on behalf of deceased veterans who are not buried in a national cemetery—to those who are eligible for a burial allowance, generally veterans who, at the time of their death, were receiving VA pension or disability compensation. The plot allowance would continue to be paid for veterans buried in State veterans cemeteries.

Fourteenth, in section 11042, eliminate the headstone allowance, which is a payment in lieu of a VA-furnished headstone or gravemarker, based on VA's average wholesale cost for headstones and markers—currently $87—for deceased veterans who are not buried in a national cemetery.

MISCELLANEOUS

Fifteenth, in section 11051, allow use of certain Internal Revenue Service and Social Security Administration data to verify veterans' income for purposes of eligibility for VA needs-based benefits.

Sixteenth, in section 11052, eliminate compensation for the secondary effects of willful misconduct or of the abuse of alcohol or drugs.

Seventeenth, in section 11053, require disclosure of Social Security numbers for applicants for VA needs-based benefits and require VA to conduct regular matches of Social Security and State data on deaths with certain VA beneficiary data in order to identify erroneous payments being made to or for veterans and other beneficiaries who have died.

SECONDARY EFFECTS OF WILLFUL MISCONDUCT

Mr. President, there was one matter in this legislation—relating to elimination of compensation for the secondary effects of willful misconduct—as to which I was seeking further information at the time we submitted our report. Under current law, direct or primary effects of willful misconduct may not be compensated as service connected. However, under VA regulations—Section 3.301 of title 38, Code of Federal Regulations—organic diseases and disabilities which are a secondary result of the chronic use of alcohol or of drugs are not considered to be caused by willful misconduct. The committee legislation is designed to change that result.

Because of concerns about how VA would implement the committee provision, I wrote to Secretary Derwinski on October 9, 1990, requesting specific information as to VA's plans in that regard. Secretary Derwinski responded in an October 15, 1990, letter.

Mr. President, so that my colleagues and the public may have the benefit of this correspondence, I ask unanimous consent that my letter and Secretary Derwinski's reply be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, October 9, 1990.

Hon. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI,
Secretary of Veterans' Affairs,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ED: During recent consultations between the Committee staff and VA officials concerning Administration suggestions for legislation to comply with the deficit-reduction requirements of the expected budget agreement, the Department provided a briefing paper (copy enclosed) describing VA's proposal to eliminate disability compensation for conditions that constitute secondary efforts of willful misconduct. The briefing paper raises a number of questions. I am writing to request clarification as to how VA would implement this proposed legislation.

First, the white paper stated that "organic diseases and disabilities which are a secondary result of the chronic use of alcohol as a beverage . . . would be considered of willful misconduct origin. . . . " This raises the question as to whether you will adopt a principle that long-term behavior patterns that result in cumulative harm to one's medical condition constitute "willful misconduct" and how far that principle might be extended. For example, would that principle apply to adverse health effects of the use of tobacco? On the other hand, if no such new principle is being proposed or if it would be very limited in application, how would the distinction be drawn between organic diseases resulting from the chronic use of alcohol and diseases resulting from other unhealthy behaviors?

With respect to AIDS, the briefing paper also stated, "The amendment would only bar benefits based on AIDS secondary to drug abuse." Does that statement accurately reflect the Department's policy regarding the interpretation and implementation of the provision? Also, I would like to know how you anticipate it being established in the adjudication process that a particular veteran contracted AIDS as a result of drug abuse and whether the same principles would apply to hepatitis and other diseases transmissible through intravenous-drug abuse?

Ed, I would appreciate receiving your reply to these questions no later than Thursday, October 11, in light of the time constraints inherent in the current budget process. I greatly appreciate the cooperation you and other Department officials are extending, in providing information and technical consultation to the Committee concerning this and other deficit-reduction proposals.

With warm regards,
Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.

THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 15, 1990.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter requesting clarification of VA's proposal to eliminate disability compensation for conditions that constitute secondary effects of willful misconduct.

The enclosed fact sheet has been developed to address the concerns you raised.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD J. DERWINSKI.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS VETERANS BENEFITS ADMINISTRATION COMPENSATION AND PENSION SERVICE

I. Issue: To respond to letter of 10-9-90 from Sen. Cranston regarding proposal to eliminate disability compensation benefits for conditions that constitute secondary effects of willful misconduct.

II. Background: The law prohibits payment of compensation if the disability was the result of the veteran's own willful misconduct. Venereal disease is stated to be presumed not to be due to willful misconduct. (38 USC 105a) A 1931 Administrator's decision held that excessive drinking of alcohol to enjoy its intoxicating effects is willful misconduct if it results in disability. A 1964 Administrator's decision made a distinction between disabilities which are the primary result of drinking (for example, automobile accidents) and the remote, organic, secondary effects (for example, liver disease). As a result of the second decision, regulations were promulgated which permit the grant of benefits based on the secondary effects. The same principles were extended to the effects of drug abuse. Attention to specific causes and effects were clearly responsive to societal concerns of the times in question.

III. Current Status: It has been proposed to amend the section of the law dealing with willful misconduct to specify that disability secondary to willful misconduct may not be the basis for a grant of service connection. This proposed change would make inapplicable the 1954 Administrator's decision.

IV. Questions from Sen. Cranston's letter (paraphrased):

Question. If the proposed change is enacted, will you adopt a principle that long-term behavior patterns that result in cumulative harm to one's medical condition (such as use of tobacco) constitute "willful misconduct" and how far would that principle extend?

Response. At some future date the issue of the known secondary effects of the use of tobacco, or other unhealthful behavior, could well rise to the level of concern associated with alcohol and drug usage at earlier dates. In such an atmosphere VA would have to consider the application of the statutory language regarding willful misconduct to these conditions.

It is not possible to determine at this time what the eventual outcome might be. Certainly the similarities and differences between the condition(s) under discussion and alcohol and drug use would have to be considered in the light of the law as it existed at that time. We have no intention of addressing the general issue of "unhealthy behaviors" at this time, with or without the proposed change regarding willful misconduct.

Question. If no new principle is being proposed, how would the distinction be drawn between organic diseases resulting from chronic use of alcohol and diseases resulting from other unhealthy behaviors?

Response. If changes are made in the statutory language so as to exclude disabilities secondary to willful misconduct, the changes would apply to the effects of alcohol and drug use. The consideration of secondary effects of these activities has been a part of VA regulations and procedures since 1964 but we would need to make amendments to conform to the new law. We see nothing in the proposed language which would mandate an expansion to other behaviors.

Question. Is it accurate to state that the amendment would only bar benefits based on AIDS secondary to drug abuse?

Response. We believe that 38 USC 105, as currently written, prohibits denial of benefits based on venereal disease as a willful misconduct activity. Therefore, it is our position that benefits based on AIDS contracted through sexual activity cannot be denied, without regard to the question of secondary effects. AIDS contracted due to drug usage, or in other ways, is subject to the usual provisions regarding willful misconduct, including the current regulations regarding secondary effects. If the law and regulations regarding secondary effects were amended, they would likewise apply to nonsexually-contracted AIDS.

Question. How do you anticipate it being established in the adjudication process that a particular veteran contracted AIDS as a result of drug abuse?

Response. Determinations as to the applicability of current willful misconduct provisions to AIDS (that is, whether it was contracted due to sexual activity or otherwise) are made in the same manner as all other willful misconduct determinations. If there is evidence that any condition was contracted due to a willful misconduct activity, the applicable regulations must be applied. In the absence of evidence of misconduct origin, no misconduct determination need be made. Determinations in each case must be based on the available evidence of record.

In an AIDS case, if the law prohibited benefits based on secondary effects of misconduct disabilities, we would have to determine what evidence was regarding the incurrence. With information tending to show sexual origin, or in the absence of evidence regarding origin, misconduct would not be an issue. If there were evidence of origination in drug use and the law had been changed, benefits would not be payable.

Question. Would the same principles apply to hepatitis and other diseases transmittable though intravenous-drug abuse?

Response. This same principle would apply to any type of disease caused by drug abuse.

SUNSET DATES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the legislation that I proposed at the committee's October 12, 1990, meeting included termination dates for certain provisions. That part of my proposal was superceded by an amendment deleting the sunset provisions. I am concerned that the Committee legislation—which exacts an extra $2.7 billion from veterans programs over the next 5 years—is an unfortunate distortion of the intent of our reconciliation instructions and takes unfair advantage of the breadth of the cuts we had to make in order to meet our first-year savings requirements. I have expressed my strongly held beliefs on this matter in the additional views that I transmitted with the committee's submission to the Budget Committee. My views appear elsewhere in the RECORD for today in the materials submitted by the Budget Committee.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, there are very few provisions in this package that I would recommend in the absence of reconciliation requirements and the great need to reduce the Federal deficit this year and in coming years. However, in light of the savings levels required and aside from the sunset issue, I believe that these recommendations would make savings in the most appropriate areas.

GASOLINE TAX

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I had prepared this statement to support a fair allocation of any new gasoline taxes. Since we are denied that vote and debate by a parlimentary device, I nevertheless want to state my views for the record.

Mr. President, we have seen that the gasoline tax proposals in the legislation before us have created considerable controversy. We have heard considerable debate on the so-called minimum allocation provisions that were reported from the Finance Committee. It has been argued that provisions dealing with minimum allocation represent major transportation policy changes and ought not to be dealt with in this bill. It has been argued that we ought to wait and discuss the matter during consideration of the highway bill next year.

I would respectfully but strongly disagree with those arguments. First, we are already proposing major transportation policy changes in this bill. The question of funding is about as important a part of transportation policy as you can find. Raising gasoline taxes will have a major impact on transportation policy. Adding new moneys to the Highway Trust Fund will have a major impact. So it is perfectly appropriate, in my view, to include some modest and sensible restrictions on how any of those new moneys are going to be allocated. It would be shortsighted to ignore the issue at this time.

Mr. President, some of us are reluctant to raise gasoline taxes to begin with, especially if the new tax revenues are to be used for purposes unrelated to transportation. A gasoline tax increase of the magnitude we are talking about will have particularly severe consequences in North Carolina, for reasons I will presently discuss. Without the modest relief provided by an increased minimum allocation, the burden of a doubling of the gasoline tax would fall particularly heavily on my State.

As my colleagues know, it has long been my view that we have legitimate transportation needs that are going unmet, and that we ought to be doing a better job of using the Highway Trust Fund to address those needs. So my second point, Mr. President, would be that each Senator must consider carefully the manner in which the proposed new revenues would be utilized, both in terms of addressing national budgetary and transportation needs and in terms of the fairness of the package to our constituents.

We have unacceptably high levels of congestion in many of our cities; deteriorating highways that must be upgraded; and crumbling and unsafe bridges. We have areas that still need new or better highways if they are to be fully integrated into the national transportation system. These needs result in lost productivity; increased safety risks; and missed economic opportunities for areas and peoples who sorely need help. I might mention northeastern North Carolina as one such area, Mr. President. Northeastern North Carolina has not shared in the economic benefits that have been brought by our Interstate Highway System.

I suppose I could make a case that our needs in North Carolina are as severe as those in most any State, Mr. President. So I am going to want to do all I can to see that transportation-related provisions in the reconciliation package do not ignore those needs. I am going to want to make sure that those provisions are sound national policy, but they are also going to have to have the effect of helping my State more than hurting it.

Let me bring to the attention of my colleagues once again the fact that North Carolina, despite compelling highway needs, has consistently been sending a great deal of gasoline tax money out of State to subsidize highways and transit in other States. We have received back only about 85 cents on the dollar over the past 30 years, so we are one of the largest donor States along with Oklahoma and Texas.

Does this mean that we are so wealthy that we ought to be subsidizing other States year after year? I do not think so, Mr. President. We are doing OK, but we are not the wealthiest State. Does this mean that our roads and transit are in such good shape that we do not need our own tax money? It does not. We are proud of our roads, but we have needs there so compelling that the Governor and the legislature had to increase our State gas tax to about the highest level in the Nation to begin addressing those needs. And we are really just beginning on transit.

Perhaps, Mr. President, North Carolina has been supported by the other States with many other programs and should thus be happy to help those States with this program. Well, this is not the case. We are not a State that has received an overabundance of Federal assistance.

Mr. President, I do not want to dwell on this. The point is that there is an important question of fairness. We do need a national system and that does mean that some States must be donors and others must be recipients. I do not have any problem with that. We are a nation, and we must act to provide the greatest good for the greatest number. I do, however, object to the fact that our needs have been going unmet to a far greater extent than those of other States, and I do not want to see that situation worsened today.

There are positive and negative considerations associated with a gasoline tax. A gas tax is a powerful revenue raiser, with a well-established system in place. A gas tax can be utilized as a "user fee", where those who pay the taxes get corresponding benefits in terms of better roads or transit systems. A gas tax increase would probably provide substantial environmental benefits, and energy security benefits.

On the negative side, a gas tax that is not used to benefit those who pay it is highly regressive. Like any tax, it will have some negative economic effects. And, while U.S. gas taxes are considerably lower than those in most other nations, we cannot escape the fact the proposed increase will be particularly difficult at a time when gasoline prices are already going through the roof.

So this proposal presents difficult choices to begin with. A further complication is the fact that we are proposing to use the new revenue for deficit reduction. This means that those who purchase gasoline will be paying indirectly for programs that have nothing to do with transportation. They will not even be paying for energy security programs, or for programs that have anything to do with gasoline. This will violate the "user fee" concept that has long been our stated policy.

One might argue that we have been doing this anyway for some time by failing to appropriate the needed levels of money from the Highway Fund. Unexpended Trust Fund balances are accumulating interest, and this interest has long been used to disguise the deficit. My colleagues are well aware of my interest in an honest budget. Well, Mr. President, I do not know if using gasoline taxes directly for deficit reduction is more honest, but I do know that we have not done this before, and I do know that we have many unmet transportation needs that ought to be addressed before we start looking elsewhere with transportation revenues.

Let us examine the minimum allocation provisions in more detail, Mr. President. Despite some of what we have heard, there will really be no losers under this proposal. The current 9-cent tax would continue to be distributed under the 85 percent minimum allocation and the present formula. Only the proposed new revenues would be subject to the 95 percent minimum allocation. This means that donor States are still going to be donors, and recipient States are still going to be recipients.

The question is not winners against losers, Mr. President. If we strike the 95 percent minimum allocation, we will be taking winners and making them much bigger winners, and taking losers and making them much bigger losers. That is not fair, Mr. President. That is not the way to go.

In fact, even with the 95 percent minimum allocation, North Carolina would still be sending even more money out of State than we are at present. We would be losing 15 cents on the dollar on the old tax, and losing 5 more cents on the dollar on the new tax. This is not much to hang our hats on, but it is an absolute minimum as far as what needs to be done. If the 95-percent minimum is removed, North Carolina will lose about $50 million a year on top of what we are already losing.

Mr. President, I have already stated that North Carolina has the highest gas tax in the country, or very close to it. Any increase in the Federal gas tax is going to hurt our State collection efforts. It will affect our ability to meet an aggressive schedule to restore and upgrade our highways. We certainly cannot afford an increased Federal gas tax that will not grant a fair return to our state.

It is my personal view that, in these difficult times with the budget, we ought to be looking for every possible means of stretching limited Federal dollars. We ought to be encouraging State and local governments and the private sector to enter into partnerships with the Federal Government to get the most from our money. So we ought to reward those States that have increased their own tax effort for transportation purposes. This concept is consistent with the administration's interest in leveaging Federal funds, and I intend to actively pursue the idea during consideration of the Highway bill next year.

But North Carolina cannot afford a large Federal gas tax increase that diverts even more money away from our own urgent transportation needs than is the case under the current system. It will be difficult enough for me to support a gasoline tax increase to begin with. It will be impossible for me to support it without a fair minimum allocation.

GASOLINE TAX INCREASE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the gasoline tax increase in this package is the wrong tax at the wrong time. This tax increase comes on top of the Saddam Hussein gas price hike. It asks middle-income taxpayers to pay more as part of a deficit reduction package that does not ask the wealthiest members of our society to pay enough, especially in light of the fact that they were the chief beneficiaries of the 1980's.

I will vote in favor of the Symms amendment in order to open the way for consideration of a deficit reduction package which adheres to the principle of fundamental fairness to middle-income taxpayers. Among the changes that could be made in the reconciliation bill in order to achieve this goal, if the Symms amendment is adopted, are:

First, increasing the maximum income tax rate only for families making over $200,000 from 28 to 35 percent. This proposal would affect less than 1 percent of the taxpayers. It would set the maximum rate at the same level which President Reagan proposed in this first tax reform bill, although his proposal affected incomes above $70,000 and the proposal that I am making today would only affect family incomes above $200,000. This proposal would raise $60.4 bllion over 5 years.

Second, eliminating the increase in the Medicare premium payments and the Medicare deductible increases. This proposal would reduce revenues or increase spending in the reconciliation bill by $14.1 billion over 5 years.

Mr. President, these are the core elements of a deficit reduction package which would meet the test of fundamental fairness, and which we should work towards if the Symms amendment is adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, and I say to Members of the Senate, there will be no further roll call votes this evening. The Senate will be in tomorrow and on the bill at 9 a.m. so that we can complete action on this measure in sufficient time tomorrow to permit us to go to conference tomorrow. Therefore, Senators should be aware that rollcall votes and possible early in the morning and throughout the day. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GORE. Will the leader withhold of yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I withhold my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GORE. Will the leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wonder if it might be possible to suggest some structure for the first part of the consideration tomorrow. I know the Senator from Florida has been waiting patiently, and the Senator from Maryland, Senator MIKULSKI, and I have been waiting as well. Might it be possible to get some kind of an agreement that when we come back onto the bill that the order of business would be to take up the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and then to go to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Maryland? We are willing to do a time agreement of an hour equally divided.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would refer the Senator from Tennessee and others who have amendments, and there are a large number of Senators, to the managers who I believe will be here early tomorrow and be prepared to proceed and to set up the best and most expeditious way of dealing with the bill. I believe the appropriate course would be to discuss the matter with the managers first thing in the morning.

Mr. GORE. I am prepared to, of course, accept the judgment of the leader and the manager of the bill, my good friend and colleague, but may I get some kind of assurance that there will not be an effort on the part of the leaders to use up all of the remaining time so that those of us who have been patiently waiting to offer amendments will have to do so under procedures that do not afford any debate at all?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, of course, we will do our best to accommodate as many Senators as possible in that regard. I emphasized earlier this evening that I and the Republican leader tried to shorten the time for debate on some of the matters that were before us so that there could be the opportunity for others to offer amendments. Understandably, those who offer the amendments wish to discuss them. As frequently happens in the Senate, the debate went on longer than one would have anticipated at its beginning. I assure the Senator, and I assure the managers, who can speak for themselves, that every effort will be made to accommodate every Senator as possible.

Mr. GORE. We will be here at 9 o'clock sharp.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the leader of the Senate yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I wonder if it would be possible in the interest of fairness to get unanimous consent that with respect to any amendment there would be a time agreement that not more than a half hour will be allocated, 15 minutes on a side, so that as many amendments as possible could be heard? I think that would be fair to the Senator from Tennessee and many other Senators. I think that is a reasonable proposal. I wonder if anybody would object to it?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I think that is one of many responsible suggestions for proceeding that has been and will be made. I think the best course is for all interested to come in in the morning and meet with the managers and attempt to work out a procedure that provides the most fair and responsible and expeditious way of proceeding. I am certain the managers are committed to that and will be happy to consider the suggestion from the Senator from Ohio, the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, the suggestion of the Senator from Florida, and others in that regard.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand the time is running now on this bill. Might the leader make arrangements so that it is not, so we can move to something else? So we can get off it and not waste the time off the bill.

Mr. GRAMM. Why not let them debate it tonight?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, may I suggest that all Senators who wish to offer amendments should be here in the morning and meet with the managers to discuss the best way to proceed in the most fair and expeditious manner in an effort to accommodate as many Senators as possible. I know both the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee and the ranking member will do their very best to accommodate the interest of as many Senators as possible.

Mr. SASSER. If the majority leader will yield for one moment, as we got underway this morning, the distinguished Senator from Florida, Senator GRAHAM, was here wishing to present his amendment. A list was compiled, I think, by the distinguished majority and minority leader listing four amendments that would be in order to be taken up immediately. One of those amendments was the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Florida. The other three amendments have been dealt with today in one way or another.

So I hope that tomorrow morning we could proceed with the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Florida and make every effort to curtail debate so that as many amendments as possible can be taken up and debated. I might say to my colleagues that suddenly about 6 o'clock this evening, amendments started descending like a snowfall. The list of six amendments suddenly grew in the space of about 10 minutes to 22 amendments. So that gives us some problem.

I understand that some of these amendments perhaps will not be offered. Some of our colleagues I think have looked at what has happened to the amendments that have been offered so far. They have not been faring very well.

Additionally, some of the items that will be in other amendments have been discussed in the Conrad amendment to some extent and in the Symms amendment to some extent also. So there has been debate on facets or other amendments that will be introduced. So perhaps we can compress the time tomorrow morning and enter into an agreement so that all Senators may have an opportunity to speak for some limited time on their amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, earlier this evening I had requested of the distinguished majority leader that we go to the Executive Calendar because there are a number of State Department nominees that have been held for some time and that I felt we should move forward. I have been advised by the Senator who has the hold that he has been unable to reach someone by telephone and I think as a courtesy to him—I do not think he will object tomorrow if we can work out the problem. I would ask the majority leader if we could not take those up immediately after we dispose of the reconciliation bill tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I will be pleased to do that in accordance with the wishes of the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quourm call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A PATHETIC FORGERY IN PAKISTAN

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on November 20, 1989, I took the Senate floor to discuss an event which had occurred in the Indian election campaign. I did so because a pathetic forgery had been released to the press in an effort to tarnish the image of now Prime Minister V.P. Singh. The forgery was a letter purporting to show that Prime Minister Singh had received funds from the CIA. I said of this document:

> It is a tragic, transparent fraud, a palpable fraud, a contemptible fraud. I use that phrase with some care on the Senate floor * * * . I am sure that the world's largest democracy will not allow their votes to be affected by a transparent and pitiable fraud; pitiable, but no less despicable. Anything that puts in danger the judgment of the democratic electorate is an offense against free governments and free society everywhere.

Sadly this practice has now been repeated by persons in Pakistan. I have received a copy of a document which has been released in Pakistan with the transparent purpose of influencing the elections to be held there shortly. Every word that I said of the Indian forgery in November is applicable to this new forgery. Indeed. This new document is, if anything, an even more pitiable fraud. The document purports to be a letter written by Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto to Mr. Peter Galbraith, a staff member on the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations requesting that he work to cut off aid and oil to Pakistan and to encourage the Indian Army to "engage the Pakistan Army on the borders.* * *"

One need not read further than the letter's salutation to know with utter certainty that the letter is a fraud. Mr. Galbraith, a long-time friend of Prime Minister Bhutto, is stiffly addressed by his full name—rather than simply Peter—and his last name is misspelled. The misspelling so totally discredits the letter that the government-controlled newspaper the Pakistan Times corrected this obvious error when it published the text of the letter. The actual text of the letter is a laughable compilation of grammatical mistakes and tortured syntax. Barely a line exists without an egregious error which the Harvard and Oxford-educated Prime Minister Bhutto would have instantly noticed and corrected.

The contents of the letter may be laughable. The fact of its creation and distribution is not. As I stated last November, "Anything that puts in danger the judgment of the democratic electorate is an offense against free governments and free society everywhere." If this is the manner in which this election is being conducted, then the already grave doubts which exist in the Congress concerning its fairness will be strongly reinforced. This type of forgery has no place whatsoever in a state which wishes to be considered a democracy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two articles, one from the Pakistan Times which reproduces the text of the forged letter and one from the independent newspaper Dawn which analyzes its obvious flaws, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pakistan Times, Oct. 16, 1990]

BENAZIR ACCUSED OF ANTI-STATE ACTIVITIES

ISLAMABAD, Oct. 15: Bhutto family is involved in anti-state activities and the letter written to Peter Gailbraith by Ms. Bhutto is a vivid proof of it.

This was stated by Mr. Navid Malik Chairman, Pakistan Solidarity Front and Adviser to the IJI Chief, Mian Nawaz Sharif at a Press conference here this evening. He also distributed photocopies of a letter addressed to Peter Gailbraith which he claimed was written by the PPP co-chairperson, Benazir Bhutto.

About the authenticity of the letter, Mr. Malik said "if the document was not authentic, he was ready to face the penalty", he said "she was free to sue him in this regard."

He asked Ms. Benazir to explain her conduct in 24 hours otherwise, he would preceed on a recourse, which he did not specify.

He said that Ms. Benazir Bhutto started confrontation with the President, Army and the Judiciary. He bitterly criticised the policies of the PPP and said its leadership was ridiculing the honourable judiciary.

Mr. Malik demanded of the government to confiscate her passport but not to arrest her, as he said that IJI wanted to eliminate her politically.

He alleged that Bhutto family had in the past left the country when they were out of the power. He said that he had challenged Ms. Bhutto by writing a pamphlet when she was ruling the country asking her to sue him, if she was not guilty.

The following is the letter issued to the Press alleged to have been written by Ms. Bhutto:

Bilawal House, Karachi,
September 24, 1990.

DEAR PETER GAILBRAITH: I don't know how to thank you, for your so many favours to me and my family.

As you know that the orders of my dismissal were drafted in the JAG branch of the GHQ, as it was not possible for me to pull along with the army and they subverted my government.

I have already communicated to various friends in the Congress and especially Stephen Solarz to use their good offices with President Bush, so as to put maximum pressure on President Ishaq, and the Army in Pakistan, that they do not disqualify me from the elections, as it will be unjust and negation of all democratic principles for which we have struggled.

It would be most appropriate if military as well as economic assistance to Pakistan is stopped, and all the international agencies like the World Bank, IMF are told to squeeze the government of Pakistan, and if possible oil supply to Pakistan should be disrupted so that normal life in Pakistan comes to stand still.

As long as I was the Prime Minister, I kept a check on the nuclear device, but now I do not know what the plans of the government.

The suspension of F-16 and its spares will bring the army to its senses.

Dear Peter, please use your influence on V.P. Singh the Indian Prime Minister, to engage the Pakistan army on the borders, so that they do not impede my way.

I wish Rajiv Gandhi has been the Prime Minister of India, things regards have been easier. Thanking you and with warm records.

Sincerely yours,

BENAZIR BHUTTO.

[From Dawn, Oct. 16, 1990]

BENAZIR'S 'FAKE' LETTER ISSUED

ISLAMABAD, Oct. 15: Two controversial documents, alleged to have been signed by former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, were released to the Press by two IJI leaders at separate news conferences on Monday.

Special Assistant to the Prime Minister, Mr. Kamal Azfar released copies of a cheque signed by Ms. Bhutto and her mother, for stan amount 6.2 million, issued to daily Musawaat, the PPP official party paper.

Former Special Assistant to the Punjab Chief Minister, Mian Nawaz Sharif, Mr. Naveed Malik released a letter allegedly written by Ms. Bhutto to Mr. Peter Galbraith, a family friend of the Bhuttos' in the United States.

While the copy of the cheque issued to newsmen appeared genuine, the letter to Mr. Galbraith was immediately challenged by reporters attending Naveed Malik's news conference as a "forgery."

The letter, distributed by Naveed Malik, begins with "Dear Peter Galbraith," written in a handwriting which is totally different to the signature of Ms. Benazir Bhutto at the end. The spelling of Galbraith is also wrong.

Typed on a plain paper, the text contains a number of grammatical and spelling mistakes and ends with the date written in a typical clerical style: "dated: 24-9-1990."

Shortly after the letter was released, a former PPP Minister, Shahnaz Wazir Ali strongly denied its existence and said: "This is the crudest form of forgery that can be done to malign the former Prime Minister. This is character assassination at its worst and we shall sue any newspaper which publishes the contents of the letter."

The PPP leader said the signatures of Ms Bhutto, appearing at the end of the letter, had been copied from the Eid greetings card sent by the former Prime Minister to a large number of people, including journalists. The card also had signatures of Mr. Asif Ali Zardari.

Wazir Ali said Ms Bhutto had published a letter she had written to Mr. Peter Galbraith in her book "Daughter of the East" and it began with only "Dear Peter" and not "Dear Peter Galbraith" this clearly shows they have tried to forge it, she said.

The most incriminating portion of the alleged letter asks Mr. Galbraith to pressure President Bush to stop all aid to Pakistan, stop all oil supplies so that, "normal life in Pakistan comes to a standstill," and ask Indian Prime Minister V.P. Singh to "engage the Pakistan Army on the borders."

The address written on the top right corner begins with the words: Mrs. Benazir Bhutto, Bilawal House, Karachi.

"No educated person who is writing a letter would write Mr. or Mrs. before his or her name in such an important letter, let alone Oxford and Harvard-educated Benazir Bhutto," Shahnaz Wazir Ali said.

Ex-Prime Minister's lawyers on Monday night issued a legal notice to Mr. Naveed Malik, former Adviser of Punjab Chief Minister, stating that the letter he had circulated at his Press conference was a "total fabrication and forgery."

THE PROPOSED VETERANS BENEFITS AND HEALTH CARE AMENDMENTS OF 1990

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, last Wednesday, the Senate was witness to a very unusual event. For the first time in my memory—and I have been actively involved with veterans' issues since first coming to the Senate nearly 22 years ago—the Senate debated a motion to proceed to consideration of a veterans' bill. The bill is S. 2100, the proposed Veterans Benefits and Health Care Amendments of 1990, and the debate appears on pages S14874 through S14889 of the RECORD for October 10. As I noted during that debate, the Senate's normal procedure is to take up a veterans' bill and consider it and any amendments to it on their merits and then pass the best legislation we can fashion. It is very regrettable that we have thus far been prevented from doing that with respect to S. 2100.

Mr. President, during the debate last Wednesday, considerable confusion about the bill itself and what it contains was raised on the other side. At this point, I will not address the specific provisions of S. 2100 as reported to which objection has been raised. The debate on those matters can be left to when the bill and amendments to it are before the Senate. Today, I wish to clarify issues regarding the procedural and budgetary objections that were lodged against this bill. My hope is that, by addressing some of the points of confusion, we might be able to put those matters behind us and gain agreement to move forward on this very important bill.

SCOPE OF THE BILL

Mr. President, on a number of occasions during the debate, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] referred to the bill as a "simple COLA bill" with extraneous materials having been added to it. I find this characterization difficult to understand.

For a number of years—certainly dating back to the late 1970's when I first chaired the committee and continuing through the early 1980's, when Senator SIMPSON was the chairman and then through Senator MURKOWSKI's chairmanship and up to this year—our committee has regularly reported and brought to the floor each year an omnibus veterans' bill that included the annual COLA increase in VA disability programs. S. 2100 is the latest of these bills. I am surprised that anyone was expecting a simple COLA bill. On this point, I note that Senator SIMPSON, in a Dear Colleague letter dated September 19, indicated that the "Senate will shortly be taking up S. 2100, the omnibus veterans' legislation for this year." By last Wednesday, this understanding on this point seemed to have been forgotten.

As introduced, S. 2100 included a number of provisions in addition to the COLA, including ones relating to benefits for veterans exposed to radiation during their service, revisions in VA's disability rating schedule, a pilot program for mobile health care clinics, eligibility for prosthetic devices, VA insurance programs, and various other VA programs. S. 2100 was not a simple COLA bill when it was introduced or when it was considered by our committee.

NOTICE OF CONTENTS OF THE BILL

During the debate, it was also suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] that there was confusion among the members of the committee about the contents of S. 2100 at the time of the committee markup in June and July of this year. Specifically, Senator SIMPSON said that he knew "that the staff knows the exacting detail which was in the bill" but added that he "very much doubt[s] that others did." This is a remarkable statement. There was absolutely no suggestion by anyone, including my good friend from Wyoming, at the time of the markup that anyone was confused or uncertain about what was in S. 2100 as it was before the committee. Indeed, during the first day of our markup, Senator MURKOWSKI noted that the "overwhelming portion (of the committee print of S. 2100) has been the object of continuous dialog and revision long before we got here."

Mr. President, our committee met to mark up this legislation on June 28. In accordance with our committee rules, more than 72 hours in advance of the markup, a June 24 memorandum describing all of the provisions of the bill, and a draft of the committee print, were provided to each committee member. On June 26, 2 days before the beginning of the markup, the committee staff conducted a meeting at which staff of committee members were present, including the staff representative of the Senator from Wyoming. No one raised any question about understanding the content of the bill at that time and Senator SIMPSON's staff representative noted that the Senator might have amendments at the markup. The first day of markup was held on June 28 and then, at the request of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], a second day was held on July 12. Surely if any member of the committee had been concerned about understanding the contents of the bill, he had ample opportunity to express those concerns at some point before or during the 17-day period between the distribution of the June 24 memo and the July 12 conclusion of the markup.

TIMING AS A CONSIDERATION

Mr. President, my friend from Wyoming complained that the bill was being brought up late in the session. In his words, the provisions "deserve the careful attention of Members and not a hasty, half-attentive effort when that comes at the end of a session as it is tacked on to a must-pass piece of legislation."

As I discussed on Wednesday, the committee's markup of S. 2100 was completed on July 12 and the report was filed on July 19. Since the time of the filing of the reported bill, I have sought to arrange a reasonable time agreement to make prompt consideration of the bill possible. Unfortunately, the other side has been very slow to respond. In fact, it was not until September 25 that I was advised that the earlier, incomplete agreements we had worked on were not actually steps toward a complete reasonable time agreement. On that late date, I was first advised that the minority would not enter into any time agreement because the Senator from Wyoming, a member of the committee, would not agree to one.

The Senator from Wyoming, for whom I have great respect, has persisted in his refusal.

Then, on Thursday, October 4, we learned that the other side would not give consent to proceeding to the consideration of this measure.

Mr. President, had we been given a time agreement when we sought one in July and again in September, this bill could have been considered a month or more ago.

Mr. President, it is true that we are in the waning days of the 101st Congress. I deeply regret that, but I reject the suggestion that this state of affairs is in any sense deliberate on my part. I am ready to proceed to the bill now. I was ready on Wednesday. I am not the one blocking its consideration.

BUDGETARY ISSUES

Mr. President, there also seemed to be enormous confusion during the debate on Wednesday about the cost of S. 2100 and the relationship of those costs to the overall budget process that we are in the midst of at this time.

First and foremost, it is important to note that the principal cost of S. 2100 is the compensation COLA, which accounts for $392 million of the $563 million fiscal year 1991 outlay cost of the bill. No one is opposed to the COLA and both Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator SIMPSON expressed their strong support for it during the debate. Nevertheless, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming repeatedly castigated the bill on the grounds of its approximately $600 million price tag—even though he portrayed himself as a strong proponent of 70 percent of the costs.

The Senator from Wyoming also repeatedly charged that there was no way to pay for the costs of the bill. Thus, he alleged, "This is the new mode in the Veterans' Affairs Committee, start up a new entitlements program and you know we do not have the money to pay for it."

I deeply regret that my friend from Wyoming would level such an unfounded charge at me and my stewardship as committee chairman. I know he did not mean to make a personal attack, but I must respond. The entitlement provisions in the bill are fully within the budget act section 302(a) allocation to our committee under the fiscal year 1991 budget resolution. The bill as reported had offsetting savings that fully covered all entitlement costs above baseline. Cost is and has always been a serious concern of mine.

The allegation that S. 2100 as reported would create new entitlements is an overstatement and otherwise misleading. The legislation includes some modest expansions, totaling $27 million in fiscal year 1991, of existing entitlements. The bulk of the increases, accounting for $18 million in fiscal year 1991, a full two-thirds, were requested by either the Bush administration—$6 million for section 708(a) and (b)—and received solid backing from the committee's Republicans or by the committee's ranking minority member—$12 million for section 708(b). Only a small fraction of the entitlement outlays, $5 million for the radiation provisions in sections 111 and 112 have ever been criticized by any member of the committee—and those provisions were, in the main, supported by the administration.

The bill does include provisions with express or implied authorizations that would involve fiscal year 1991 outlays of $171 million if enacted and fully appropriated. These committee-approved provisions would provide valuable authorities for VA in meeting the needs of deserving and needy veterans. However, based on actions of the two bodies on the fiscal year 1991 VA-HUD appropriations bill, it is now clear that—except for funding for the provision to update VA's physicians' and dentists' special-pay authority—little or none of the funding will be provided in fiscal year 1991. Passage and enactment of this bill simply will not increase VA's fiscal year 1991 appropriations levels at this point.

To the extent that the authorizations are enacted and implemented in fiscal year 1991, the resources will come from internal realignments within otherwise available resources.

Thus, Mr. President, the entire range of budgetary arguments offered by the Senator from Wyoming failed to form any rational basis for opposition to consideration of this legislation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, no case was made for not proceeding to the consideration of S. 2100—other than a dislike of and opposition to certain provisions. I sincerely hope we can get to the merits of this bill and do so in the next day or so. That's what veterans deserve. And when we do, I trust that the debate will leave behind the misconceptions and confusion of last Wednesday.

THREATENED VETO OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS BILL

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this morning our friend, Secretary of State Baker, appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee to testify about the situation in the Middle East.

We had a colloquy during that appearance about a letter I had received from our good friend threatening a veto if a Senate bill calling for sanctions against international chemical weapons proliferation should prevail during the conference on the Export Administration Act, H.R. 3033 and S. 195.

Mr. President, the Secretary knows of my deep respect and affection for him. Yet I am baffled by the reasons which he puts forth to support a veto threat. After all, we are talking about a measure which has passed the Senate three times, including a rollcall vote of 92-0.

The Secretary's letter indicates a preference for the House version, calling it "supportive of our multilateral objectives." He believes that the House bill "would reinforce international multilateral efforts and demonstrate unified, bipartisan support."

Mr. President, I hope the Secretary understands that I am wholly supportive of the President's multilateral objectives. I am pleased that the Secretary is attempting to negotiate a broadbased multilateral treaty that will cover many kinds of advanced and nonconventional weapons.

But the Secretary should not forget that Senate bill is also bipartisan. It was introduced by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Commitee and me. We have worked hand-in-hand on it for almost 3 years. Moreover, it has the virtual unanimous support of Senators of both parties.

Lastly, it has the advantage that it can become effective just as soon as the conference report is approved and the President puts his signature to it. There is no need to wait 2 years, 3 years, 10 years, or however long it would take to negotiate painstakingly a multilateral accord.

Senators should understand that the Pell-Helms bill is effective because it does not depend for its enforcement upon international sanctions or the legal processes of other States. Its most powerful sanction is that it hits violators where it hurts most—in the pocketbook. The United States is the world's largest market. Every large corporation wants to sell here. What the Pell-Helms bill does is to deny the U.S. market to any corporation that sells technology, machinery, or supplies to a country that produces materials for chemical or biological warfare.

Mr. President, the fact is that the House bill is full of loopholes which will enable companies wishing to continue to trade in chemical and biological weapons technology to evade all effective sanctions.

This is unfortunate, for while the American taxpayer must spend literally millions of dollars to provide our troops with protections against Iraqi chemical weapons, those foreign companies which helped Iraq build these weapons have gone scot-free with their profits safely in their pockets.

Under both the House and Senate bills, before sanctions can be imposed upon a foreign company, the President must first determine that the company had knowingly and either materially or substantially assisted the chemical or biological weapons program of Iraq or certain other outlaw nations. This is not an easy standard, and whether a company has met this standard is left to the discretion and judgment of the President.

Yet, despite this provision of authority to the President, the House bill goes on to include two additional provisions which companies assisting the chemical weapons program of Iraq could utilize to avoid sanctions. Section 103(f) of the bill gives the President the additional authority to "waive the imposition of any sanction * * * if the President determines that such waiver is important to the national security interests of the United States."

With all due respect to the President, everyone knows that the State Department will invoke a waiver any chance it gets. Earlier this year, the State Department even permitted over $200 million in United States Government credits to go to Iraq by invoking a similar national security waiver.

Mr. President, these companies know that such a waiver provision makes sanctions legislation meaningless, and even if by chance they are caught trading chemical weapons with Iraq, they will get their own governments to weigh in with the State Department to see that any waiver is invoked.

In addition, there is a glaring loophole in the House bill which allows a foreign company to trade with Iraq but avoid sanctions simply by arranging their corporate structure in a manner designed to skirt the requirements of this language.

Under both bills, a company violating the statute is prohibited from selling in the United States for 24 months. The Senate bill applies the sanctions to the offending company, its parent, its subsidiaries, its affiliates, its successor company, and any subsidiaries or affiliates of the parent company.

Under the House bill, only the foreign company which assists the chemical weapons program of countries like Iraq is subject to sanctions. Not the parent company, not its subsidiaries nor its affiliates, nor the other subsidiaries of the parent would be sanctioned.

Large international conglomerates often set up their subsidiaries or affiliates to serve different and specific markets. Any clever corporate executive could set up five subsidiaries that sell principally to the United States and a sixth, separate subsidiary—the sole purpose of which is to sell chemical weapons to Iraq, and which does not now, nor intend to in the future, sell to the United States.

Under the Senate version, not only the parent corporation, but also the five subsidiaries selling to the United States, would become prohibited corporations because of the poison gas sales of the sixth subsidiary to Iraq. The House version would be meaningless, because only the poison gas subsidiary would be proscribed. The other five subsidiaries could keep on selling to the United States, thereby benefiting the parent corporation, which establishes and benefits from the policies of its poison gas subsidiary.

I hope these are not the reasons why the Secretary thinks the Senate version is too rigid. In fact, the Senate version is very tightly drawn so that it applies sanctions only to violators who meet specific norms. I cannot imagine why our good friend, the Secretary, or the President, would ever want the flexibility to exempt a corporation that is guilty of proliferation of chemical and biological weapons and technology.

Therefore, Mr. President, I urge the Secretary of State to reconsider his opposition. He also mentions some problems in the Senate bill that he believes might arise from the so-called legislative veto issue decided in the case of INS versus Chadha. However, I am pleased that the conference has already tentatively agreed upon language that would cure this defect. I hope the Secretary of State will study the new language.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the letter of the Secretary of State to me, dated October 16, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, October 16, 1990.

Hon. JESSE HELMS,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR JESSE: You and your colleagues will soon address differing House and Senate chemical weapons (CW) sanctions legislation (H.R. 3033 and S. 195) in the context of a conference on the Export Administration Act. I want to take this opportunity to convey directly to you the Administration's position on these bills; we have conveyed specific comments to your staff on the differences in the two bills.

The President has taken the lead in seeking multilateral agreement on a global and comprehensive ban on CW and on stemming their proliferation in the meantime. We have already achieved a high degree of international cooperation in this effort. Further strengthening of this cooperation, including achieving a CW convention containing provisions for sanctions, presents a difficult challenge. The Administration welcomes strong bipartisan congressional support for this important national objective and believes that the Congress can help by enacting legislation that strengthens our diplomatic hand. This requires legislation based on international cooperation rather than unilateral fiat.

The House version of H.R. 3033 is supportive of our multilateral objectives; its endorsement by the conference committee would reinforce international multilateral efforts and demonstrate unified, bipartisan support. The House bill provides for meaningful sanctions on CW users and against companies that support CW programs, yet enables the President to target these sanctions for maximum effectiveness, taking into account the entire range of our national security and foreign policy interests.

The Senate version, which provides for mandatory sanctions, does not give the President sufficient flexibility to impose or waive sanctions based on a consideration of the nation's security interests. In addition, one provision of the Senate bill requires certain determinations and, in some cases, follow-on actions by the President in response to requests from relevant committee chairmen. As formulated, this provision is unconstitutional, as it is inconsistent with INS v. Chadha.

The Administration is prepared to endorse a conference report that supports multilateral cooperation in stemming the use and proliferation of CW and provides adequate discretion to the President in determining whether and which sanctions to impose. However, the President's senior advisors will recommend that he veto a CW sanctions bill that does not take account of these concerns.

We urge the conferees to agree on a bill that the President can sign. Such a bill would bolster the President's authority to apply sanctions, while providing the flexibility to do so in a manner consistent with overall U.S. national interests.

OMB advises there is no objection to submission of this report to Congress. Enactment of CW sanction legislation (e.g., Senate-passed S. 195) that does not provide adequate Presidential discretion would not be in accord with the President's program.

With best personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. BAKER III.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination: Calendar 1016, Jeanne S. Archibald, to be General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury; I further ask unanimous consent that the nominee be confirmed, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination considered and confirmed is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

Jeanne S. Archibald, of Virginia, to be General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. McCathran, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

S.J. Res. 566. Joint resolution acknowledging the sacrifices that military families have made on behalf of the Nation and designating November 19, 1990, as "National Military Families Recognition Day"; and

S.J. Res. 669. Joint resolution to salute and congratulate the people of Poland as they commemorate the two-hundredth anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Constitution on May 3, 1991.

At 6:33 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5759) to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to clarify the application of such act to employee group health plans.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2104) to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3095) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to make improvements in the regulation of medical devices, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. DINGELL, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. LENT, and Mr. MADIGAN as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House has passed the bill (S. 1859) to restructure repayment terms and conditions for loans made by the Secretary of the Interior to the Wolf Trap Foundation for the Performing Arts for the reconstruction of the Filene Center in Wolf Trap Farm Park in Fairfax County, VA, and for other purposes; with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House has passed the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 324) to designate June 3 through 9, 1990, as "Week of the National Observance of the 50th Anniversary of World War II"; with amendments, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House has passed the bill (S. 358) to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to change the level, and preference system for admission, of immigrants to the United States, to provide for administrative naturalization, and for other purposes, with amendments; it insists upon its amendments to the bill, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on the Judiciary, for consideration of the Senate bill and the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. BROOKS, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. FRANK, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. MAZZOLI, Mr. FISH, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. MCCOLLUM, and Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia.

From the Committee on Education and Labor, for consideration of section 113 and title V of the Senate bill, and sections 103, 106, 112-113, 311-312, 314(e), and 315 of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. GOODLING, and Mr. BALLENGER.

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of section 110 of the Senate bill, and modification committed to conference: Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Mr. STARK, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. VANDER JAGT.

From the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, for consideration of title VI of the Senate bill, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. GILMAN.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3789) to amend the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to extend programs providing urgently needed assistance for the homeless, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, for consideration of House bill, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. GONZALEZ, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. VENTO, Mr. WYLIE, and Mrs. ROUKEMA.

From the Committee on Education and Labor, for consideration of House bill, and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. GOODLING, and Mr. BARTLETT.

From the Committee on Energy and Commerce, for consideration of House bill, and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. DINGELL, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. LENT, and Mr. MADIGAN.

From the Committee on Government Operations, for consideration of House bill, and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. CONYERS, Mrs. COLLINS, MR. OWENS of New York, Mr. HORTON, and Mr. NIELSON of Utah.

From the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, for consideration of House bill, and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia, and Mr. STUMP.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 486) to amend the Defense Production Act of 1950 to revitalize the defense industrial base of the United States, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, for consideration of the House bill, and section 1, titles I, II, and III, and sections 501(a) and 501(b)(2) of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. LAFALCE, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. VENTO, Mr. TORRES, Mr. KANJORSKI, Mrs. PATTERSON, Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. ROTH, Mrs. SAIKI, and Mrs. ROUKEMA.

From the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, for consideration of title IV and section 501(b)(1) of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. LAFALCE, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. VENTO, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. MCCOLLUM, and Mr. DREIER of California.

From the Committee on Energy and Commerce, for consideration of section 8 of the House bill and sections 137, 403, 404, and 405 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. DINGELL, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. LENT, and Mr. RINALDO.

From the Committee on the Judiciary, for consideration of sections 7 and 8 of the House bill, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. BROOKS, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. FRANK, Mr. FISH, and Mr. JAMES.

From the Committee on Government Operations, for consideration of sections 211 and 212 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. CONYERS, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. HORTON, and Mr. KYL.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

At 11:02 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills:

H.R. 4757. An act to provide for the extension of certain authority for the Marshal of the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court Police; and

H.R. 5579. An act to amend section 28(w) of the Mineral Leasing Act, and for other purposes.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill, received from the House of Representatives for concurrence on October 15, 1990, was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 5269. An act to control crime.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, October 17, 1990, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled joint resolutions:

S.J. Res. 304. Joint resolution to designate October 17, 1990, as "National Drug-Free Schools and Communities Education and Awareness Day";

S.J. Res. 317. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 14, 1990, through October 20, 1990, as "National Radon Action Week";

S.J. Res. 342. Joint resolution designating October 1990 as "Ending Hunger Month"; and

S.J. Res. 349. Joint resolution designating October 1990 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month".

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments:

H.R. 2566. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to transfer all right, title, and interest of the United States in certain property on San Juan Island, Washington, to those persons who own such property because of an erroneous survey (Rept. No. 101-535).

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, without amendment:

H.R. 4567. A bill to authorize an exchange of lands in South Dakota and Colorado (Rept. No. 101-536).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. LIEBERMAN:

S. 3212. A bill to establish the Industry Development for Eastern Europe Foundation; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. DASCHLE:

S. 3213. A bill to clarify that the inspection of meat and poultry products offered for import into the United States is to be conducted by United States personnel and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture Nutrition and Forestry.

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 3214. A bill to repeal the Federal Employers' Liability Act, to provide for coverage of railroad employees' injury claims under individual state worker compensation programs and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

By Mr. NUNN (for himself and Mr. WARNER) (by request):

S. 3215. A bill to authorize the transfer by lease of a specified naval landing ship dock to the Government of Brazil; considered and passed.

By Mr. SYMMS (for Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS)):

S. 3216. A bill to designate the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Charleston, South Carolina, as the "Ralph H. Johnson Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center; considered and passed.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MCCAIN):

S. 3217. A bill to authorize additional positions for the National Museum of the American Indian of the Smithsonian Institution and for other purposes; to the Commitee on Rules and Administration and the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, jointly by unanimous consent.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

S.J. Res. 380. A joint resolution to designate February 14, 1991 as "Flag Wavers Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT FOR EASTERN EUROPE FOUNDATION FUND

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am introducing today legislation to create the Industrial Development for Eastern Europe [IDEE] Foundation. IDEE is modeled after the highly successful Binational Industrial Research and Development [BIRD] Foundation. The BIRD foundation was established in 1977 to develop a cooperative relationship between American and Israeli high tech industries. BIRD has an income of approximately $10 million a year most of which comes from its $110 million endowment. With its income, it shares the expense—50-50—with an Israeli-American venture trying to develop and commercialize a nondefense technical product or process.

In the last decade, BIRD has supported over 250 joint ventures, and over 100 of these ventures led to sales of about $1.5 billion. BIRD's success is due to a number of factors, not the least of which is the advanced state of Israeli research and development. The nations of Eastern Europe should not be able to take advantage of joint venture opportunities with American entrepreneurs.

If we are to truly help Eastern Europe as we have promised for over four decades, then we must, as Churchill said, "* * * pass with relief from the tossing sea of Cause and Theory to the firm ground of Result and Fact." These nations, from Poland to Hungary to Czechoslovakia, are struggling to build democracy and a free market system. For over 40 years, we have promised them that we would come to their aid if they would rise up against their communist oppressors. They have succeeded beyond our expectations, but we are not living up to our end of the bargain.

We are understandably concerned about our domestic economic problems. There is no money to spare in our budget. We must, therefore, develop aid programs that make efficient use of our limited resources. The IDEE foundation is one such proposal.

IDEE, like BIRD, would receive its operating expenses from the interest on its endowment, as well as any royalties it may receive from successful projects. Contributions to IDEE would be made by all member nations not just the United States.

An initial contribution of $25 million from the United States would be complemented by a contribution of $25 million each from Eastern European nations wishing to be members. These contributions would be made in three tranches and could be made in local currency. The three Eastern European nations best able to take advantage of IDEE initially are Hungary, Poland, and Czechoslovakia.

IDEE would be governed by a board which would control its activities. The board would consist of representatives from the U.S. State Department, Treasury, Department of Commerce and their counterparts from the other member nations. An executive director, appointed by the board, would be in charge of the day to day activities of IDEE. In addition, an advisory council consisting of representatives from private industry would help the board and the executive director and his or her staff evaluate projects and make recommendations on investment opportunities.

I have suggested that IDEE be headquartered in a neutral location close to the three Eastern European nations that will be members of IDEE. It is important that IDEE be located in the region in order to have a hands on working relationship with the private sector of its member nations.

IDEE will only need a one time appropriation since its projects will be funded from the interest on its endowment and from royalties. While the primary purpose of IDEE is to foster the growth of high tech industry in the nations of Eastern Europe, there are clear advantages for American firms willing to become involved with Eastern European entrepreneurs, engineers, and scientists. American investors will be able to share in any profits and innovations developed through joint ventures.

It is important that as we continue to look for more cost effective ways to aid the nations of Eastern Europe and throughout the developing world, that we make every effort to develop programs that will be of some benefit to American businesses. The only way that we will be able to get continued support for funding for such programs is by making certain that the American business community will accrue some benefit from these programs. We can no longer afford to offer aid without concern for return. We simply do not have the resources. IDEE embodies the principle of helping both American businesses while at the same time helping the private sector of its Eastern European member nations.

Finally, it is my hope that IDEE will develop a close working relationship with BIRD, facilitating closer contact between the Israeli private sector, the private sector of those Eastern European nations belonging to IDEE, and the American business community. A close relationship between these nations is to everyone's advantage. Since BIRD has been a tremendous success, it would also be very useful to have the board and staff of IDEE to work closely together with the BIRD staff to make certain that IDEE is equally successful.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3212

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Industrial Development for Eastern Europe Foundation Act".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT AND PURPOSES OF THE FOUNDATION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established the Industrial Development for Eastern Europe Foundation (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Foundation"). It is the sense of the Congress that the President should negotiate with the governments of foreign nations for participation by such nations, consistent with section 4, in carrying out the activities of the Foundation.

(b) PURPOSES.—The Purposes of the Foundation are—

(1) to promote and support joint, nondefense, industrial research and development activities of mutual benefit to the nations involved with the Foundation and its activities;

(2) to develop nondefense high technology industry in these natons, particularly through joint and cooperative projects between firms in participating nations;

(3) to aid with the modernization of the economies of these nations by helping them to create a more sophisticated manufacturing base; and

(4) to help these nations to become economically viable by providing benefits to their industrial sector, particularly through joint projects.

SEC. 3. FUNCTIONS AND POWERS OF THE FOUNDATION.

(a) The Foundation shall support and promote the purposes stated in section 3(b) and research and development activities which—

(1) involve all applied science activities in the process through which an innovation becomes a commercial product; and

(2) assist with product engineering and manufacturing start up.

(b) The Foundation shall be a legal entity and shall have all the powers necessary to carry out its objective, including the power to—

(1) promote and support, by funding or otherwise, joint industrial research and development projects (hereafter in this Act referred to as "projects"), in accordance with subsection (c);

(2) make loans and grants;

(3) enter into contracts;

(4) provide services;

(5) acquire, hold, administer, and dispose of real and personal property;

(6) receive, hold, and disburse funds, and open bank accounts;

(7) accept contributions of property, funds, and services; and

(8) employ personnel.

(c)(1) Projects shall be undertaken and otherwise supported through direct investment and joint ventures in order to develop the more advanced technology sectors of the economies of Foundation member nations.

(2) All technology and products developed as a result of the work of the Foundation may be freely transferable among the nations participating in a project.

(3) More than one member nation of the Foundation must participate in a project.

(4) All projects undertaken must be in compliance with the export control laws of the United States.

(d) Nothing in this Act may be construed to prejudice other arrangements for scientific cooperation between the United States and other nations belonging to the Foundation.

SEC. 4. BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

(a) A Board of Governors (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Board"), shall be the governing body of the Foundation and shall be responsible for determining the Foundation's program, including the fields of cooperative research which will be supported by the Foundation, and the Foundation's financial and managerial policies. Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Board shall have the authority to—

(1) adopt bylaws and rules of procedure;

(2) establish regulations defining the policies, organization, and procedures of the Foundation;

(3) appoint an Executive Director;

(4) approve the annual budget and research program of the Foundation indicating, among other things, the research and development fields to which priority is to be given;

(5) accept contributions of property, funds, and services;

(6) establish the principal office of the Foundation in a neutral location;

(7) approve project and other expenditures by the Foundation and agreements pertaining to projects to be funded by the Foundation; and

(8) exercise and delegate any other power of the Foundation not otherwise assigned by this Act.

(b) The Board shall consist of—

(1) the Secretary of State or his designee;

(2) the Secretary of Commerce or his designee;

(3) the Secretary of Treasury or his designee; and

(4) a representative from the Foreign Ministry, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Trade and Industry, and the national science foundation or its equivalent from the governments of Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia.

(c) Each other East European country shall be eligible for membership in the Foundation whenever the Board determines that such country has made sufficient progress toward marketization, democratization, and as long as its government is not in violation of section 502B of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

(d) The chairman of the Board shall be a United States national and shall serve for a one year term. The chairmanship shall rotate among the three Board members who are United States nationals.

(e) The Board shall meet at least twice a year, but meetings of the Board may be held at such times and places as the Board may from time to time determine.

(f) The Board shall act by a vote of at least two-thirds of its entire membership.

(g) Members of the Board shall serve without compensation from the Foundation, but the Board shall authorize the payment by the Foundation of the necessary expenses of any members in attending Board meetings and in performing other official duties for the Foundation. Acceptance of such payments by Board members of the Foundation for this purpose shall not be deemed in violation of Ethics in Government Act for the purposes of carrying out this section.

(h) The Board shall provide for annual audits by independent auditors of the accounts of the Foundation. The reports of such audits, which shall be submitted to all member governments, shall contain certification as the accounts of the Foundation and evaluate the Foundation's internal control and auditing systems.

SEC. 5. ADVISORY COUNCIL.

(A) An Advisory Council (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Council"), shall act in an advisory capacity to the Board and the staff of the Foundation. The Council shall—

(1) help the Board and the Foundation staff evaluate projects; and

(2) make proposals as to which sectors of member nation economies offer the best opportunity for a favorable return on an investment.

(b) Recommendations made by the Council to the Board and the staff of the Foundation shall not be binding.

(c) The Council shall consist of three members from the business and finance community from each nation belonging to the Foundation. In the case of the United States, the President shall appoint the members.

(d) The chairmanship of the Council shall change on a yearly basis, rotating among the members of the panel and alternating among member countries.

(e) The Council shall meet at least twice a year. To the extent practical, it shall meet at the same time and place as the Board.

(f) Members of the Council shall serve without compensation from the Foundation, but the Board shall authorize the payment by the Foundation of necessary expenses of any members of the Council attending Council meetings and in performing other official duties for the Foundation.

SEC. 6. STRUCTURE OF THE FOUNDATION.

(a)(1) The Foundation shall be administered by an Executive Secretariat. The Executive Secretariat shall be headed by an Executive Director, who is a United States citizen, and his staff, which shall—

(A) act as a liaison to the Board; and

(B) coordinate the activities of the Executive Secretariat and the Board.

(2) There shall be three Deputy Directors one each for Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia who shall evaluate projects from each nation, making recommendations to the Board and the Executive Secretariat as to whether or not the Foundation shall support the project; and

(3) Additional Deputy Directors shall be created as more nations join the Foundation.

(b)(1) The Executive Director shall be the chief executive officer of the Foundation. He shall be responsible for the operations and staff of the Foundation, and act in accordance with the policies, directives, and delegation of the Board.

(2) The Executive Director shall employ, oversee, and dismiss the members of the professional administrative staff subject to the approval of the Board.

(3) The Executive Director shall, among other things—

(A) evaluate proposals for projects submitted to the Foundation and prepare and submit recommendations and draft agreements concerning project proposals to the Board for its approval;

(B) prepare and submit to the Board for its approval an annual budget and research program, including long-range plans for use of the Foundation's resources;

(C) prepare and submit to the Board for its approval an annual report, including an audited financial statement, on the activities of the Foundation, and

(D) implement decisions of the Board.

(4) Any power of the Executive Director under this Act or delegated to him by the Board may be delegated by him to other officers of the Foundation, except as otherwise prescribed by the Board.

(5) The Executive Director may obtain assistance from outside professionals and experts for the purposes of evaluating proposals and auditing and monitoring projects sponsored by the Foundation. These professionals and experts may be given compensation by the Foundation for services rendered, as approved by the Board.

(6) The Executive Director shall be permitted to organize various activities, such as consultant visits, information exchanges, and similar activities, to facilitate the achievement of the Foundation's objective. The Executive Director shall be given a budget approved by the Board to undertake these activities.

(7) The Executive Director shall maintain an appropriate system of internal control, including books and records which reflect the transactions of the Foundation and show the current financial condition of the Foundation. Such system shall include adequate internal financial and operational audits. The books, records, and internal audit reports shall be available for review by authorized representatives of governments involved with the Foundation.

SEC. 7. OPERATIONS OF THE FOUNDATION.

(a) The Foundation's operations shall consist mainly of the selection, approval, and monitoring of projects funded in whole or in part by the Foundation. All proposals for such projects shall be submitted through the Executive Director to the Board for approval.

(b) Each proposal considered by the Board shall—

(1) be submitted by Foundation member entities;

(2) demonstrate the technical and economic feasibility of the project;

(3) contain evidence that the applicant is capable of carrying out the project, either alone or through the partial subcontracting to universities, industrial research institutes, or other qualified entities; and

(4) indicate that the applicant will contribute, from its own financial resources or resources available to it, some portion of the financial resources required to carry out the project.

(c) Each proposed project considered by the Board shall—

(1) propose a tangible, direct benefit for the national economies of Foundation member nations, such as an increase in exports, value added or new markets;

(2) be of interest to Foundation member nations' industry;

(3) be of general interest to an entire industrial field;

(4) directly or indirectly contribute to additional development of products, processes, or markets; and

(5) have tangible benefits for nations involved with a project.

(d) For purposes of subsection (c)(5), a project having a tangible benefit is one that—

(1) is submitted by one or more Foundation member firms or a joint venture between a United States firm and a member nation firm;

(2) will require expenditures for goods and services in nations involved with the project; and

(3) meets any other criteria established by the Board.

SEC. 8. FINANCING OF THE FOUNDATION.

(a) The original endowment of the Foundation shall consist of the following:

(1) an initial contribution of $28,000,000 by the United States; and

(2) in order to be a member nation of the Foundation, each participating nation shall be required to contribute to the Foundation the equivalent of $25,000,000, to be paid in three installments, as follows:

(A) $5,000,000 to be paid one year after the Foundation begins operations.

(B) $8,000,000 to be paid 2 years after the Foundation begins operations.

(C) $12,000,000 to be paid 3 years after the Foundation begins operations.

(D) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, payments to the Foundation may be made in lieu of the repayment of official debt owed to the United States Government.

(E) Payments may be made in local currency.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $28,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 for the purposes of making the United States contribution to the Foundation described in subsection (a)(1). Funds appropriated pursuant to the preceding sentence are authorized to remain available until expended.

(c) An endowment of $25,000,000 shall be deposited in an account or accounts in a bank or banks agreed to by Foundation member nations, and shall earn interest at prevailing market or LIBOR rates.

(d) Income shall be deposited in the bank until used.

(e) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by subsection (b), $3,000,000 shall be used for initial administrative expenses.

(f) Investment and other income of the Foundation shall remain available for the operation of the Foundation and for carrying out its activities.

SUMMARY OF THE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT FOR EASTERN EUROPE FOUNDATION ACT

Section 1: Short title.

Section 2: Establishment and Purposes of the Foundation.

The foundation will develop nondefense high tech industry in the nations of Eastern Europe that belong to the foundation.

Section 3: Functions and Powers of the Foundation.

The foundation will make loans and grants, as well as accept contributions in order to be able to carry out its function of funding joint ventures between its member nations.

Section 4: Board of Governors.

The foundation will be governed by a Board of Governors consisting of representatives from the United States Department of State, Treasury, and Commerce and their equivalents from other member nation governments. In addition to setting policy guidelines, the board will also approve all joint venture projects.

Section 5: Advisory Council.

The Advisory Council will be made up of three members of the private sector from the business and finance community from each of its member nations. It will help the board with its evaluation of projects and joint venture opportunities.

Section 6: Structure of the Foundation.

The Foundation will be run by an Executive Director, who shall establish an Executive Secretariat that will be responsible for the day to day running of the foundation.

Section 7: Operations of the Foundation.

The principle function of the foundation shall be to select, approve, and monitor projects funded by the foundation.

Section 8: Financing of the Foundation.

The foundation will be funded of an initial appropriation of $25 million from the United States and contributions of $25 million from each other member nation, to be paid in three tranches. These contributions can be made in local currency.

By Mr. DASCHLE:

S. 3213. A bill to clarify the inspection of meat and poultry products offered for import into the United States is to be conducted by U.S. personnel, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

INSPECTION OF IMPORTED PRODUCTS BY UNITED STATES PERSONNEL

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the integrity of U.S. meat and poultry inspection laws is under attack by the Department of Agriculture, the agency assigned to enforce these same laws.

I am introducing legislation today to clarify U.S. inspection laws. Representatives BYRON DORGAN of North Dakota and PAT WILLIAMS of Montana are introducing similar legislation in the House.

The legislation is intended to prevent an interpretation of these laws that would undermine the confidence of American consumers and producers in the safety and wholesomeness of our food supply.

The bill makes it clear that certain inspections required by U.S. meat and poultry inspection laws must be conducted by U.S. inspectors. This would seem obvious, but not to USDA. The Department is proposing a rule to end border inspections of meat and poultry products from Canada offered for importation into the United States. The rule is based on an interpretation that U.S. law permits the Secretary to delegate these inspection responsibilities to foreign inspectors. As I have stated on previous occasions, this proposal is not consistent with U.S. law. Its legality has been questioned by the General Accounting Office and the USDA Office of General Counsel.

The proposed change in regulations means that United States inspectors will no longer conduct random inspections to check compliance with United States food safety and quality laws of Canadian meat and poultry products offered for import into the United States. The immediate proposal is for a 1-year experiment under the so-called "open border" agreement between the United States and Canada. At the end of the year, the experiment will be evaluated and the agreement permanent.

The comment period on the proposed rule closed September 5. USDA received more than 2,000 comments on the rule, many negative. Nevertheless, USDA plans to disregard these comments and go ahead with the rule.

Representatives DORGAN and WILLIAMS and I wrote to Secretary Yeutter to urge that he withdraw the proposed rule. Furthermore, we urged that USDA improve the current inspection procedures in three ways: First, determine why large amounts of meat from Canada are not meeting United States standards when it enters at the North Dakota and Montana inspection stations; second, evaluate the current Canadian meat inspection system, and document this evaluation, to provide a sound basis for possible future experiments in relaxed inspection procedures; and third, reinstate the system, which was abandoned in 1988, that made all shipments of Canadian meat into the United States subject to border inspections. We have not received a response from the Secretary.

Mr. President, the open border experiment is a dramatic departure from current inspection procedures. It is disturbing that such a sweeping action has been considered and proposed without broader public discussion.

The manner in which USDA has handled this agreement suggests that USDA does not believe the proposals can withstand public scrutiny. The agreement appears designed more to achieve political ends, rather than assure the safety of the U.S. food supply, which is the primary responsibility of FSIS. As one industry observer has noted. "The USDA gave up consumer protection for free trade."

However, free trade in this case is a one-way street. It is not clear that any parties other than the Canadian meat and poultry industries benefit under this proposal, certainly not American producers, processors or least of all, American consumers. USDA has made sweeping concessions to the Canadians without any serious assurance of reciprocal concessions from the Canadians on inspection issues, or other issues of concern to the United States meat and poultry industry.

EQUIVALENCY

The agreement was made on the grounds that the Canadian inspection system is equivalent to our own. The General Accounting Office [GAO], based on its report issued July 1990, testified at the July 12 hearing that USDA lacked adequate documentation for GAO, or any party, for that matter, to independently review the USDA determination of equivalency of the two inspection systems.

Equivalency is a critical issue, because under the open border experiment, the determination of equivalency becomes the only assurance that Canadian meat and poultry products are safe and wholesome for American consumers.

FSIS procedures with regard to Canada have been an issue in the past. In light of past problems, it is not appropriate to proceed with relaxed regulations until it is clear these problems have been resolved. In 1987 and 1988, prior to the implementation of the Free-Trade Agreement, the USDA Office of the Inspector General [OIG] and the GAO issued reports critical of the FSIS meat import inspection procedures. The OIG concluded that FSIS did not have reasonable assurance that systemic problems in foreign inspection systems were detected and corrected. Therefore, according to the OIG, an increased risk exists that products not meeting U.S. standards are exported to the United States.

In response to these reports, FSIS announced in 1989 that it would inspect Canadian meat imported to the United States at the border. Administrator Crawford said at that time that implementation of the FTA would not alter the new regulation. "Whether or not the FTA is adopted, import reinspection of Canadian products will continue to be conducted by United States inspectors," Mr. Crawford wrote in a letter announcing the border inspections. One year later, FSIS is reversing this stand with no evidence that improvements in either FSIS or Canadian procedures justify such an action. If anything, the evidence calls for a more cautious approach. Furthermore, the U.S. Senate is on record as not accepting FSIS application of the "the same as" requirement of the Poultry Products Inspection Act with respect to foreign inspection systems. Section 1979 of the Food, Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act, S. 2830, passed by the Senate on July 27, 1990, states that the U.S. Senate considers that the regulation promulgated by the FSIS, 54 FR 43948, with respect to poultry products offered for importation into the United States "does not reflect the intention of the Congress of the United States." The section urges FSIS to repeal the October 30, 1989, regulation and promulgate a new regulation reflecting the intention of the Congress.

Equivalency is also important as a trade issue. The FSIS is likely to respond that trade matters are not under FSIS authority and, therefore, not relevant to the proposed rule. However, these issues are within the authority of the USDA and the administration. The FSIS should not have been granted the authority to conduct negotiations toward an agreement of this nature without consideration of outstanding trade issues with Canada. Having overlooked the relationship between these issues and the open border agreement, the administration has revealed a disturbing lack of coordination with respect to trade policy that may require a legislative remedy.

Testimony presented at the July 12 hearing showed that there are significant differences in inspection and grading standards and procedures that put our processors and producers at a competitive disadvantage. These differences are not mentioned in the open border agreement, and no provision is made to seek further actions on the part of the Canadians to end these differences.

For example, the witness representing the National Pork Producers Council at the July 12 hearing noted that Canada permits the use of two drugs, Dimetridazole and Ipronidazole, that are not approved in the United States. These drugs are used in Canada to treat livestock and poultry diseases, but the United States Food and Drug Administration has not approved these products for use in the United States because it is believed that the drugs may be linked to cancer. No action is proposed in the agreement or the proposed rule to resolve this disparity.

USDA offers in defense of its judgment that the Canadian inspection system is equivalent to that of the United States but the Canadian system is more like our system than that of any other country in the world. That is not a satisfactory justification. Comparisons between the Canadian system and other countries' systems tell us little about the differences between the United States and Canadian systems. Whether or not the Canadian system is more like our own system is beside the point. The critical issue is whether USDA can assure consumers that the Canadian system is equivalent to the United States system.

The combination of these issues—the past problems in the FSIS equivalency review procedures, the GAO's findings regarding the lack of documentation, and the trade-related disparities—leads to the conclusion that the FSIS is on thin ice with respect to the issue of equivalency. I urge USDA to adopt the recommendations contained in the July 1990 GAO report that the FSIS be directed to review and document the equivalency of the Canadian inspection system, and that the FSIS investigate, as part of the equivalency review, the reasons for the high rejection rates in 1989 for Canadian products offered for import to the United States. I also urge the USDA to consider other factors in this review, such as the economic advantages that differences between the United States and Canadian inspection and grading systems may give to the meat and poultry industry of one country over that of the other.

THE AGREEMENT AND U.S. LAW

The GAO, in its July 1990 report, said that its review identified several legal and policy issues regarding the open border proposal:

From a legal perspective, there is a question of whether the open border proposed under the Free Trade Agreement conflicts with the requirements of U.S. meat inspection laws and whether a legislative change is necessary. The United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-449) specifies (section 102(a)) that "no provision of the Agreement, nor the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance, which is in conflict with any law of the United States shall have effect." FSIS program officials have raised a possible legal issue about whether legal authority exists to permanently establish an open border or whether FSIS needs to ask the Congress to amend the Federal Meat Inspection Act. Before the open border agreement, the head of FSIS' International Programs office told us that port-of-entry inspection of Canadian meat imports was required under FSIS' statutes.

This issue remains unresolved and is further confounded by the opinion of the USDA Office of General Counsel [OGC]. According to the OGC, the agreement was made and signed without any consultations with the General Counsel as to whether or not the agreement is consistent with U.S. law. The agreement was signed contingent upon the clearance of the General Counsel. OGC says that as of May 18, such clearance had not been sought or obtained. It is not clear that such clearance has been granted to this date. If the agreement is contingent on General Counsel clearance, this raises the question of whether, without such clearance, there is an agreement that is enforceable. Furthermore, there is a question of whether the agreement requires clearance by the Department of State.

As the agreement was made and signed prior to OGC clearance, the OGC was forced to develop—some might say concoct—a legal argument to justify the agreement. The interpretation that the OGC developed, which is that the Secretary of Agriculture may rely on foreign inspectors to enforce U.S. meat and poultry inspection laws, is not what Congress envisioned when it wrote these laws. It is my opinion that Congress intended that the Secretary of Agriculture enforce U.S. inspection laws through U.S. inspectors. The USDA interpretation suggests that USDA has no further responsibility to spot check, or make random reinspections, to make sure that imported meat and poultry products are in compliance with United States rules and standards, or that the Canadian Government is complying with the terms of the open border agreement.

Moreover, the USDA legal interpretation is clearly not what Congress envisioned when it approved the Free-Trade Agreement. The FTA specifically provides allowance for spot checks. Article 708.3 states that the importing country may examine agricultural and food goods from the exporting country only to ensure that the exporting party has determined or certified that such goods meet the standards or technical regulations of the importing country: "This provision shall not preclude spot checks or similar verifying measures necessary to ensure compliance with the importing party's standards or technical regulations provided that such spot checks or similar verifying measures, including any conducted at the border, are conducted no more frequently than those conducted by the importing party under similar circumstances with respect to its goods."

The USDA OGC has warned the Assistant Secretary of Marketing and Inspection Services that implementation of the agreement by regulation, without a change in law, is subject to legal risk.

FOOD SAFETY AND QUALITY

USDA offers assurances that spot checks will occur, but only to the extent that they occur on domestic products. This means that inspections on meat and poultry products for further processing at United States processing plants will be the only means by which inspections by United States inspectors will take place to determine a Canadian product's compliance with United States health and safety standards. These inspections are not as rigorous as procedures at the border. Furthermore, it means that any products imported from Canada ready for retail would not receive any inspection by United States inspectors. For example, geese labeled grade A could be imported and sold in the supermarket without any check by U.S. inspectors to determine whether the product is in compliance with U.S. grading standards. Hot dogs could be imported and sold in the supermarket without any check by U.S. inspectors for chemical residues or other contaminants.

These issues are significant because concerns have been raised over products imported from Canada. Earlier this year, geese from Canada that were improperly labeled were found at five establishments in the United States. GAO reported, and FSIS confirmed, that rejection rates for Canadian products reinspected under random procedures increased in 1989 from the previous year.

Last month, USDA officials found a fourth sample of meat from a Canadian processor tainted with a dangerous bacterium, listeria monocytogenes. USDA took the processor off the list of companies approved for export to the United States. The entire shipment was destroyed. But had the shipment not been inspected by U.S. personnel, it would have been delivered to U.S. supermarket shelves, without any intervening action by the U.S. government.

Border inspectors report significant problems with the current relaxed inspection procedures as well as significant rejections of Canadian products. The inspector in Sweetgrass, MT, for example, reports high percentages of contaminated meat coming in from Canada through his facilities. For example, on May 11, the inspector received 13 assignments to run product exams. He refused entry to 5 of the 13, based on findings of fecal material, ingesta, hair, bruises, and blood clots on the samples. Of the 175,799 pounds of meat inspected, the inspector refused for entry 64,638 pounds. This is a 36 percent rate of failure for 1 day. On May 18 and 19, the inspector refused entry to 13.9 percent and 22.5 percent, respectively, of the meat he inspected.

The proposed rule says that Canadian inspection personnel would be required to perform reinspections in Canada of Canadian products destined for import to the United States. These reinspections would include the random reinspections for residues and species verification required by the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Poultry Products Inspection Act.

The proposed rule notes that each country maintains internal review programs to assure that meat and poultry products intended for export meet the laws and regulations of the respective countries. But it is not clear that this program in Canada includes random reinspections specifically required under United States law. As these reinspections are now conducted by United States inspection personnel, it is reasonable to assume that these reinspections are not now conducted by Canadian personnel on Canadian products destined for export to the United States, and that such reinspections will constitute an added responsibility for Canadian inspection personnel over and above their current duties.

This requirement is a problem for two reasons: First, a primary purpose for reinspections by U.S. personnel is for the United States to verify the compliance of the foreign country's inspection activities with our laws and regulations. Turning this verification activity over to the foreign government defeats the entire purpose of the reinspection. How do we make sure the Canadian inspectors are doing what they are supposed to be doing? Second, this requirement risks future difficulties with Canada. It is not clear that the Canadians agree that they are expected to conduct any procedures beyond their current practices. An initial inspection for species verification and residues will not satisfy U.S. law, or the terms of this proposed rule. Products that have received an initial inspection must at some point be subject to a reinspection to satisfy U.S. law.

VERIFICATION

The proposed rule does not indicate how the United States will verify that Canada is complying with United States laws and regulations. The proposed rule mentions that during the experiment, use of the amended regulations would be evaluated and that this evaluation would be used by inspection officials in both countries to ascertain whether these regulations should be modified. But this statement does not address the issue of verification.

One of the benefits of the procedures under U.S. law for reinspection of imported products is that these procedures provide a means for verifying the compliance of the exporting country with U.S. laws and regulations for meat and poultry safety and quality. Reinspections are a means to protect the health and safety of American citizens. American consumers want to know that the meat and poultry products they eat have been inspected by U.S. Government personnel to determine the acceptability of the product under U.S. standards for safety and quality. If the United States Government abandons reinspections by United States inspection personnel, the United States Government no longer has a means for verifying compliance by Canada unless another method is substituted. The proposed rule does not address this point.

GRADING

The proposed rule does not address problems in grading, or the different grading systems in which Canadian and United States processors operate.

For example, in the case of geese, grading services are provided by the Canadian Government at no additional cost. U.S. processors must pay the Government for grading inspectors. Furthermore, differences exist over grading standards. These were discussed at some length during the subcommittee hearing. It is the view of the goose processor who testified at the hearing that these differences put his company at a competitive disadvantage with respect to Canadian firms exporting product to the United States.

No attempt is made in the proposed rule to resolve these differences. Moreover, without some means of reinspection by United States personnel, there is no opportunity to determine that Canadian processors are complying with our grading standards as is required when they export to the United States. Given the history of problems in this area, it is difficult to understand why USDA would not be more concerned about this problem.

EVALUATION

The proposed rule does not state how the 1-year experiment will be evaluated. It does say that an evaluation will be made to determine whether or not the experiment should become a permanent change in U.S. regulations. However, the proposed rule gives no guidance as to how the evaluation will be conducted, who will do the evaluation, whether or not the industry will be consulted, who in the industry might be consulted, and on what terms the determination to continue the experiment will be made.

This is a major omission. USDA ought to give the public information on which to comment regarding the plans for the evaluation.

CONCLUSION

Producers, processors, and consumers who have contacted me are shocked that USDA would agree to such a wholesale abrogation of U.S. meat and poultry inspection law. American consumers expect that U.S. officials will enforce U.S. law. They will not be satisfied with a system that relies solely on employees of a foreign government to enforce U.S. laws.

Random reinspections at the border are not a trade impediment. They are a means to protect the health and safety of American citizens. One need only look at the amounts of Canadian products imported into the United States to realize that the Canadian industry has not suffered problems of access under the current regime, or under the system that operated prior to 1989. Imports of Canadian meat and poultry to the United States are greater than United States exports of meat and poultry to Canada by a ratio of almost 4 to 1. If anything, the figures on meat and poultry trade show that it is the United States industry that has suffered problems of access, not the Canadian industry.

It is the role of the FSIS to assure American citizens that meat and poultry products, whether processed domestically or in a foreign country, are safe and wholesome. Standards that the United States has established for domestic products ought to apply to foreign products if they are to be sold in the United States. American consumers expect meat and poultry products imported to the United States to meet standards for inspection and grading that are the same as those the United States applies to domestic products.

Meat and poultry products are not the same as timber, automobiles, or other manufactured goods. Meat and poultry products must be safe for people to eat. It is reasonable, and compatible with free trade, to maintain a system for monitoring industry compliance with fair and responsible health, safety, and grading laws and regulations. The integrity of our inspection laws, and the inspection system established by these laws, enables the U.S. meat and poultry industry to assure American consumers that when they eat in a restaurant, or buy meat or poultry in a supermarket, they are receiving safe and wholesome products. These laws should not be compromised. USDA's proposed rule does compromise these laws and Congress should protect the integrity of the laws by enacting the legislation I am introducing today.●

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 3214. A bill to repeal the Federal Employers' Liability Act, to provide for coverage of railroad employees' injury claims under individual State workers' compensation programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

RAILROAD WORKER'S INJURY COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990.

The bill covers railroad employees for injuries received while on the job in the same manner as other industrial employees in this country—including other transportation employees. Rail employees would not continue to be covered by an out-dated FELA system that was enacted 82 years ago to address an industry, and a problem, that bears little resemblance to today's realities.

Therefore, this legislation provides that railroad employees would be compensated for work-related injuries under the no-fault, State workers compensation systems, rather than under the fault-based, litigation-oriented Federal Employers' Liability Act [FELA].

This measure has the strong support of the administration, and particularly Transportation Secretary Skinner. Repeal of FELA is an element of the National Transportation Policy which would produce significant benefits for railroad employees and the industry itself.

By way of background, Mr. President, FELA was enacted in 1908 in response to the then very dangerous working conditions in the railroad industry. At the beginning of this century, the railroad industry was the dominant industrial employer. Because FELA preceded the development of modern no-fault State workers' compensation laws, the Congress, in responding to the clear need for a workers compensation law to deal with injuries in the industry, relied upon the existing concepts of tort law in structuring this system. However, concerns on the part of many Members of Congress and others as to the fairness of FELA led shortly after its enactment to continued analysis and study of the system. Thus, the Sutherland Commission was created by the Congress in 1910 to examine the 2-year old FELA system.

In its report to the Congress in 1912, the Commission stated that it was:

unanimously of the opinion that the existing system of employers' liability based upon negligence, with the defenses of assumption of risk, fellow servant fault, and contributory negligence, no longer met the requirements of modern industrial conditions; . . . and in the operation resulted in waste, plausible antagonism between employer and employee in giving to a few injured employees large and sometimes extravagant damages, while leaving the great majority to bear the entire burden without any recompense whatsoever.

The Commission recommended that the Congress enact legislation to replace FELA, "putting in the place of it a law based not upon fault but upon the fact of injury resulting from accident in the course of employment."

Efforts from 1910 through 1939 in the Congress to change FELA to a no-fault based system proved unsuccessful as FELA trial lawyers and some union leaders worked to maintain the fault-driven system. While maintaining the fault-based nature of FELA, change to the law were enacted in 1939 to make it easier for an injured worker to receive compensation.

From 1939 until June, 1988, when at my request the Commerce Committee's Surface Transportation Subcommittee held a hearing on FELA in relation to Amtrak, the Congress had done nothing further with respect to this law.

In the interim, however, the Supreme Court stepped in on numerous occasions to reshape FELA, increasing to the greatest extent it felt possible the likelihood that injured rail workers would be compensated for their work-related injuries. Despite its many efforts to transform FELA into a better system from the employees' perspective, it was constitutionally precluded from restructuring FELA to follow the no-fault principles underlying State workers' compensation laws. Therefore, FELA remains a system out of synch with the commonly accepted no-fault approach of compensating workers for on-the-job injuries which has been adopted by all 50 States.

Despite the changes made to the act in 1939, and the Supreme Court's efforts in changing the law, FELA continues to suffer from four specific problems which justify treating railroad employees the same as employees in other industries in this country—including the employees of the airlines, truck and bus industries.

FELA fails to assure that all injured workers are guaranteed fair and prompt compensation when they are injured. Because fault must be established for a worker to recover, some injured railroad workers receive no compensation while others receive rewards far in excess of what would be considered reasonable. In essence, the system produces many unfair and unpredictable results.

FELA guarantees that a small group of specialized FELA trial lawyers will grow rich from representing injured rail workers. These lawyers will take 25 to 40 percent of the amount recovered by an injured worker. In the case of Amtrak, which receives Federal subsidies on the order of $600 million per year, this amounts to an enormous Federal subsidy to trial lawyers.

FELA adversely affects the ability of Amtrak and the freight railroads to compete for business because its competitors' employees are covered under State workers compensation laws. There should be modal equity in the area of workers' compensation coverage.

FELA continues to stand in the way of improved labor-management relations and increased rail safety. Because recovery can only occur if fault is proven, the employee and management immediately start pointing an accusatory finger at one another rather than working together to determine the cause of the accident that resulted in the injury. Thus, contrary to those who argue that FELA promotes safety, FELA acts as an impediment to joint efforts to further improve safety on Amtrak, just as it does in the entire rail industry.

Mr. President, I believe that rail workers would be better served if they were covered under state workers' compensation laws like the employees of other industries, including other transportation industries. This bill will accomplish this aim.

Some parties have suggested that FELA serves as a safety statute. I would suggest that the testimony of Amtrak's President, Graham Claytor, describing the negative effect of FELA on rail safety to the Surface Transportation Subcommittee on several occasions, is the demonstrably more logical analysis.

Mr. President, in the last 10 years attorney involvement in FELA cases in the railroad industry has increased from 15 to 32 percent, payments excluding medical expenses and administrative costs have risen from $296 million to $811 million—a 174% increase; and the average payment per claim has increased from $8,004 in 1979 to $37,852 in 1988. All this has occurred while employment has dropped from 487,534, to 259,696. Between 1981 and 1986, railroad employment was down 35 percent, injuries dropped 53 percent yet FELA lawsuits more than doubled.

In the case of Amtrak, in the last 7 years it has seen its total costs for employee injury cases triple to nearly $54 million.

After 82 years, I believe the situation surrounding the FELA system justifies the enactment of the same approach to workers' compensation for rail employees that all of the states have chosen for the other workers of this Nation.

I have previously supported a limited repeal of FELA, which is supported by the National Industrial Transportation League—the Nation's oldest and largest association of shippers—the National Taxpayers Union, the Railway Progress Institute, the National Association of Railroad Passengers, The American Short Line Railroad Association, the Regional Railroads Association, the Association of American Railroads, Amtrak, and others.

I look forward to the support of my colleagues for this bill, and urge them to educate themselves about the abuses and inefficiencies of the FELA system. I will also be introducing similar legislation in the early days of the 102d Congress. As more and more members of Congress learn about the working of this anachronistic system, I believe we will repeal FELA—and thus bring the workers' compensation system for the railroads from the first decade of this century up to the present.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that both the text of the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990 and a section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3214

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Federal Employers' Liability Act, enacted in 1908, preceded the enactment of state workers' compensation statutes and represents an important early effort to provide compensation to workers injured or killed in the course of their employment;

(2) the Federal Employers' Liability Act establishes a fault-based system in which employee injury compensation is based on the employee's ability to establish negligence on the part of the employer, and in which compensation may be reduced or eliminated to the extent the employee is contributorily negligent;

(3) following enactment of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, all of the individual states adopted no-fault workers' compensation statutes which provide compensation for workers injured or killed in the course of their employment without regard to considerations of fault or negligence on the part of either the employer or the employee, and which are applicable to virtually all other industries in the United States;

(4) in recognition of the remedy provided to injured railroad employees by the Federal Employers' Liability Act, certain state workers' compensation laws specifically exclude railroad workers from coverage under the state programs;

(5) the determination of fault as a component of injury compensation produces a number of undesirable consequences, including the failure to insure that all injured workers receive compensation, a disincentive to railroad safety and sound employer-employee relations, and a lengthy process with high transaction and social costs that increase industry costs, burden the court system, and decrease the compensation received by the injured worker;

(6) state workers' compensation programs provide for the receipt of compensation (in accordance with benefit schedules established by each state to meet its particular needs) by all workers who are injured on the job without requiring workers to demonstrate fault or the cause of the accident, and with an administrative process that is generally less complicated and expensive than litigation through State or federal court systems;

(7) subjecting the railroad industry to the fault-based Federal Employers' Liability Act puts the industry at a disadvantage in competing with other modes of transportation, which are covered by state workers' compensation programs, and this inequality of treatment places a burden on interstate commerce; and

(8) the determination of fault as a component of employee injury compensation does not represent sound public policy and should be eliminated.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE

It is the purpose of this Act to place all railroad employees under the workers' compensation laws of the several states, in order to assure that railroad employees will be compensated, without a determination of fault or negligence, for injuries or death arising out of or in the course of their employment.

SEC. 4. REPEAL

The Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.) (popularly referred to as the "Federal Employers' Liability Act") is repealed.

SEC. 5. APPLICABILITY OF STATE WORKERS' COMPENSATION STATUTES

Notwithstanding any provision of state law that excludes railroad employees from coverage under a state workers' compensation program or that authorizes a railroad employee to bring a tort claim against a railroad, no state shall, after the effective date of this Act, prohibit railroad employees from access to that state's workers' compensation program and any claim against a railroad by an employee of the railroad for injury, death, or occupational disease arising out of or in the course of the employee's employment shall be treated the same as the claim of a non-railroad employee against his or her employer brought under the state's workers' compensation laws.

SEC. 6. AMTRAK TAX EXEMPTION

Notwithstanding section 306(n) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 546) or any other provision of law, the National Railroad Passenger Corporation shall be subject to the workers' compensation taxes, fees, and assessments of a state in the same manner and to the same extent as any other interstate entity doing business within the state and governed by the workers' compensation laws of that state.

SEC. 7. CONFORMING AMENDMENT

Section 20(a) of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 185), as amended (46 U.S.C. 688), is further amended by adding after the words "railroad employees" in both instances where they appear the following: "in effect prior to the enactment of the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE

The provisions of this Act shall become effective nine months after the date of enactment. All claims for work-related injuries, including occupational disease or death, that accrue prior to such effective date shall continue to be processed under the provisions of the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.) (popularly referred to as the "Federal Employers' Liability Act"). All claims for work-related injuries, including occupational disease or death, that accrue on or after such effective date shall be processed under the applicable state workers' compensation programs. Notwithstanding any other provision contained herein, a claim for injury, including occupational disease or death, that is found not covered by applicable state workers' compensation law because the injury resulted solely from an employment event occurring prior to the effective date of this Act may be processed under the provisions of the Act of April 27, 1908: Provided further, That in such event the time for filing an action provided in section 6 of the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 56) shall begin to run only from the date an adverse final decision denying coverage under the state workers' compensation law is received.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE RAILROAD WORKERS' INJURY COMPENSATION ACT OF 1990

Section 1.—Section one provides that the Act may be cited as the "Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

Section 2.—Section two contains Congressional findings supporting the need for enactment of the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990. The findings focus on the genesis of the Federal Employers' Liability Act in the early part of the twentieth century, the subsequent successful adoption of no-fault systems by all of the states, the significantly improved safety in railroad employment, and the difficulties associated with the presence of negligence as a factor in employee injury compensation. The findings support the need for a change from the fault-based Federal Employers' Liability Act to the no-fault programs maintained by the several states.

Section 3.—Section three declares that it is the purpose of this Act to provide all railroad employees after the effective date hereof with coverage exclusively under the workers' compensation laws of the several states in order to assure that railroad employees are compensated, without a determination of fault or negligence, for injuries or death arising out of or in the course of their employment.

Section 4.—Section four repeals the Federal Employers' Liability Act, officially known as the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.).

Section 5.—Section five provides that in recognition of the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act states would be prohibited from treating claims against a railroad by an employee of the railroad for injury, death, or occupational disease arising out of or in the course of the employee's employment differently from that state's treatment of claims of non-railroad employees under that state's workers' compensation laws. It is the intent of section 5 of the bill that railroad workers be entitled to participate in the state no-fault workers' compensation programs notwithstanding the existence of provisions in state workers' compensation statutes, which may either exclude railroad workers from the state compensation programs or contain language paralleling the Federal Employers' Liability Act and providing railroad workers with a tort-based claim for compensation under state law.

Section 6.—Section six contains a technical provision designed to insure that exemption from state and local taxes and other fees that the National Railroad Passenger Corporation ("Amtrak") is entitled to under Federal law does not affect Amtrak's responsibility to comply with the taxes and assessments associated with the individual state workers' compensation statutes.

Section 7.—Section seven contains a conforming amendment designed to insure that the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act as it applies to railroad employees does not inadvertently affect the compensation system established for merchant seamen. Under section 20(a) of the Act of March 4, 1915 (46 U.S.C. 688), the rights of seamen who suffer personal injury in the course of their employment are tied to the rights and remedies available to railway employees under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Section seven of the bill insures that the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act will not alter the rights available to merchant seamen whose employment-related injuries may occur at sea and not obtain the benefits of state workers' compensation laws.

Section 8.—Section eight provides that the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990 shall become effective nine months after the date of enactment. Accordingly, all causes of action for work-related injury, death, or occupational disease that accrue prior to such date would continue to be processed under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. All causes of action that accrue on or after that date would be processed under the applicable state workers' compensation programs. A nine month delay in the effective date of the provisions of the Act has been included in order to provide the states with a period of time in which to make necessary administrative adjustments to their workers' compensation programs to respond to the addition of railroad employees to the programs. Section eight also includes a savings clause which has been added to ensure that no employee is left without recourse in the event the employee's claim for injury, including occupational disease or death, is found not covered by the applicable state workers' compensation law because the injury resulted solely from an employment event occurring prior to the effective date of this Act. An employee in this instance would continue to have the right to pursue a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and the statute of limitations provided in section 56 of title 45 of the United States Code would not begin to run until an adverse final decision denying coverage under state law is received.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MCCAIN):

S. 3217. A bill to authorize additional positions for the National Museum of the American Indian of the Smithsonian Institution, and for other purposes; by unanimous consent, referred jointly to the Committee on Rules and Administration and the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN AMENDMENTS ACT

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing a bill today on behalf of myself and Senator MCCAIN, to extend to the Smithsonian Institution, provisions of generic legislation addressing the repatriation of native American human remains, sacred objects, funerary objects, and cultural patrimony.

Mr. President, you will recall that last year, the Smithsonian Institution took the lead in this sensitive area, by agreeing to become the first federally funded institution to conduct an inventory of the native American human remains in its possession and to voluntarily return remains that are not the subject of scientific study, if the return of those remains is requested by the lineal descendants of the deceased or the tribe with whom the remains are affiliated.

I believe that it is important to note that the Smithsonian took this step at the initiative of Secretary Robert McCormick Adams. The Smithsonian did not insist that other federally funded museums be covered by the same policy. I raise this matter, because the generic legislation that I referred to, legislation that is now pending in the Senate and which would extend national repatriation policy to museums that receive Federal funds, has been met with some resistance from the museum community, based upon the failure to include the Smithsonian Institution within the scope of that legislation. In an effort to address this concern, I made a commitment to the President and Vice President of the American Association of Museums that I would introduce a separate bill which would extend the provisions of the generic legislation, S. 1980, to the Smithsonian Institution.

This legislation amends the National Museum of the American Indian Act, Public Law 101-185, to provide a more comprehensive repatriation policy, consistent with the policy that would govern issues of repatriation for other museums that are the recipients of Federal funds.

The repatriation of native American human remains, sacred objects, funerary objects, and cultural patrimony is an issue that demands resolution—it is vitally important to Indian country, and I believe, will foster better relations between the scientific and Indian communities. With my colleagues on the Committee on Rules and Administration, I look forward to expeditious action on this most important matter.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3217

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Museum of the American Indian Amendments Act".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 11.

Section 11 of the National Museum of the American Indian Act (20 U.S.C. 80q-9) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. INVENTORY, IDENTIFICATION AND REPATRIATION OF NATIVE AMERICAN HUMAN REMAINS, FUNERARY OBJECTS, SACRED OBJECTS AND OBJECTS OF CULTURAL PATRIMONY.

"(a) INVENTORY.—The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall compile an inventory of Native American human remains and associated funerary objects and, to the extent possible, identify the geographic and cultural affiliation of such remains and objects.

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The inventories and identifications required under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) be completed in consultation with Indian tribes and Native Hawaiian organizations and traditional religious leaders;

"(2) be completed by no later than the date that is 4 years after the date of enactment of the National Museum of the American Indian Act;

"(3) include a review of existing records, inventories, or catalogues, relevant studies, or other pertinent data for the limited purposes of determining the geographic origin, cultural affiliation, and basic facts surrounding acquisition and accession of such remains and objects; and

"(4) be made available to the review committee established in section 12 both during the time they are being conducted and afterward.

"(c) NOTIFICATIONS.—(1) If the cultural affiliation of any particular Native American human remains and associated funerary objects is determined pursuant to this section, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall notify the affected Indian tribes or Native Hawaiian organizations, not later than 6 months after the completion of the inventory.

"(2) The notice required by paragraph (1) shall include information—

"(A) which identifies each of the Native American human remains, funerary objects, sacred objects, and objects of Native American cultural patrimony and the circumstances surrounding each acquisition;

"(B) which lists the remains and objects that are clearly identifiable as to tribal origin; and

"(C) which lists the remains and objects that are not clearly identifiable as being culturally affiliated with the Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization, but which, given the totality of circumstances surrounding the acquisition of the remains or objects, are reasonably believed to be remains or objects culturally affiliated with the Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization.

"(3) A copy of each notice provided under paragraph (1) shall be published in the Federal Register.

"(d) WRITTEN SUMMARY.—(1) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall provide a written summary of the Native American unassociated funerary objects, sacred objects or objects of cultural patrimony which is based upon all available information. The summary shall describe the scope of the collection, the kinds of objects included, reference to geographical location, means and period of acquisition and cultural affiliation, where readily ascertainable.

"(2) The summary required under subsection (d) shall be—

"(A) in lieu of an object by object inventory;

"(B) followed by consultation with Indian tribes and Native Hawaiian organizations and traditional religious leaders; and

"(C) completed by not later than the date that is 3 years after the date of enactment of the National Museum of the American Indian Act.

"(3) Upon request, Indian tribes and Native Hawaiian organizations shall have access to records, catalogues, relevant studies or other pertinent data for the limited purposes of determining the geographic origin, cultural affiliation, and basic facts surrounding acquisition and accession of Native American objects subject to this section. Such information shall be provided in a reasonable manner agreed upon by all parties.

"(e) RETURN OF REMAINS AND OBJECTS.—(1) If the cultural affiliation of Native American human remains and associated funerary objects with a particular Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization is established, then upon request of the tribe or Native Hawaiian organization or a known lineal descendant of the Native American, such remains and associated funerary objects, if any, shall be expeditiously returned.

"(2) If the cultural affiliation of unassociated funerary objects, sacred objects, or objects of cultural patrimony with a particular Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization is established, then upon the request of the tribe or Native Hawaiian organization or a known lineal descendant of the Native American and pursuant to subparagraphs (5), (6), and (7) of this section, such objects shall be expeditiously returned.

"(3) The return of such remains and objects shall be in consultation with the requesting lineal descendant or tribe or organization to determine the place and manner of delivery of the remains.

"(4) Upon request and pursuant to subparagraphs (5), (6), and (7), sacred objects and objects of cultural patrimony shall be expeditiously returned where—

"(A) the requesting party is the direct lineal descendant of an individual who owned the sacred object;

"(B) the requesting Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization can show that the object was owned or controlled by the tribe or organization; or

"(C) the requesting Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization can show that (i) the sacred object was owned or controlled by a member thereof; (ii) there are no identifiable lineal descendants of said member; or (iii) the lineal descendants, upon notice, have failed to make a claim for the object under this Act.

"(5) If the lineal descendant, Indian tribe, or Native Hawaiian organization requests the return of culturally affiliated Native American human remains, funerary objects, sacred objects, or objects of Native American cultural patrimony, the Secretary of the Smithsonian shall expeditiously return such remains or objects unless such remains or objects are indispensable for the completion of a specific scientific study the outcome of which would be of major benefit to the United States and the Secretary can establish that the Smithsonian Institution has the right of possession. Such remains or objects shall be returned no later than 90 days after the date on which the scientific study is completed.

"(6) If an known lineal descendant or an Indian tribe or Native Hawaiian organization requests the return of Native American unassociated funerary objects, sacred objects or objects of cultural patrimony pursuant to this Act and presents evidence which, if standing alone before the introduction of evidence to the contrary, would support a finding that the Smithsonian did not have the right of possession, then the Smithsonian shall return such objects unless it can overcome such inference by clear and convincing evidence and prove that it has a right of possession to the objects.

"(7) Where there are multiple requests for repatriation of any cultural item and, after complying with the requirements of this Act, the Secretary of the Smithsonian cannot clearly determine which requesting party is the most appropriate claimant, the Secretary of the Smithsonian may retain such item until the requesting parties agree upon its disposition or the dispute is otherwise resolved pursuant to the provisions of this Act or by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"(8) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall share what information the Smithsonian Institution does possess regarding any item in question with the known lineal descendant, Indian tribe, or Native Hawaiian organization to assist in establishing the cultural affiliation of the Native American remains, funerary objects, sacred objects, and objects of cultural patrimony.

"(9) The United States district courts shall have jurisdiction over any action brought by any person alleging a violation of this Act and shall have the authority to issue such orders as may be necessary to enforce the provisions of this Act.".

SEC. 3. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 13.

Section 13 of the National Museum of the American Indian Act (20 U.S.C. 80q-11) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. FIDUCIARY DUTY.

"The United States Government and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall not be liable for claims by an aggrieved party or for claims of breach of fiduciary duty, public trust, or violations of Federal law that are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act for the repatriation of any item in good faith pursuant to this Act.".

SEC. 4. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 14(a).

The heading for section 14, and section 14(a) of the National Museum of the American Indian Act (20 U.S.C. 80q-12(a)) are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. GRANTS BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO ASSIST INDIAN TRIBES AND NATIVE HAWAIIAN ORGANIZATIONS WITH THE REPATRIATION OF NATIVE AMERICAN HUMAN REMAINS, FUNERARY OBJECTS, SACRED OBJECTS AND OBJECTS OF CULTURAL PATRIMONY.

"(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary of the Interior may make grants to Indian tribes and Native Hawaiian organizations to assist such tribes and organizations in reaching and carrying out agreements with—shall be transferred by the Secretary from the Highway Trust Fund into the Wetlands Fund Account in the Aquatics Resources Trust Fund."

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on December 1, 1990.

(k) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In the case of gasoline and diesel fuel on which tax was imposed under section 4081 or 4091 of such Code before any tax-increase date (other than gasoline on which tax is imposed under section 4041(c)(2) of such Code) and which is held on such date by any person, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax on such gasoline and diesel fuel.

(2) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be—

(A) 4 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(B) 5 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(C) 0.5 cent per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(3) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(A) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding gasoline or diesel fuel on any tax-increase date to which the tax imposed by paragraph (1) applies shall be liable for such tax.

(B) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(C) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid on or before—

(i) May 31, 1991, in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(ii) September 15, 1991, in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(iii) June 30, 1992, in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) TAX-INCREASE DATE.—The term "tax-increase date" means December 1, 1990, July 1, 1991, and January 1, 1992.

(B) HELD BY A PERSON.—Gasoline and diesel fuel shall be considered as "held by a person" if title thereto has passed to such person (whether or not delivery to the person has been made).

(C) GASOLINE.—The term "gasoline" has the meaning given such term by section 4082 of such Code.

(D) DIESEL FUEL.—The term "diesel fuel" has the meaning given such term by section 4092 of such Code.

(E) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(5) EXCEPTION FOR EXEMPT USES.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not apply to gasoline or diesel fuel held by any person exclusively for any use to the extent a credit or refund of the tax imposed by section 4081 or 4091 of such Code, as the case may be, is allowable for such use.

(6) EXCEPTION FOR FUEL HELD IN VEHICLE TANK.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1) on gasoline or diesel fuel held in the tank of a motor vehicle or motorboat.

(7) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS OF FUEL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1)—

(i) on gasoline held on any tax-increase date by any person if the aggregate amount of gasoline held by such person on such date does not exceed 4,000 gallons, and

(ii) on diesel fuel held on any tax-increase date by any person if the aggregate amount of diesel fuel held by such person on such date does not exceed 2,000 gallons.

The preceding sentence shall apply only if such person submits to the Secretary (at the time and in the manner required by the Secretary) such information as the Secretary shall require for purposes of this paragraph.

(B) EXEMPT FUEL.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), there shall not be taken into account fuel held by any person which is exempt from the tax imposed by paragraph (1) by reason of paragraph (5).

(C) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—For purposes of this paragraph, rules similar to the rules of paragraph (5) of section 13201(e) of this Act shall apply.

(7) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 4081 of such Code in the case of gasoline and section 4091 in the case of diesel fuel shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subsection, apply with respect to the floor stock taxes imposed by paragraph (1) to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 4081 or 4091.

(8) TRANSFER OF PORTION OF FLOOR STOCKS REVENUE TO HIGHWAY TRUST FUND.—For purposes of determining the amount transferred to the Highway Trust Fund, the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be treated as imposed at a Highway Trust Fund financing rate to the extent of—

(A) 2 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(B) 2.5 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(C) 0.25 cent per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(k) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO IMPROVED ENFORCEMENT OF GASOLINE TAX.—

(1) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 4082 (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) REPORTING REQUIRED OF TERMINAL OPERATORS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person—

"(A) who is registered (or is required to be registered) under section 4101 as a terminal operator, and

"(B) from whose terminal gasoline is removed,

shall make a return (at such time and in such form as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe).

"(1) SPECIFIC REPORT REQUIREMENTS.—The report described in paragraph (1) shall specify—

"(A) the name, address, and registration number under section 4101 of the owner (or the owner of record in such cases as the Secretary deems appropriate) of the gasoline,

"(B) the amount of gasoline removed, and

"(C) such other information as the Secretary may require."

(2) REGISTRATION AND BOND.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 4101 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4101. REGISTRATION AND BOND.

"(a) REGISTRATION.—Each person—

"(1) before incurring any liability for tax under section 4091, or

"(2) required by the Secretary as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this part, shall register with the Secretary at such time, in such manner and form, and subject to such terms and conditions, as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. A registration under this subsection may be used only in accordance with regulations prescribed under this subsection. Rules similar to the rules of section 4222(c) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

"(b) BONDS AND LIENS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the Secretary may require, as a condition of permitting any person to be registered under subsection (a), that such person—

"(1) give a bond in such sum as the Secretary determines appropriate, and

"(2) agree to the imposition of a lien on such property (or rights to property) of such person as the Secretary determines appropriate.

If a lien is imposed pursuant to paragraph (2), the Secretary shall release such lien in connection with a transfer of the property if there is furnished to the Secretary (and accepted by the Secretary) a bond in such sum as the Secretary determines appropriate. The Secretary shall respond to any request to release a lien imposed pursuant to paragraph (2) in connection with a transfer of the property not later than 90 days after the date the request for such a release is made."

(B) DISCLOSURE PERMITTED OF REGISTRATION INFORMATION.—Subsection (k) of section 6103 (relating to disclosure of certain returns and return information for tax administration purposes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) DISCLOSURE OF NAMES AND REGISTRATION NUMBERS FOR ADMINISTRATION OF EXCISE TAXES.—The name, address, and registration number of any person registered with the Secretary under subtitle D may be disclosed to the extent necessary to permit the effective administration of such subtitle. In the case of the tax imposed by section 4081, the terminals owned by such person may also be disclosed."

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part III of subchapter A of chapter 32 is amended by inserting "and special rules" in the item relating to section 4082.

(4) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

"(B) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents' and '3 cents' for '15 cents'."

(ii) Subparagraph (B) of section 4041(m)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents' and '3 cents' for 15 cents'."

(C)(i) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 4091(d) are amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate shall be—

"(A) 3.5 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of any mixture of aviation fuel if—

"(i) at least 10 percent of such mixture consists of alcohol (as defined in section 4081(c)(3)), and

"(ii) the aviation fuel in such mixture was not taxed under subparagraph (B), and

"(B) 3.89 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of aviation fuel for use (at the time of such sale) in producing a mixture described in subparagraph (A).

In the case of a sale described in subparagraph (B), the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund financing rate shall be ⅛ cent per gallon.

"(2) LATER SEPARATION.—If any person separates the aviation fuel from a mixture of the aviation fuel and alcohol on which tax was imposed under subsection (a) at the Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate equivalent to 3.5 cents per gallon by reason of this subsection (or with respect to which a credit or payment was allowed or made by reason of section 6427(f)(1)), such person shall be treated as the producer of such aviation fuel. The amount of tax imposed on any sale of such aviation fuel by such person shall be reduced by the amount of tax imposed (and not credited or refunded) on any prior sale of such fuel."

(ii) The heading for subsection (d) of section 4091 is amended by striking "EXEMPTION FROM" and inserting "REDUCED RATE OF".

(3) Subsection (f) of section 6427 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) GASOLINE, DIESEL FUEL, AND AVIATION FUEL USED TO PRODUCE CERTAIN ALCOHOL FUELS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (k), if any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel on which tax was imposed by section 4081 or 4091 at the regular tax rate is used by any person in producing a mixture described in section 4081(c), 4091(c)(1)(A), or 4091(d)(1)(A) (as the case may be) which is sold or used in such person's trade or business the Secretary shall pay (without interest) to such person an amount equal to the excess of the regular tax rate over the incentive tax rate with respect to such fuel.

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) REGULAR TAX RATE.—The term 'regular tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (d) thereof.

"(B) INCENTIVE TAX RATE.—The term 'incentive tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1)(B) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (d)(1)(B) thereof.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH OTHER REPAYMENT PROVISIONS.—No amount shall be payable under paragraph (1) with respect to any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel with respect to which an amount is payable under subsection (d), (e), or (l) of this section or under section 6420 or 6421.

"(4) TERMINATION.—This subsection shall not apply with respect to any mixture sold or used after September 30, 2000, or if earlier for any period before January 1, 2000, during which the Highway Trust Fund financing rate under section 4081(a)(2) is not in effect."

(4) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

(5) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(A) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In the case of gasoline or aviation fuel on which tax was imposed under section 4041(c)(2) or 4091 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 before January 1, 1991, and which is held on such date by any person, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax on such gasoline or fuel.

(B) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of the tax imposed by subparagraph (A) shall be—

(i) 3 cents per gallon in the case of gasoline, and

(ii) 3.5 cents per gallon in the case of aviation fuel.

(C) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(i) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding gasoline or aviation fuel on January 1, 1991, to which the tax imposed by this paragraph applies shall be liable for such tax.

(ii) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(iii) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid on or before June 30, 1991.

(D) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) HELD BY A PERSON.—Gasoline or aviation fuel shall be considered as "held by a person" if title thereto has passed to such person (whether or not delivery to the person has been made).

(ii) GASOLINE.—The term "gasoline" has the meaning given such term by section 4082 of such Code.

(iii) AVIATION FUEL.—The term "aviation fuel" has the meaning given such term by section 4092(a) of such Code.

(iv) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(E) EXCEPTION FOR EXEMPT USES.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to fuel held by any person exclusively for any use which is a nontaxable use (as defined in section 6427(l) of such Code).

(F) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 4091 of such Code shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph, apply with respect to the floor stock taxes imposed by this paragraph to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 4091.

(c) EXTENSION OF TAXES AND TRUST FUND.—

(1) TRANSPORTATION TAXES.—Sections 4261(g) and 4271(d) are each amended by striking "January 1, 1991" and inserting "January 2, 1996".

(2) FUEL TAXES.—

(A) Subparagraph (B) of section 4091(b)(6) (as redesignated by section 13211(b)) is amended by striking "January 2, 1991" and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(B) Paragraph (5) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "December 31, 1990" and inserting "December 31, 1995".

(3) DEPOSITS INTO TRUST FUND.—Subsection (b) of section 9502 (relating to transfer to Airport and Airway Trust Fund of amounts equivalent to certain taxes) is amended by striking "January 1, 1991" each place it appears and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(4) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 9502(b)(2) is amended by inserting "and the deficit reduction financing rate" after "rate".

(d) REPEAL OF REDUCTION IN RATES.—

(1) Section 4283 (relating to reduction in aviation related taxes in certain cases) is hereby repealed.

(2) The table of sections for part III of subchapter C of chapter 33 is amended by striking the item relating to section 4283.

(3) Subsection (c) of section 4041 is amended by striking paragraph (6).

It is the sense of the Senate that the conferees be instructed to adjust the taxes imposed by sections 4041(a)(3) or 4091 on any diesel fuel used on a diesel-powered train so that such taxes will not exceed the increases to taxes imposed under sections 4041, 4081, and 4091 (other than on trains) which will not be dedicated to the highway trust fund.

DOLE AMENDMENT NO. 3015

Mr. DOLE proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3014 proposed by Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) to the bill S. 3209, supra, as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted insert the following:

Subpart B—User-Related Taxes

SEC. 7405. INCREASE AND EXTENSION OF HIGHWAY-RELATED TAXES AND TRUST FUND.

(A) by striking "and" at the end of clause (i),

(B) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting ", and", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) the deficit reduction rate."

(2) RATES OF TAX.—Subparagraph (B) of section 4081(a)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking "9 cents a gallon, and" and inserting "13.75 cents a gallon,",

(B) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting ", and", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) the deficit reduction rate is 4.75 cents (5.25 cents in the case of gasohol containing ethanol) a gallon ."

(3) 15-CENT LIMIT ON TAX ON GASOLINE USED IN NONCOMMERCIAL AVIATION.—

(A) RATES OF TAX AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1990, AND BEFORE JULY 1, 1991.—Paragraph (3) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "12 cents a gallon over the Highway Trust Fund financing rate" and inserting "15 cents a gallon over the sum of the Highway Trust Fund financing rate and the deficit reduction financing rate".

(B) REFUND ON TAX.—

(i) Section 6427 is amended by striking subsections (m) and (o) and by redesignating subsections (n), (p), (q), and (r) as subsections (m), (n), (o), and (p), respectively.

(ii) Subsection (o) of section 6427 (as redesignated by clause (i)) is amended to read as follows:

"(o) GASOLINE USED IN NONCOMMERCIAL AVIATION.—Except as provided in subsection (k), if gasoline is used as a fuel in any aircraft in noncommercial aviation (as defined in section 4041(c)(2)), the Secretary shall pay (without interest) to the ultimate purchaser of such gasoline an amount equal to the excess of the aggregate amount of tax paid under section 4081 on the gasoline so used over an amount equal to 15.1 cents (12.1 cents during December 1990) multiplied by the number of gallons of gasoline so used."

(iii) Paragraph (1) of section 6427(i) is amended by striking "or (q)" and inserting "or (o)".

(iv) Clause (i) of section 6427(i)(2)(A) is amended by striking "and (q)" and inserting "and (o)".

(v) The amendments made by this subparagraph shall take effect on December 1, 1990.

(C) REPEAL OF TAX AFTER JUNE 30, 1991.—

(i) Subsection (c) of section 4041 is amended by striking paragraphs (2) and (3) and by redesignating paragraphs (4) and (5) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(ii) Paragraph (3) of section 4041(c), as redesignated by clause (i) is amended by striking "paragraphs (1) and (2)" and inserting "paragraph (1)".

(iii) Paragraph (2) of section 6421(f) is amended by striking "section 4041(c)(4)" and inserting "section 4041(c)(2)".

(iv) The amendments made by this subparagraph shall take effect on July 1, 1991.

(5) Conforming amendments.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4081(c) is amended—

(i) by striking "applied by" and all that follows through "in the case" and inserting "applied by substituting rates which are 10/9th of the otherwise applicable rates under subsection (a)(2) in the case", and

(ii) by adding at the end thereof the following: "For purposes of this subsection, in the case of the Highway Trust Fund financing rate, the otherwise applicable rate is 7.75 cents a gallon."

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 4081(c) is amended by striking "at a rate equivalent to 3 cents" and inserting "at a Highway Trust Fund financing rate equivalent to 7.75 cents".

(C) Subparagraph (A) of section 9503(c)(2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The amounts payable from the Highway Trust Fund under this subparagraph shall be determined by taking into account only the Highway Trust Fund financing rate applicable to any fuel."

(6) RATES OF TAX FOR GASOLINE REMOVED AFTER NOVEMBER 30, 1990, AND BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1992.—Section 4081 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) RATES OF TAX FOR GASOLINE REMOVED AFTER NOVEMBER 30, 1990, AND BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1992.—

"(1) HIGHWAY TRUST FUND FINANCING RATES.—

"(A) In the case of gasoline removed after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991—

"(i) subsection (a)(2)(B)(i) shall be applied by substituting '11 cents' for '13.75 cents', and

"(ii) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '5 cents' for '7.75 cents' each place it appears.

"(B) In the case of gasoline removed after June 30, 1991, and before January 1, 1992—

"(i) subsection (a)(2)(B)(i) shall be applied by substituting '13.5 cents' for '13.75 cents', and

"(ii) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '7.5 cents' for '7.75 cents' each place it appears.

"(2) DEFICIT REDUCTION RATE.—

"(A) In the case of gasoline removed after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991, subsection (a)(2)(B)(iii) shall be applied by substituting '2 cents (2.5 cents in the case of gasohol containing ethanol)' for '4.75 cents (5.25 cents in the case of gasohol containing ethanol)'.

"(B) In the case of gasoline removed after June 30, 1991, and before January 1, 1992, subsection (a)(2)(B)(iii) shall be applied by substituting '4.5 cents (5 cents in the case of gasohol containing ethanol)' for '4.75 cents (5.25 cents in the case of gasohol containing ethanol)'."

(7) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this subsection shall apply to gasoline removed (as defined in section 4082 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) after November 30, 1990.

(b) INCREASE IN OTHER TAXES.—

(1) DEFICIT REDUCTION RATE.—

(A) Clause (i) of section 4091(b)(1)(A) is amended by inserting "and the diesel fuel deficit reduction rate" after "financing rate".

(B) Subsection (b) of section 4091 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4) and (5) as paragraphs (5) and (6), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) DIESEL FUEL DEFICIT REDUCTION RATE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the diesel fuel deficit reduction rate is 4.75 cents a gallon (5.25 cents a gallon in the case of any mixture of diesel if at least 10 percent of such mixture is ethanol)."

(2) INCREASE IN HIGHWAY TRUST FUND FINANCING RATE.—Paragraph (2) of section 4091(b) is amended by striking "15 cents" and inserting "19.75 cents".

(3) INCREASE IN TAX ON SPECIAL MOTOR FUELS.—Paragraph (2) of section 4041(a) is amended by striking "of 9 cents a gallon" and by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The rate of the tax imposed by this paragraph shall be the sum of the Highway Trust Fund financing rate and the deficit reduction rate in effect under section 4081 at the time of such sale or use."

(4) 4.75-CENT TAX TO APPLY TO FUEL USED IN TRAINS.—

(A) Paragraph (2) of section 4093(c) is amended by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C) and by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) 4.75-CENT TAX ON FUEL USED IN TRAINS.—In the case of fuel sold for use in a diesel-powered train, with respect to the tax imposed by section 4091(b)(1)(A), paragraph (1) shall apply only to the excess of such tax over 4.75 cents per gallon. In the case of fuel sold for use after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991, the preceding sentence shall be applied by substituting '2 cents' for '4.75 cents'; in the case of fuel sold for use after June 30, 1991, and before January 1, 1992, the preceding sentence shall be applied by substituting '4.5 cents' for '4.75 cents'."

(B) Subsection (l) of section 6427 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) 4.75-CENT TAX ON FUEL USED IN TRAINS.—In the case of fuel used in a diesel-powered train, with respect to the tax imposed by section 4091(b)(1)(A), paragraph (1) shall apply only to the excess of such tax over 4.75 cents per gallon. In the case of fuel used after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991, the preceding sentence shall be applied by substituting '2 cents' for '4.75 cents'; in the case of fuel used after June 30, 1991, and before January 1, 1992, the preceding sentence shall be applied by substituting '4.5 cents' for '4.75 cents'."

(C) Section 4041(a) is amended by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4) and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) TAX ON DIESEL FUEL USED IN TRAINS.—There is hereby imposed a tax of 4.75 cents a gallon on any liquid (other than any product taxable under section 4081)—

"(A) sold by any person to an owner, lessee, or other operator of a diesel-powered train for use as a fuel in such train, or

"(B) used by any person as a fuel in a diesel-powered train unless there was a taxable sale of such liquid under subparagraph (A).

No tax shall be imposed by this paragraph on the sale or use of any liquid if there was a taxable sale of such liquid under section 4091."

(D) Paragraph (4) of section 9503(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) CERTAIN ADDITIONAL TAXES NOT TRANSFERRED TO HIGHWAY TRUST FUND.—For purposes of paragraphs (1) and (2)—

"(A) there shall be taken into account the taxes imposed by sections 4041, 4081, and 4091 only to the extent attributable to section 4041(c) and the Highway Trust Fund financing rates and 20 percent of the deficit reduction rate under such sections.

"(B) there shall not be taken into account the taxes imposed by section 4041(a)(3) or 4091 on any diesel fuel used in a diesel-powered train."

(5) INCREASES IN TAXES NOT TO APPLY TO INTERCITY BUSES.—Subparagraph (A) of section 6427(b)(2) is amended by striking "shall not exceed 12 cents" and inserting "shall be 3.1 cents per gallon less than the aggregate rate at which tax was imposed on such fuel by section 4041 or 4091, as the case may be".

(6) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4091(c) is amended—

(i) by striking "9 cents" and inserting "13.75 cents" and by striking "10 cents" and inserting "15.28 cents", and

(ii) by striking "shall be 1/9 cent per gallon" and inserting "and the diesel fuel deficit reduction rate shall be 10/9th of the otherwise applicable such rates under subsection (b)".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 4091(c) is amended by striking "9 cents" and inserting "13.75 cents".

(C) Paragraph (1) of section 4041(a) is amended by striking "of 15 cents a gallon" and by inserting before the last sentence the following new sentence:

"The rate of the tax imposed by this paragraph shall be the sum of the Highway Trust Fund financing rate and the diesel fuel deficit reduction rate in effect under section 4091 at the time of such sale or use."

(D) Subparagraph (A) of section 4041(b)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of—

"(i) qualified methanol fuel, the Highway Trust Fund financing rate applicable under subsection (a)(2) shall be 6 cents per gallon less than the otherwise applicable rate under such subsection,

"(ii) qualified ethanol fuel, the deficit reduction financing rate applicable under subsection (a)(2) shall be the otherwise applicable rate under such subsection plus 0.5 cent per gallon, and

"(iii) qualified methanol or ethanol fuel, subsection (d)(1) shall be applied by substituting '0.05 cent' for '0.1 cent' with respect to sales and uses to which clause (i) or (ii) applies.".

(E) Paragraph (1) of section 4041(k) is amended by striking subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(A) with respect to liquids containing any alcohol other than ethanol, the Highway Trust Fund financing rates under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) shall be 6 cents per gallon less than the otherwise applicable rates under such paragraphs,

"(B) with respect to liquids containing ethanol, the deficit reduction financing rates under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) shall be the otherwise applicable rates under such paragraphs plus 0.5 cent per gallon, and".

(F) Section 4041(m)(1) is amended by striking subparagraph (A), by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C), and by inserting before subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraphs:

"(A) with respect to partially exempt methanol, the Highway Trust Fund financing rate applicable under subsection (a)(2) shall be 4.5 cents per gallon less than the otherwise applicable rate under such subsection,

"(B) with respect to partially exempt ethanol, the deficit reduction financing rate applicable under subsection (a)(2) shall be the otherwise applicable rate under such subsection plus 0.5 cent per gallon, and".

(G) Subsection (d) of section 9502 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) TRANSFERS FOR REFUNDS AND CREDITS NOT TO EXCEED TRUST FUND REVENUES ATTRIBUTABLE TO FUEL USED.—The amounts payable from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund under paragraph (2) or (3) shall not exceed the amounts required to be appropriated to such Trust Fund with respect to fuel so used."

(H) Subparagraph (D) of section 9503(c)(4) is amended by striking "(to the extent attributable to the Highway Trust Fund financing rate)" and by inserting before the period ", but only to the extent such taxes are attributable to the Highway Trust Fund financing rates under such sections".

(7) RATES OF TAX FOR DIESEL FUEL AFTER NOVEMBER 30, 1990, AND BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1992.—Section 4091 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) RATES OF TAX FOR DIESEL FUEL AFTER NOVEMBER 30, 1990, AND BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1992.—

"(1) HIGHWAY TRUST FUND FINANCING RATES.—

"(A) In the case of diesel fuel on which tax is imposed after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991—

"(i) subsection (b)(2) shall be applied by substituting '17 cents' for '19.75 cents', and

"(ii) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting—

"(I) '11 cents' for '13.75 cents' each place it appears, and

(3) TAXES IMPOSED BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1991.—

(A) In the case of taxes imposed after November 30, 1990, and before July 1, 1991, paragraph (2) of section 9503(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied by substituting "1.4 cents" for "1.95 cents".

(B) In the case of taxes imposed after June 30, 1991, and before January 1, 1992, paragraph (2) of section 9503(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied by substituting "1.9 cents" for "1.95 cents".

(i) ESTABLISHMENT OF WETLANDS FUND ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 9504 (relating to aquatic resources trust fund) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subsection (a)(2)(A),

(B) by striking the period at the end of subsection (a)(2)(B) and inserting ", and",

(C) by inserting after subsection (a)(2)(B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) a Wetlands Fund Account.",

(D) by inserting "Wetlands Fund Account," before "Boat Safety Account" in subsection (d), and

(E) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e) and inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) EXPENDITURES FROM WETLANDS FUND ACCOUNT.—Amounts in the Wetlands Fund Account shall be available, as provided by appropriation Acts, for making expenditures to carry out the purposes of any law which is substantially identical to sections 4 through 8 of S. 1731 of the 101st Congress as passed the Senate on August 2, 1990."

(2) TRANSFER OF NEW MOTORBOAT FUEL TAXES TO ACCOUNT.—Section 9503(c)(4) (relating to transfers from the trust fund for motorboat fuel taxes), as amended, is further amended—

(A) by inserting ", at the rates in effect before December 1, 1990" after "1995" in subparagraph (A)(i), and

(B) by redesignating subparagraphs (D) and (E) as subparagraphs (E) and (F), respectively, and inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new paragraph:

"(D) TRANSFER TO WETLANDS FUND ACCOUNT.—Any amount received in the Highway Trust Fund—

"(i) which is attributable to motorboat fuel taxes, and

"(ii) which is not transferred from the Highway Trust Fund under subparagraphs (A), (B), or (C), shall be transferred by the Secretary from the Highway Trust Fund into the Wetlands Fund Account in the Aquatics Resources Trust Fund."

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on December 1, 1990.

(k) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In the case of gasoline and diesel fuel on which tax was imposed under section 4081 or 4091 of such Code before any tax-increase date (other than gasoline on which tax is imposed under section 4041(c)(2) of such Code) and which is held on such date by any person, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax on such gasoline and diesel fuel.

(2) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be—

(A) 4 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(B) 5 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(C) 0.5 cent per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(3) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(A) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding gasoline or diesel fuel on any tax-increase date to which the tax imposed by paragraph (1) applies shall be liable for such tax.

(B) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(C) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid on or before—

(i) May 31, 1991, in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(ii) September 15, 1991, in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(iii) June 30, 1992, in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) TAX-INCREASE DATE.—The term "tax-increase date" means December 1, 1990, July 1, 1991, and January 1, 1992.

(B) HELD BY A PERSON.—Gasoline and diesel fuel shall be considered as "held by a person" if title thereto has passed to such person (whether or not delivery to the person has been made).

(C) GASOLINE.—The term "gasoline" has the meaning given such term by section 4082 of such Code.

(D) DIESEL FUEL.—The term "diesel fuel" has the meaning given such term by section 4092 of such Code.

(E) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(5) EXCEPTION FOR EXEMPT USES.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not apply to gasoline or diesel fuel held by any person exclusively for any use to the extent a credit or refund of the tax imposed by section 4081 or 4091 of such Code, as the case may be, is allowable for such use.

(6) EXCEPTION FOR FUEL HELD IN VEHICLE TANK.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1) on gasoline or diesel fuel held in the tank of a motor vehicle or motorboat.

(7) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS OF FUEL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1)—

(i) on gasoline held on any tax-increase date by any person if the aggregate amount of gasoline held by such person on such date does not exceed 4,000 gallons, and

(ii) on diesel fuel held on any tax-increase date by any person if the aggregate amount of diesel fuel held by such person on such date does not exceed 2,000 gallons.

The preceding sentence shall apply only if such person submits to the Secretary (at the time and in the manner required by the Secretary) such information as the Secretary shall require for purposes of this paragraph.

(B) EXEMPT FUEL.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), there shall not be taken into account fuel held by any person which is exempt from the tax imposed by paragraph (1) by reason of paragraph (5).

(C) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—For purposes of this paragraph, rules similar to the rules of paragraph (5) of section 13201(e) of this Act shall apply.

(7) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 4081 of such Code in the case of gasoline and section 4091 in the case of diesel fuel shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subsection, apply with respect to the floor stock taxes imposed by paragraph (1) to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 4081 or 4091.

(8) TRANSFER OF PORTION OF FLOOR STOCKS REVENUE TO HIGHWAY TRUST FUND.—For purposes of determining the amount transferred to the Highway Trust Fund, the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be treated as imposed at a Highway Trust Fund financing rate to the extent of—

(A) 2 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on December 1, 1990,

(B) 2.5 cents per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on July 1, 1991, and

(C) 0.25 cent per gallon in the case of the tax imposed on January 1, 1992.

(k) AMENDMENTS RELATING TO IMPROVED ENFORCEMENT OF GASOLINE TAX.—

(1) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 4082 (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Reporting Required of Terminal Operators.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person—

"(A) who is registered (or is required to be registered) under section 4101 as a terminal operator, and

"(B) from whose terminal gasoline is removed,

shall make a return (at such time and in such form as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe).

"(1) SPECIFIC REPORT REQUIREMENTS.—The report described in paragraph (1) shall specify—

"(A) the name, address, and registration number under section 4101 of the owner (or the owner of record in such cases as the Secretary deems appropriate) of the gasoline,

"(B) the amount of gasoline removed, and

"(C) such other information as the Secretary may require."

(2) REGISTRATION AND BOND.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 4101 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4101. REGISTRATION AND BOND.

"(a) Registration.—Each person—

"(1) before incurring any liability for tax under section 4091, or

"(2) required by the Secretary as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this part,

shall register with the Secretary at such time, in such manner and form, and subject to such terms and conditions, as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. A registration under this subsection may be used only in accordance with regulations prescribed under this subsection. Rules similar to the rules of section 4222(c) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

"(b) BONDS AND LIENS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the Secretary may require, as a condition of permitting any person to be registered under subsection (a), that such person—

"(1) give a bond in such sum as the Secretary determines appropriate, and

"(2) agree to the imposition of a lien on such property (or rights to property) of such person as the Secretary determines appropriate.

If a lien is imposed pursuant to paragraph (2), the Secretary shall release such lien in connection with a transfer of the property if there is furnished to the Secretary (and accepted by the Secretary) a bond in such sum as the Secretary determines appropriate. The Secretary shall respond to any request to release a lien imposed pursuant to paragraph (2) in connection with a transfer of the property not later than 90 days after the date the request for such a release is made."

(B) DISCLOSURE PERMITTED OF REGISTRATION INFORMATION.—Subsection (k) of section 6103 (relating to disclosure of certain returns and return information for tax administration purposes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) DISCLOSURE OF NAMES AND REGISTRATION NUMBERS FOR ADMINISTRATION OF EXCISE TAXES.—The name, address, and registration number of any person registered with the Secretary under subtitle D may be disclosed to the extent necessary to permit the effective administration of such subtitle. In the case of the tax imposed by section 4081, the terminals owned by such person may also be disclosed."

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part III of subchapter A of chapter 32 is amended by inserting "and special rules" in the item relating to section 4082.

(4) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

SEC. 7405A. INCREASE AND EXTENSION OF AVIATION-RELATED TAXES AND TRUST FUND; REPEAL OF REDUCTION IN RATES.

(a) INCREASE IN RATES ON TRANSPORTATION.—

(1) TRANSPORTATION OF PERSONS.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 4261 are each amended by striking "8 percent" and inserting "10 percent".

(2) TRANSPORTATION OF PROPERTY.—Subsection (a) of section 4271 is amended by striking "5 percent" and inserting "6.25 percent".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to transportation beginning after December 31, 1990, but shall not apply to amounts paid on or before such date.

(b) INCREASE IN RATES ON FUEL.—

(1) NONCOMMERCIAL AVIATION JET FUELS.—Paragraph (3) of section 4091(b) is amended by striking "14 cents" and inserting "17.5 cents".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "14 cents" and inserting "17.5 cents".

(B)(i) Subparagraph (B) of section 4041(k)(1), as redesignated by section 13211 of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(B) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents' and '3 cents' for '15 cents'."

(ii) Subparagraph (B) of section 4041(m)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents' and '3 cents' for '15 cents'."

(C)(i) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 4091(d) are amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate shall be—

"(A) 3.5 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of any mixture of aviation fuel if—

"(i) at least 10 percent of such mixture consists of alcohol (as defined in section 4081(c)(3)), and

"(ii) the aviation fuel in such mixture was not taxed under subparagraph (B), and

"(B) 3.89 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of aviation fuel for use (at the time of such sale) in producing a mixture described in subparagraph (A).

In the case of a sale described in subparagraph (B), the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund financing rate shall be 1/9 cent per gallon.

"(2) LATER SEPARATION.—If any person separates the aviation fuel from a mixture of the aviation fuel and alcohol on which tax was imposed under subsection (a) at the Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate equivalent to 3.5 cents per gallon by reason of this subsection (or with respect to which a credit or payment was allowed or made by reason of section 6427(f)(1)), such person shall be treated as the producer of such aviation fuel. The amount of tax imposed on any sale of such aviation fuel by such person shall be reduced by the amount of tax imposed (and not credited or refunded) on any prior sale of such fuel."

(ii) The heading for subsection (d) of section 4091 is amended by striking "EXEMPTION FROM" and inserting "REDUCED RATE OF".

(3) Subsection (f) of section 6427 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) GASOLINE, DIESEL FUEL, AND AVIATION FUEL USED TO PRODUCE CERTAIN ALCOHOL FUELS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (k), if any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel on which tax was imposed by section 4081 or 4091 at the regular tax rate is used by any person in producing a mixture described in section 4081(c), 4091(c)(1)(A), or 4091(d)(1)(A) (as the case may be) which is sold or used in such person's trade or business the Secretary shall pay (without interest) to such person an amount equal to the excess of the regular tax rate over the incentive tax rate with respect to such fuel.

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) REGULAR TAX RATE.—The term 'regular tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (d) thereof.

"(B) INCENTIVE TAX RATE.—The term 'incentive tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1)(B) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (d)(1)(B) thereof.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH OTHER REPAYMENT PROVISIONS.—No amount shall be payable under paragraph (1) with respect to any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel with respect to which an amount is payable under subsection (d), (e), or (l) of this section or under section 6420 or 6421.

"(4) TERMINATION.—This subsection shall not apply with respect to any mixture sold or used after September 30, 2000, or if earlier for any period before January 1, 2000, during which the Highway Trust Fund financing rate under section 4081(a)(2) is not in effect."

(4) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

(5) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(A) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In the case of gasoline or aviation fuel on which tax was imposed under section 4041(c)(2) or 4091 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 before January 1, 1991, and which is held on such date by any person, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax on such gasoline or fuel.

(B) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of the tax imposed by subparagraph (A) shall be—

(i) 3 cents per gallon in the case of gasoline, and

(ii) 3.5 cents per gallon in the case of aviation fuel.

(C) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(i) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding gasoline or aviation fuel on January 1, 1991, to which the tax imposed by this paragraph applies shall be liable for such tax.

(ii) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(iii) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid on or before June 30, 1991.

(D) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) HELD BY A PERSON.—Gasoline or aviation fuel shall be considered as "held by a person" if title thereto has passed to such person (whether or not delivery to the person has been made).

(ii) GASOLINE.—The term "gasoline" has the meaning given such term by section 4082 of such Code.

(iii) AVIATION FUEL.—The term "aviation fuel" has the meaning given such term by section 4092(a) of such Code.

(iv) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(E) EXCEPTION FOR EXEMPT USES.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to fuel held by any person exclusively for any use which is a nontaxable use (as defined in section 6427(l) of such Code).

(F) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 4091 of such Code shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph, apply with respect to the floor stock taxes imposed by this paragraph to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 4091.

(c) EXTENSION OF TAXES AND TRUST FUND.—

(1) TRANSPORTATION TAXES.—Sections 4261(g) and 4271(d) are each amended by striking "January 1, 1991" and inserting "January 2, 1996".

(2) FUEL TAXES.—

(A) Subparagraph (B) of section 4091(b)(6) (as redesignated by section 13211(b)) is amended by striking "January 2, 1991" and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(B) Paragraph (5) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "December 31, 1990" and inserting "December 31, 1995".

(3) DEPOSITS INTO TRUST FUND.—Subsection (b) of section 9502 (relating to transfer to Airport and Airway Trust Fund of amounts equivalent to certain taxes) is amended by striking "January 1, 1991" each place it appears and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(4) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 9502(b)(2) is amended by inserting "and the deficit reduction financing rate" after "rate".

(d) REPEAL OF REDUCTION IN RATES.—

(1) Section 4283 (relating to reduction in aviation related taxes in certain cases) is hereby repealed.

(2) The table of sections for part III of subchapter C of chapter 33 is amended by striking the item relating to section 4283.

(3) Subsection (c) of section 4041 is amended by striking paragraph (6).

It is the sense of the Senate that the conferees be instructed to adjust the taxes imposed by sections 4041(a)(3) or 4091 on any diesel fuel used on a diesel-powered train so that such taxes will not exceed the increases to taxes imposed under sections 4041, 4081, and 4091 (other than on trains) which will not be dedicated to the highway trust fund.

Over $14,150	$3,253.50, plus 33% of the excess over $14,150."

(b) REPEAL OF PHASEOUT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1 is amended by striking subsection (g) (relating to phaseout of 15-percent rate and personal exemptions).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 1(f)(6) (relating to adjustments for inflation) is amended by striking "subsection (g)(4),".

(c) 28 PERCENT MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—Subsection (j) of section 1 (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If a taxpayer has a net capital gain for any taxable year, then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the sum of—

"(A) a tax computed at the rates and in the same manner as if this subsection had not been enacted on the greater of—

"(i) taxable income reduced by the amount of the net capital gain, or

"(ii) the amount of taxable income taxed at a rate below 28 percent, plus

"(B) a tax of 28 percent of the amount of taxable income in excess of the amount determined under paragraph (1).

"(2) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 1202 DEDUCTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the amount of the net capital gain shall be reduced by the sum of—

"(A) the amount allowable as a deduction under section 1202(a)(1), plus

SEC. 13104. TAXES ON LUXURY ITEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 31 (relating to retail excise taxes) is amended by redesignating subchapters A and B as subchapters B and C, respectively, and by inserting before subchapter B (as so redesignated) the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER A—CERTAIN LUXURY ITEMS

"Part I. Imposition of taxes.

"Part II. Rules of general applicability.

"PART I. IMPOSITION OF TAXES

"Subpart A. Passenger vehicles, boats, and aircraft.

"Subpart B. Jewelry and furs.

"Subpart A—Passenger Vehicles, Boats, and Aircraft

"Sec. 4001. Passenger vehicles.

"Sec. 4002. Boats.

"Sec. 4003. Aircraft.

"Sec. 4004. Rules applicable to subpart A.

"SEC. 4001. PASSENGER VEHICLES.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the 1st retail sale of any passenger vehicle a tax equal to 10 percent of the price for which so sold to the extent such price exceeds $30,000.

"(b) PASSENGER VEHICLE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'passenger vehicle' means any 4-wheeled vehicle—

"(A) which is manufactured primarily for use on public streets, roads, and highways, and

"(B) which is rated at 6,000 pounds unloaded gross vehicle weight or less.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) TRUCKS AND VANS.—In the case of a truck or van, paragraph (1)(B) shall be applied by substituting 'gross vehicle weight' for 'unloaded gross vehicle weight'.

"(B) LIMOUSINES.—In the case of a limousine, paragraph (1) shall be applied without regard to subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS FOR TAXICABS, ETC.—The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the sale of any passenger vehicle for use by the purchaser exclusively in the active conduct of a trade or business of transporting persons or property for compensation or hire.

"SEC. 4002. BOATS.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the 1st retail sale of any boat a tax equal to 10 percent of the price for which so sold to the extent such price exceeds $100,000.

"(b) EXCEPTIONS.—The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the sale of any boat for use by the purchaser exclusively in the active conduct of—

"(1) a trade or business of commercial fishing or transporting persons or property for compensation or hire, or

"(2) any other trade or business unless the boat is to be used predominantly in any activity which is of a type generally considered to constitute entertainment, amusement, or recreation.

"SEC. 4003. AIRCRAFT.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the 1st retail sale of any aircraft a tax equal to 10 percent of the price for which so sold to the extent such price exceeds $100,000.

"(b) AIRCRAFT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'aircraft' means any aircraft—

"(1) which is propelled by a motor, and

"(2) which is capable of carrying 1 or more individuals.

"(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the sale of any aircraft for use by the purchaser exclusively—

"(1) in the aerial application of fertilizers or other substances,

"(2) in the case of a helicopter, in a use described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 4261(e),

"(3) in a trade or business of providing flight training, or

"(4) in a trade or business of transporting persons or property for compensation or hire.

"SEC. 4004. RULES APPLICABLE TO SUBPART A.

"(a) EXEMPTION FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT USES, ETC.—No tax shall be imposed under this subpart on the sale of any article—

"(1) to the Federal Government, or a State or local government, for use exclusively in police, firefighting, search and rescue, or other law enforcement or public safety activities, or

"(2) to any person for use exclusively in providing emergency medical services.

"(b) SEPARATE PURCHASE OF ARTICLE AND PARTS AND ACCESSORIES THEREFOR.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if—

"(A) the owner, lessee, or operator of any article taxable under this subpart (determined without regard to price) installs (or causes to be installed) any part or accessory on such article, and

"(B) such installation is not later than the date 6 months after the date the article was 1st placed in service, then there is hereby imposed on such installation a tax equal to 10 percent of the price of such part or accessory and its installation.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) on the installation of any part or accessory shall not exceed 10 percent of the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the sum of—

"(i) the price of such part or accessory and its installation,

"(ii) the aggregate price of the parts and accessories (and their installation) installed before such part or accessory, plus

"(iii) the price for which the passenger vehicle, boat, or aircraft was sold, over

"(B) $100,000 ($30,000 in the case of a passenger vehicle).

"(3) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply if—

"(A) the part or accessory installed is a replacement part or accessory, or

"(B) the aggregate price of the parts and accessories (and their installation) described in paragraph (1) with respect to the taxable article does not exceed $200 (or such other amount or amounts as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe).

"(4) INSTALLERS SECONDARILY LIABLE FOR TAX.—The owners of the trade or business installing the parts or accessories shall be secondarily liable for the tax imposed by this subsection.

"(c) IMPOSITION OF TAX ON SALES, ETC., WITHIN 2 YEARS OF ARTICLES PURCHASED TAX-FREE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) no tax was imposed under this subchapter on the 1st retail sale of any article by reason of its exempt use, and

"(B) within 2 years after the date of such 1st retail sale, such article is resold by the purchaser or such purchaser makes a substantial non-exempt use of such article, then such sale or use of such article by such purchaser shall be treated as the 1st retail sale of such article for a price equal to its fair market value at the time of such sale or use.

"(2) EXEMPT USE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'exempt use' means any use of an article if the 1st retail sale of such article is not taxable under this subchapter by reason of such use.

"Subpart B—Jewelry and Furs

"Sec. 4006. Jewelry.

"Sec. 4007. Furs.

"SEC. 4006. JEWELRY.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the 1st retail sale of any jewelry a tax equal to 10 percent of the price for which so sold to the extent such price exceeds $5,000.

"(b) JEWELRY.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'jewelry' means all articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation, including watches.

"(c) MANUFACTURE FROM CUSTOMER'S MATERIAL.—If—

"(1) a person who in the course of a trade or business produces jewelry from material furnished directly or indirectly by a customer, and

"(2) the jewelry so manufactured is for the use of, and not for resale by, such customer, the delivery of such jewelry to such customer shall be treated as the 1st retail sale of such jewelry for a price equal to its fair market value at the time of such delivery.

"SEC. 4007. FURS.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the 1st retail sale of the following articles a tax equal to 10 percent of the price for which so sold to the extent such price exceeds $10,000:

"(1) Articles made of fur on the hide or pelt.

"(2) Articles of which such fur is a major component.

"(b) MANUFACTURE FROM CUSTOMER'S MATERIAL.—If—

"(1) a person who in the course of a trade or business produces an article of the kind described in subsection (a) from fur on the hide or pelt furnished, directly or indirectly, by a customer, and

"(2) the article is for the use of, and not for resale by, such customer, the delivery of such article to such customer shall be treated as the 1st retail sale of such article for a price equal to its fair market value at the time of such delivery.

"PART II—RULES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

"Sec. 4011. Definitions and special rules.

"SEC. 4011. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) 1ST RETAIL SALE.—For purposes of this subchapter, the term '1st retail sale' means the 1st sale, for a purpose other than resale, after manufacture, production, or importation.

"(b) USE TREATED AS SALE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If any person uses an article taxable under this subchapter (including any use after importation) before the 1st retail sale of such article, then such person shall be liable for tax under this subchapter in the same manner as if such article were sold at retail by him. "(2) EXEMPTION FOR FURTHER MANUFACTURE.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to use of an article as material in the manufacture or production of, or as a component part of, another article taxable under this subchapter to be manufactured or produced by him. "(3) COMPUTATION OF TAX.—In the case of any person made liable for tax by paragraph (1), the tax shall be computed on the price at which similar articles are sold at retail in the ordinary course of trade, as determined by the Secretary.

"(c) LEASES CONSIDERED AS SALES.—For purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the lease of an article (including any renewal or any extension of a lease or any subsequent lease of such article) by any person shall be considered a sale of such article at retail.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN LEASES OF PASSENGER VEHICLES, BOATS, AND AIRCRAFT.—

"(A) TAX NOT IMPOSED ON SALE FOR LEASING IN A QUALIFIED LEASE.—The sale of a passenger vehicle, boat, or aircraft to a person engaged in a leasing or rental trade or business of the article involved for leasing by such person in a qualified lease shall not be treated as the 1st retail sale of such article.

"(B) QUALIFIED LEASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'qualified lease' means—

"(i) any lease in the case of a boat or an aircraft, and

"(ii) any long-term lease (as defined in section 4052) in the case of any passenger vehicle.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES.—In the case of a qualified lease of an article which is treated as the 1st retail sale of such article—

"(i) DETERMINATION OF PRICE.—The tax under this chapter shall be computed on the lowest price for which the article is sold by retailers in the ordinary course of trade.

"(ii) PAYMENT OF TAX.—Rules similar to the rules of section 4217(e)(2) shall apply.

"(iii) NO TAX WHERE EXEMPT USE BY LESSEE.—No tax shall be imposed on any lease payment under a qualified lease if the lessee's use of the article under such lease is an exempt use (as defined in section 4004(c)) of such article.

"(d) DETERMINATION OF PRICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining price for purposes of this subchapter—

"(A) there shall be included any charge incident to placing the article in condition ready for use,

"(B) there shall be excluded—

"(i) the amount of the tax imposed by this subchapter,

"(ii) if stated as a separate charge, the amount of any retail sales tax imposed by any State or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia, whether the liability for such tax is imposed on the vendor or vendee,

"(iii) the value of any component of such article if—

"(I) such component is furnished by the 1st user of such article, and

"(II) such component has been used before such furnishing, and

"(C) the price shall be determined without regard to any trade-in.

Subparagraph (B)(iii) shall not apply for purposes of the taxes imposed by sections 4006 and 4007.

"(2) OTHER RULES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (2) and (4) of section 4052(b) shall apply for purposes of this subchapter.

"(e) PARTS AND ACCESSORIES SOLD WITH TAXABLE ARTICLE.—Parts and accessories sold on, in connection with, or with the sale of any article taxable under this subchapter shall be treated as part of the article.

"(f) PARTIAL PAYMENTS, ETC.—In the case of a contract, sale, or arrangement described in paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of section 4216(c), rules similar to the rules of section 4217(e)(2), and of section 4216(d), shall apply for purposes of this subchapter."

(b) EXEMPTION FOR EXPORTS.—

(1) The material preceding paragraph (1) of section 4221(a) is amended by striking "section 4051" and inserting "subchapter A or C of chapter 31".

(2) Subsection (a) of section 4221 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of taxes imposed by subchapter A of chapter 31, paragraphs (1), (3), (4), and (5) shall not apply."

"(C) AGE REQUIREMENTS.—An individual meets the requirements of this subparagraph if such individual—

"(i) has not attained the age of 19 as of the close of the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins,

"(ii) is a student (as defined in section 151(c)(4)) who has not attained the age of 24 as of the close of such calendar year, or

"(iii) is permanently and totally disabled (as defined in section 22(e)(3)) at any time during the taxable year.

"(D) IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.—The requirements of this subparagraph are met if the taxpayer includes the following information on the return of tax for such taxable year (or provides such information to the Secretary in such other manner as the Secretary may prescribe):

"(i) the name and age of such individual, and

"(ii) if the individual has attained the age of 1 before the close of the taxpayer's taxable year, the taxpayer identification number of such individual.

"(E) ABODE MUST BE IN THE UNITED STATES.—The requirements of subparagraphs (A)(ii) and (B)(iii)(II) shall be met only if the principal place of abode is in the United States."

(c) SEPARATE SCHEDULE REQUIRED.—The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall prescribe a separate schedule to be included as part of the return of tax of any individual claiming a credit under section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 on such return.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

PART IV—CAPITAL GAINS PROVISIONS

Subpart A—Reduction in Capital Gains Tax for Individuals

SEC. 13131. REDUCTION IN CAPITAL GAINS TAX FOR INDIVIDUALS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1202. CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR INDIVIDUALS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) the annual capital gains deduction (if any) determined under subsection (b), plus

"(2) the lifetime capital gains deduction for nontradable property (if any) determined under subsection (c).

"(b) ANNUAL CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the annual capital gains deduction determined under this subsection is the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, or

"(B) $1,000.

"(2) PHASE-OUT FOR INCOMES BETWEEN $100,000 AND $150,000.—The $1,000 amount specified in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) shall be reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to $1,000 as—"(A) the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year in excess of $100,000, bears to

"(B) $50,000.

"(3) CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS NOT ELIGIBLE.—This subsection shall not apply to—

"(A) any taxpayer whose adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $150,000, or

"(B) any individual with respect to whom a deduction under section 151 is allowable to another taxpayer for a taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which such individual's taxable year begins.

"(4) ANNUAL DEDUCTION NOT AVAILABLE FOR SALES TO RELATED PERSONS.—The amount of the net capital gain taken into account under paragraph (1)(A) shall not exceed the amount of the net capital gain determined by not taking into account gains and losses from sales and exchanges to any related person (as defined in section 543(f)).

"(c) LIFETIME CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR NONTRADABLE PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the lifetime capital gains deduction for nontradable property determined under this subsection for any taxable year is 50 percent of the qualified gain for such taxable year.

"(2) LIMITATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the qualified gain taken into account under paragraph (1) for any taxable year shall not exceed $200,000 reduced by the aggregate amount of the qualified gain taken into account under this subsection by the taxpayer for prior taxable years.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR JOINT RETURNS.—The amount of the qualified gain taken into account under this subsection on a joint return for any taxable year shall be allocated equally between the spouses for purposes of determining the limitation under subparagraph (A) for any succeeding taxable year.

"(3) QUALIFIED GAIN.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'qualified gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year reduced by the annual capital gains deduction for such taxable year, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by only taking into account gains and losses from sales and exchanges on or after October 15, 1990, of qualified assets.

A taxpayer may elect for any taxable year not to take into account under this subsection all (or any portion) of the qualified gain for such taxable year. Such an election, once made, shall be irrevocable.

"(4) QUALIFIED ASSETS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified assets' means any property other than—

"(A) stock or securities for which there is a market on an established securities market or otherwise, and

"(B) property (other than stock or securities) of a kind regularly traded on an established market.

"(5) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—This subsection shall not apply to any individual who has not attained age 25 before the close of the taxable year.

"(d) SECTION NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN TAXPAYERS.—No deduction shall be allowed under this section to—

"(1) a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703) filing a separate return for the taxable year, or

"(2) an estate or trust.

"(e) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SALES OF INTERESTS IN PARTNERSHIPS, ETC.—For purposes of subsection (c), any gain from the sale or exchange of a qualified asset which is an interest in a partnership, S corporation, or trust shall not be treated as gain from the sale or exchange of a qualified asset to the extent such gain is attributable to unrealized appreciation in the value of property described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (c)(4) which is held by such entity. Rules similar to the rules of section 751(f) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence.

"(2) DEDUCTION AVAILABLE ONLY FOR SALES OR EXCHANGES ON OR AFTER OCTOBER 15, 1990.—The amount of the net capital gain taken into account under subsections (b)(1)(A) and (c)(3)(A) shall not exceed the amount of the net capital gain determined by only taking into account gains and losses from sales and exchanges on or after October 15, 1990.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (b), adjusted gross income shall be determined—

"(i) without regard to the deduction allowed under this section, but

"(ii) after the application of sections 86, 135, 219, and 469.

"(B) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME LIMITATIONS.—For purposes of sections 86, 135, 219, and 469, adjusted gross income shall be determined without regard to the deduction allowed under this section.

"(4) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—If for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1991, subsection (c)(1) shall be applied by substituting '41 percent' for '50 percent'.

"(5) SPECIAL RULE FOR PASS-THRU ENTITIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In applying this section with respect to any pass-thru entity—

"(i) the determination of when the sale or exchange occurs shall be made at the entity level, and

"(ii) any gain attributable to such entity shall in no event be treated as gain from sale or exchange of a qualified asset if interests in such entity are described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (c)(4)

"(B) PASS-THRU ENTITY DEFINED.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'pass-thru-entity' means—

"(i) a regulated investment company,

"(ii) a real estate investment trust,

"(iii) an S corporation,

"(iv) a partnership,

"(v) an estate or trust, and

"(vi) a common trust fund."

(b) TREATMENT OF COLLECTIBLES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1222 is amended by inserting after paragraph (11) the following new paragraph:

"(12) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIBLES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a collectible shall be treated as a short-term capital gain or loss (as the case may be), without regard to the period such asset was held. The preceding sentence shall apply only to the extent the gain or loss is taken into account in computing taxable income.

"(B) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SALES OF INTERESTS IN PARTNERSHIPS, ETC.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), any gain from the sale or exchange of an interest in a partnership, S corporation, or trust which is attributable to unrealized appreciation in the value of collectibles held by such entity shall be treated as gain from the sale or exchange of a collectible. Rules similar to the rules of section 751(f) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence.

"(C) COLLECTIBLE.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'collectible' means any capital asset which is a collectible (as defined in section 408(m) without regard to paragraph (3) thereof)."

(2) CHARITABLE DEDUCTION NOT AFFECTED.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 170(e) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of this paragraph, section 1222 shall be applied without regard to paragraph (12) thereof (relating to special rule for collectibles)."

(B) Clause (iv) of section 170(b)(1)(C) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "and section 1222 shall be applied without regard to paragraph (12) thereof (relating to special rule for collectibles)".

(c) MINIMUM TAX.—Paragraph (1) of section 56(b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) LIFETIME CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR NONTRADABLE PROPERTY NOT ALLOWED.—The deduction under section 1202(a)(2) shall not be allowed."

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (a) of section 62 is amended by inserting after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION.—The deduction allowed by section 1202."

(2) Clause (ii) of section 163(d)(4)(B) is amended by inserting ", reduced by the amount of any deduction allowable under section 1202 attributable to gain from such property" after "investment".

(3)(A) Paragraph (2) of section 172(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES OF TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation—

"(A) the amount deductible on account of losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall not exceed the amount includible on account of gains from sales or exchanges of capital assets; and

"(B) the deduction provided by section 1202 shall not be allowed."

(B) Subparagraph (B) of section 172(d)(4) is amended by inserting ", (2)(B)," after "paragraph (1)".

(4)(A) Section 221 (relating to cross reference) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 221. CROSS REFERENCES.

"(1) For deduction for net capital gains in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, see section 1202.

"(2) For deductions in respect of a decedent, see section 691."

(B) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 is amended by striking "reference" in the item relating to section 221 and inserting "references".

(5) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) is amended by striking "1201, and 1211" and inserting "1201, 1202, and 1211".

(6) The second sentence of paragraph (2) of section 871(a) is amended by inserting "such gains and losses shall be determined without regard to section 1202 (relating to deduction for net capital gain) and" after "except that".

(7) Paragraph (1) of section 1402(i) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining the net earnings from self-employment of any options dealer or commodities dealer—

"(A) notwithstanding subsection (a)(3)(A), there shall not be excluded any gain or loss (in the normal course of the taxpayer's activity of dealing in or trading section 1256 contracts) from section 1256 contracts or property related to such contracts, and

"(B) the deduction provided by section 1202 shall not apply."

(e) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1202. Capital gains deduction for individuals."

(f) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending on or after October 15, 1990.

(2) TREATMENT OF COLLECTIBLES.—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to dispositions on or after October 15, 1990.

Subpart B—Depreciation Recapture

SEC. 13135. RECAPTURE UNDER SECTION 1250 OF TOTAL AMOUNT OF DEPRECIATION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 1250 (relating to gain from disposition of certain depreciable realty) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, if section 1250 property is disposed of, the lesser of—

"(1) the depreciation adjustments in respect of such property, or

"(2) the excess of—

"(A) the amount realized (or, in the case of a disposition other than a sale, exchange, or involuntary conversion, the fair market value of such property), over

"(B) the adjusted basis of such property, shall be treated as gain which is ordinary income. Such gain shall be recognized notwithstanding any other provision of this subtitle.

"(b) DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'depreciation adjustments' means, in respect of any property, all adjustments attributable to periods after December 31, 1963, reflected in the adjusted basis of such property on account of deductions (whether in respect of the same or other property) allowed or allowable to the taxpayer or to any other person for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, or amortization (other than amortization under section 168 (as in effect before its repeal by the Tax Reform Act of 1976), 169, 185 (as in effect before its repeal by the Tax Reform Act of 1986), 188, 190, or 193). For purposes of the preceding sentence, if the taxpayer can establish by adequate records or other sufficient evidence that the amount allowed as a deduction for any period was less than the amount allowable, the amount taken into account for such period shall be the amount allowed."

(b) LIMITATION IN CASE OF INSTALLMENT SALES.—Subsection (i) of section 453 is amended—

(1) by striking "1250" the first place it appears and inserting "1250 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990)", and

(2) by striking "1250" the second place it appears and inserting "1250 (as so in effect)".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (E) of section 1250(d)(4) is amended—

(A) by striking "additional depreciation" and inserting "amount of the depreciation adjustments", and

(B) by striking "ADDITIONAL DEPRECIATION" in the subparagraph heading and inserting "DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS".

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 1250(d)(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS.—In respect of any property described in subparagraph (A), the amount of the depreciation adjustments attributable to periods before the distribution by the partnership shall be—

"(i) the amount of gain to which subsection (a) would have applied if such property had been sold by the partnership immediately before the distribution at its fair market value at such time, reduced by

"(ii) the amount of such gain to which section 751(b) applied."

(3) Subparagraph (D) of section 1250(d)(8) is amended—

(A) by striking "additional depreciation" each place it appears and inserting "amount of the depreciation adjustments", and

(B) by striking "ADDITIONAL DEPRECIATION" in the subparagraph heading and inserting "DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS".

(4) Paragraph (8) of section 1250(d) is amended by striking subparagraphs (E) and (F) and inserting the following:

"(E) ALLOCATION RULES.—For purposes of this paragraph, the amount of gain attributable to the section 1250 property disposed of shall be the net amount realized with respect to such property reduced by the greater of the adjusted basis of the section 1250 property disposed of, or the cost of the section 1250 property acquired, but shall not exceed the gain recognized in the transaction."

(5) Subsection (d) of section 1250 is amended by striking paragraph (10).

(6) Section 1250 is amended by striking subsections (e), (f), and (g) and by redesignating subsections (h) and (i) as subsections (e) and (f), respectively.

(7) Paragraph (5) of section 48(q) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) RECAPTURE OF REDUCTION.—For purposes of sections 1245 and 1250, any reduction under this subsection shall be treated as a deduction allowed for depreciation."

(8) Clause (i) of section 267(e)(5)(D) is amended by striking "section 1250(a)(1)(B)" and inserting "section 1250(a)(1)(B) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990".

(9)(A) Subsection (a) of section 291 is amended by striking paragraph (1) and by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4), respectively.

(B) Subsection (c) of section 291 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR POLLUTION CONTROL FACILITIES.—Section 168 shall apply with respect to that portion of the basis of any property not taken into account under section 169 by reason of subsection (a)(4)."

(C) Section 291 is amended by striking subsection (d) and redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

(D) Paragraph (2) of section 291(d) (as redesignated by subparagraph (C)) is hereby repealed.

(E) Subparagraph (A) of section 265(b)(3) is amended by striking "291(e)(1)(B)" and inserting "291(d)(1)(B)".

(F) Subsection (c) of section 1277 is amended by striking "291(e)(1)(B)(ii)" and inserting "291(d)(1)(B)(ii)".

(10) Subsection (d) of section 1017 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) RECAPTURE OF DEDUCTIONS.—For purposes of sections 1245 and 1250—

"(1) any property the basis of which is reduced under this section and which is neither section 1245 property nor section 1250 property shall be treated as section 1245 property, and

"(2) any reduction under this section shall be treated as a deduction allowed for depreciation."

(11) Paragraph (5) of section 7701(e) is amended by striking "(relating to low-income housing)" and inserting "(as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions made on or after October 15, 1990, in taxable years ending on or after such date.

Subtitle B—Excise Taxes

PART I—TAXES RELATED TO HEALTH AND THE ENVIRONMENT

SEC. 13201. INCREASE IN EXCISE TAXES ON DISTILLED SPIRITS, WINE, AND BEER.

(a) DISTILLED SPIRITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraphs (1) and (3) of section 5001(a) (relating to rate of tax on distilled spirits) are each amended by striking "$12.50" and inserting "$13.50".

(2) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 5010(a) (relating to credit for wine content and for flavors content) are each amended by striking "$12.50" and inserting "$13.50".

(b) WINE.—

(1) TAX INCREASES.—

(A) WINES CONTAINING NOT MORE THAN 14 PERCENT ALCOHOL.—Paragraph (1) of section 5041(b) (relating to rates of tax on wines) is amended by striking "17 cents" and inserting "$1.27".

(B) WINES CONTAINING MORE THAN 14 (BUT NOT MORE THAN 21) PERCENT ALCOHOL.—Paragraph (2) of section 5041(b) is amended by striking "67 cents" and inserting "$1.77".

(C) WINES CONTAINING MORE THAN 21 (BUT NOT MORE THAN 24) PERCENT ALCOHOL.—Paragraph (3) of section 5041(b) is amended by striking "$2.25" and inserting "$3.35".

(D) ARTIFICIALLY CARBONATED WINES.—Paragraph (5) of section 5041(b) is amended by striking "$2.40" and inserting "$3.50".

(2) REDUCED RATES FOR SMALL DOMESTIC PRODUCERS.—Section 5041 is amended by redesignating subsections (c), (d), and (e) as subsections (d), (e), and (f), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) REDUCED RATES FOR SMALL DOMESTIC PRODUCERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, in the case of a person who produces not more than 200,000 wine gallons of wine during the calendar year, the per wine gallon rates of the taxes imposed by this section shall be the following amounts on the 1st 100,000 wine gallons of wine (other than wine described in subsection (b)(4)) which are removed during such year for consumption or sale and which have been produced at qualified facilities in the United States:

"(A) 17 cents in the case of wines described in subsection (b)(1).

"(B) 67 cents in the case of wines described in subsection (b)(2).

"(C) $2.25 in the case of wines described in subsection (b)(3).

"(D) $3.40 in the case of wines described in subsection (b)(4).

"(E) $2.40 in the case of wines described in subsection (b)(5).

"(2) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—Rules similar to rules of section 5051(a)(2)(B) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

"(3) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the reduced rates provided in this subsection from benefiting any person who produces more than 200,000 wine gallons of wine during a calendar year."

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Subsection (a) of section 5041 is amended by striking "shown in subsection (b)" and inserting "applicable under subsection (b) or (c)".

(B) Paragraph (3) of section 5061(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) section 5041(e),".

(c) BEER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 5051(a) (relating to imposition and rate of tax on beer) is amended by striking "$9" and inserting "$18".

(2) REGULATIONS.—Paragraph (2) of section 5051(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the reduced rates provided in this paragraph from benefiting any person who produces more than 2,000,000 barrels of beer during a calendar year."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

(e) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any tax-increased article—

(i) on which tax was determined under part I of subchapter A of chapter 51 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or section 7652 of such Code before January 1, 1991, and

(ii) which is held on such date for sale by any person, there shall be imposed a tax at the applicable rate on each such article.

(B) APPLICABLE RATE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the applicable rate is—

(i) $1 per proof gallon in the case of distilled spirits,

(ii) $1.10 per wine gallon in the case of wine described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (5) of section 5041(b) of such Code, and

(iii) $9 per barrel in the case of beer.

In the case of a fraction of a gallon or barrel, the tax imposed by subparagraph (A) shall be the same fraction as the amount of such tax imposed on a whole gallon or barrel.

(C) TAX-INCREASED ARTICLE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term "tax-increased article" means distilled spirits, wine described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (5) of section 5041(b) of such Code, and beer.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR SMALL DOMESTIC PRODUCERS.—In the case of wine held by the producer thereof on January 1, 1991, the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not apply to such wine if the rate of tax under section 5041 of such Code on such wine would have been determined under subsection (c) thereof (as added by this section) had the amendments made by subsection (b) applied to all wine removed during 1990. A similar rule shall apply to beer held by the producer thereof. For purposes of this paragraph, an article shall not be treated as held by the producer if title thereto had at any time been transferred to any other person.

(3) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SMALL WHOLESALE OR RETAIL DEALERS.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1) on tax-increased articles held on January 1, 1991, by any dealer if—

(A) the aggregate liquid volume of tax-increased articles held by such dealer on such date does not exceed 500 wine gallons, and

(B) such dealer submits to the Secretary (at the time and in the manner required by the Secretary) such information as the Secretary shall require for purposes of this paragraph.

(4) CREDIT AGAINST TAX.—Each dealer shall be allowed as a credit against the taxes imposed by paragraph (1) an amount equal to—

(A) $240 to the extent such taxes are attributable to distilled spirits,

(B) $330 to the extent such taxes are attributable to wine, and

(C) $87 to the extent such taxes are attributable to beer.

Such credit shall not exceed the amount of taxes imposed by paragraph (1) with respect to distilled spirits, wine, or beer, as the case may be, for which the dealer is liable.

(5) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(A) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding any tax-increased article on January 1, 1991, to which the tax imposed by paragraph (1) applies shall be liable for such tax.

(B) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulations.

(C) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid on or before June 30, 1991.

(6) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—

(A) CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a controlled group—

(i) the 500 wine gallon amount specified in paragraph (3), and

(ii) the $240, $330, and $87 amounts specified in paragraph (4), shall be apportioned among the dealers who are component members of such group in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "controlled group" has the meaning given to such term by subsection (a) of section 1563 of such Code; except that for such purposes the phrase "more than 50 percent" shall be substituted for the phrase "at least 80 percent" each place it appears in such subsection.

(B) NONINCORPORATED DEALERS UNDER COMMON CONTROL.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, principles similar to the principles of subparagraph (A) shall apply to a group of dealers under common control where 1 or more of such dealers is not a corporation.

(7) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable to the comparable excise tax with respect to any tax-increased article shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subsection, apply to the floor stocks taxes imposed by paragraph (1) to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by the comparable excise tax.

(B) COMPARABLE EXCISE TAX.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term "comparable excise tax" means—

(i) the tax imposed by section 5001 of such Code in the case of distilled spirits,

(ii) the tax imposed by section 5041 of such Code in the case of wine, and

(iii) the tax imposed by section 5051 of such Code in the case of beer.

(8) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Terms used in this subsection which are also used in subchapter A of chapter 51 of such Code shall have the respective meanings such terms have in such part.

(B) PERSON.—The term "person" includes any State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of a State or political subdivision thereof.

(C) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(9) TREATMENT OF IMPORTED PERFUMES CONTAINING DISTILLED SPIRITS.—For purposes of this subsection, any article described in section 5001(a)(3) of such Code shall be treated as distilled spirits; except that the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be imposed on a wine gallon basis in lieu of a proof gallon basis. To the extent provided by regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the preceding sentence shall not apply to any article held on January 1, 1991, on the premises of a retail establishment.

SEC. 13202. INCREASE IN EXCISE TAXES ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS.

(a) CIGARS.—Subsection (a) of section 5701 is amended—

(1) by striking "75 cents per thousand" in paragraph (1) and inserting "$1.125 cents per thousand (93.75 cents per thousand on cigars removed during 1991 or 1992)", and

(2) by striking "equal to" and all that follows in paragraph (2) and inserting "equal to—

"(A) 10.625 percent of the price for which sold but not more than $25 per thousand on cigars removed during 1991 or 1992, and "(B) 12.75 percent of the price for which sold but not more than $30 per thousand on cigars removed after 1992."

(b) CIGARETTES.—Subsection (b) of section 5701 is amended—

(1) by striking "$8 per thousand" in paragraph (1) and inserting "$12 per thousand ($10 per thousand on cigarettes removed during 1991 or 1992)", and

(2) by striking "$16.80 per thousand" in paragraph (2) and inserting "$25.20 per thousand ($21 per thousand on cigarettes removed during 1991 or 1992)".

(c) CIGARETTE PAPERS.—Subsection (c) of section 5701 is amended by striking "1/2 cent" and inserting "0.75 cent (0.625 cent on cigarette papers removed during 1991 or 1992)".

(d) CIGARETTE TUBES.—Subsection (d) of section 5701 is amended by striking "1 cent" and inserting "1.5 cents (1.25 cents on cigarette tubes removed during 1991 or 1992)".

(e) SMOKELESS TOBACCO.—Subsection (e) of section 5701 is amended—

(1) by striking "24 cents" in paragraph (1) and inserting "36 cents (30 cents on snuff removed during 1991 or 1992)", and

(2) by striking "8 cents" in paragraph (2) and inserting "12 cents (10 cents on chewing tobacco removed during 1991 or 1992)".

(f) PIPE TOBACCO.—Subsection (f) of section 5701 is amended by striking "45 cents" and inserting "67.5 cents (56.25 cents on pipe tobacco removed during 1991 or 1992)".

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to articles removed after December 31, 1990.

(h) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES ON CIGARETTES.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—On cigarettes manufactured in or imported into the United States which are removed before any tax-increase date and held on such date for sale by any person, there shall be imposed the following taxes:

(A) SMALL CIGARETTES.—On cigarettes, weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $2 per thousand.

(B) LARGE CIGARETTES.—On cigarettes weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $4.20 per thousand; except that, if more than 6½ inches in length, they shall be taxable at the rate prescribed for cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, counting each 2¾ inches, or fraction thereof, of the length of each as one cigarette.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS OF CIGARETTES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1) on cigarettes held on any tax-increase date by any person if—

(i) the aggregate number of cigarettes held by such person on such date does not exceed 30,000, and

(ii) such person submits to the Secretary (at the time and in the manner required by the Secretary) such information as the Secretary shall require for purposes of this subparagraph.

For purposes of this subparagraph, in the case of cigarettes measuring more than 6½ inches in length, each 2¾ inches (or fraction thereof) of the length of each shall be counted as one cigarette.

(B) AUTHORITY TO EXEMPT CIGARETTES HELD IN VENDING MACHINES.—To the extent provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary, no tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1) on cigarettes held for retail sale on any tax-increase date by any person in any vending machine. If the Secretary so provides with respect to any person, the Secretary may reduce the 30,000 amount in subparagraph (A) and the $60 amount in paragraph (3) with respect to such person.

(3) CREDIT AGAINST TAX.—Each person shall be allowed as a credit against the taxes imposed by paragraph (1) an amount equal to $60. Such credit shall not exceed the amount of taxes imposed by paragraph (1) for which such person is liable.

(4) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(A) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding cigarettes on any tax-increase date to which any tax imposed by paragraph (1) applies shall be liable for such tax.

(B) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulations.

(C) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be paid on or before the 1st June 30 following the tax-increase date.

(5) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) TAX-INCREASE DATE.—The term "tax-increase date" means January 1, 1991, and January 1, 1993.

(B) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—Terms used in this subsection which are also used in section 5702 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall have the respective meanings such terms have in such section.

(C) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(6) CONTROLLED GROUPS.—Rules similar to the rules of section 13201(e)(5) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

(7) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 5701 of such Code shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subsection, apply to the floor stocks taxes imposed by paragraph (1), to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 5701.

SEC. 13203. ADDITIONAL CHEMICALS SUBJECT TO TAX ON OZONE-DEPLETING CHEMICALS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—

(1) The table set forth in section 4682(a)(2) (defining ozone-depleting chemical) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"Carbon tetrachloride	tetrachloromethane
Methyl chloroform	1,1,1-trichloroethane
CFC-13	CF3Cl
CFC-111	C2FCl5
CFC-112	C2F2Cl4
CFC-211	C3FCl7
CFC-212	C3F2Cl6
CFC-213	C3F3Cl5
CFC-214	C3F4Cl4
CFC-215	C3F5Cl3
CFC-216	C3F6Cl2
CFC-217	C3F7Cl."

(2) The table set forth in section 4682(b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"Carbon tetrachloride	1.1
Methyl chloroform	0.1
CFC-13	1.0
CFC-111	1.0
CFC-112	1.0
CFC-211	1.0
CFC-212	1.0
CFC-213	1.0
CFC-214	1.0
CFC-215	1.0
CFC-216	1.0
CFC-217	1.0."

(b) SEPARATE APPLICATION OF EXPORT CREDIT LIMIT FOR NEWLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—Paragraph (3) of section 4682(d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) SEPARATE APPLICATION OF LIMIT FOR NEWLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) shall be applied separately with respect to newly listed chemicals and other chemicals.

"(ii) APPLICATION TO NEWLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—In applying subparagraph (B) to newly listed chemicals—

"(I) subparagraph (B) shall be applied by substituting '1989' for '1986' each place it appears, and

"(II) clause (i)(II) thereof shall be applied by substituting for the regulations referred to therein any regulations (whether or not prescribed by the Secretary) which the Secretary determines are comparable to the regulations referred to in such clause with respect to newly listed chemicals.

"(iii) NEWLY LISTED CHEMICAL.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'newly listed chemical' means any substance which appears in the table contained in subsection (a)(2) below Halon-2402."

(c) SEPARATE BASE TAX AMOUNT FOR NEWLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—Subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 4681(b)(1) are amended to read as follows:

"(B) BASE TAX AMOUNT.—

"(i) INITIALLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—The base tax amount for purposes of subparagraph (A) with respect to any sale or use during a calendar year before 1995 with respect to any ozone-depleting chemical other than a newly listed chemical (as defined in section 4682(d)(3)(C)) is the amount determined under the following table for such calendar year:

"Calendar Year	Base Tax Amount
1990 or 1991	$1.37
1992	1.67
1993 or 1994	2.65.

"(ii) NEWLY LISTED CHEMICALS.—The base tax amount for purposes of subparagraph (A) with respect to any sale or use during a calendar year before 1996 with respect to any ozone-depleting chemical which is a newly listed chemical (as so defined) is the amount determined under the following table for such calendar year:

"Calendar Year	Base Tax Amount
1991 or 1992	$1.37
1993	1.67
1994	3.00
1995	3.10.

"(C) BASE TAX AMOUNT FOR LATER YEARS.—The base tax amount for purposes of subparagraph (A) with respect to any sale or use of an ozone-depleting chemical during a calendar year after the last year specified in the table under subparagraph (B) applicable to such chemical shall be the base tax amount for such last year increased by 45 cents for each year after such last year."

(d) OTHER AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The last sentence of section 4682(c)(2) is amended by inserting "(other than methyl chloroform)" after "ozone-depleting chemical".

(2) Paragraph (3) of section 4682(h) is amended by striking "April 1" and inserting "June 30".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to sales and uses after December 31, 1990.

(f) DEPOSITS FOR 1ST QUARTER OF 1991.—No deposit of any tax imposed by subchapter D of chapter 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 on any substance treated as an ozone-depleting chemical by reason of the amendment made by subsection (a)(1) shall be required to be made before April 1, 1991.

PART II—USER-RELATED TAXES

SEC. 13211. INCREASE AND EXTENSION OF AVIATION-RELATED TAXES AND TRUST FUND; REPEAL OF REDUCTION IN RATES.

(a) INCREASE IN RATES ON TRANSPORTATION.—

(1) TRANSPORTATION OF PERSONS.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 4261 are each amended by striking "8 percent" and inserting "10 percent".

(2) TRANSPORTATION OF PROPERTY.—Subsection (a) of section 4271 is amended by striking "5 percent" and inserting "6.25 percent".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to transportation beginning after November 30, 1990, but shall not apply to amounts paid on or before such date.

(b) INCREASE IN RATES ON FUEL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (3) of section 4091(b) is amended by striking "14 cents" and inserting "17.5 cents".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "14 cents" and inserting "17.5 cents".

(B)(i) Subparagraph (C) of section 4041(k)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(C) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents'."

(ii) Subparagraph (B) of section 4041(m)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) subsection (c) shall be applied by substituting '3.5 cents' for '17.5 cents'."

(C)(i) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 4091(d) are amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate shall be—

"(A) 3.5 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of any mixture of aviation fuel if—

"(i) at least 10 percent of such mixture consists of alcohol (as defined in section 4081(c)(3)), and

"(ii) the aviation fuel in such mixture was not taxed under subparagraph (B), and

"(B) 3.89 cents per gallon in the case of the sale of aviation fuel for use (at the time of such sale) in producing a mixture described in subparagraph (A).

In the case of a sale described in subparagraph (B), the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund financing rate shall be 1/9 cent per gallon.

"(2) LATER SEPARATION.—If any person separates the aviation fuel from a mixture of the aviation fuel and alcohol on which tax was imposed under subsection (a) at the Airport and Airway Trust Fund financing rate equivalent to 3.5 cents per gallon by reason of this subsection (or with respect to which a credit or payment was allowed or made by reason of section 6427(f)(1)), such person shall be treated as the producer of such aviation fuel. The amount of tax imposed on any sale of such aviation fuel by such person shall be reduced by the amount of tax imposed (and not credited or refunded) on any prior sale of such fuel."

(ii) The heading for subsection (d) of section 4091 is amended by striking "EXEMPTION FROM" and inserting "REDUCED RATE OF".

(3) Subsection (f) of section 6427 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) GASOLINE, DIESEL FUEL, AND AVIATION FUEL USED TO PRODUCE CERTAIN ALCOHOL FUELS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (k), if any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel on which tax was imposed by section 4081 or 4091 at the regular tax rate is used by any person in producing a mixture described in section 4081(c), 4091(c)(1)(A), or 4091(d)(1)(A) (as the case may be) which is sold or used in such person's trade or business the Secretary shall pay (without interest) to such person an amount equal to the excess of the regular tax rate over the incentive tax rate with respect to such fuel.

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) REGULAR TAX RATE.—The term 'regular tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (c) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 on such fuel determined without regard to subsection (d) thereof.

"(B) INCENTIVE TAX RATE.—The term 'incentive tax rate' means—

"(i) in the case of gasoline, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4081 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1) thereof,

"(ii) in the case of diesel fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (c)(1)(B) thereof, and

"(iii) in the case of aviation fuel, the aggregate rate of tax imposed by section 4091 with respect to fuel described in subsection (d)(1)(B) thereof.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH OTHER REPAYMENT PROVISIONS.—No amount shall be payable under paragraph (1) with respect to any gasoline, diesel fuel, or aviation fuel with respect to which an amount is payable under subsection (d), (e), or (l) of this section or under section 6420 or 6421.

"(4) TERMINATION.—This subsection shall not apply with respect to any mixture sold or used after September 30, 1995."

(4) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on December 1, 1990.

(5) FLOOR STOCKS TAXES.—

(A) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—In the case of aviation fuel on which tax was imposed under section 4091 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 before December 1, 1990, and which is held on such date by any person, there is hereby imposed a floor stocks tax on such fuel.

(B) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of the tax imposed by subparagraph (A) shall be 3.5 cents per gallon.

(C) LIABILITY FOR TAX AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(i) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—A person holding fuel on December 1, 1990, to which the tax imposed by this paragraph applies shall be liable for such tax.

(ii) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(iii) TIME FOR PAYMENT.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid on or before May 31, 1991.

(D) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) HELD BY A PERSON.—Fuel shall be considered as "held by a person" if title thereto has passed to such person (whether or not delivery to the person has been made).

(ii) AVIATION FUEL.—The term "aviation fuel" has the meaning given such term by section 4092(a) of such Code.

(iii) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate.

(E) EXCEPTION FOR EXEMPT USES.—The tax imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to fuel held by any person exclusively for any use which is a nontaxable use (as defined in section 6427(l) of such Code).

(F) OTHER LAWS APPLICABLE.—All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 4091 of such Code shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph, apply with respect to the floor stock taxes imposed by this paragraph to the same extent as if such taxes were imposed by such section 4091.

(c) INCREASES IN TAX REVENUES BEFORE 1993 TO REMAIN IN GENERAL FUND.—Subsection (b) of section 9502 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"In the case of taxes imposed before January 1, 1993, paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) shall be applied without regard to any increase in tax enacted by Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990."

(d) EXTENSION OF TAXES AND TRUST FUND.—

(1) TRANSPORTATION TAXES.—Sections 4261(g) and 4271(d) are each amended by striking "January 1, 1991" and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(2) FUEL TAXES.—

(A) Subparagraph (B) of section 4091(b)(5) is amended by striking "January 1, 1991" and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(B) Paragraph (5) of section 4041(c) is amended by striking "December 31, 1990" and inserting "December 31, 1995".

(3) DEPOSITS INTO TRUST FUND.—Subsection (b) of section 9502 (relating to transfer to Airport and Airway Trust Fund of amounts equivalent to certain taxes) is amended by striking "January 1, 1991" each place it appears and inserting "January 1, 1996".

(e) REPEAL OF REDUCTION IN RATES.—

(1) Section 4283 (relating to reduction in aviation related taxes in certain cases) is hereby repealed.

(2) The table of sections for part III of subchapter C of chapter 33 is amended by striking the item relating to section 4283.

(3) Subsection (c) of section 4041 is amended by striking paragraph (6).

SEC. 13212. AMENDMENTS TO GAS GUZZLER TAX.

(a) INCREASE IN RATE OF TAX.—Subsection (a) of section 4064 (relating to gas guzzler tax) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on the sale by the manufacturer of each automobile a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

If the fuel economy of the model type in which the automobile falls is:	The tax is:
At least 22.5	$ 0

Notwithstanding the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 998, 19 U.S.C. 81a) or any other provision of law, any article which is located in a foreign trade zone on the effective date of any increase in tax under the amendments made by this part, part I, or part IV shall be subject to floor stocks taxes imposed by such parts if—

(1) internal revenue taxes have been determined, or customs duties liquidated, with respect to such article before such date pursuant to a request made under the 1st proviso of section 3(a) of such Act, or

(2) such article is held on such date under the supervision of a customs officer pursuant to the 2d proviso of such section 3(a).

Subtitle C—Other Revenue Increases

PART I—INSURANCE PROVISIONS

Subpart A—Provisions Related to Policy Acquisition Costs

SEC. 13301. CAPITALIZATION OF POLICY ACQUISITION EXPENSES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part III of subchapter L of chapter 1 (relating to provisions of general application) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 848. CAPITALIZATION OF CERTAIN POLICY ACQUISITION EXPENSES.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an insurance company—

"(1) specified policy acquisition expenses for any taxable year shall be capitalized, and

"(2) such expenses shall be allowed as a deduction ratably over the 120-month period beginning with the first month in the second half of such taxable year.

"(b) 5-YEAR AMORTIZATION PERIOD FOR SMALL COMPANIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall be applied with respect to specified policy acquisition expenses for any taxable year of an insurance company which is a small company for such taxable year by substituting '60-month' for '120-month'.

"(2) SMALL COMPANY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'small company' means any insurance company which meets the requirements of section 806(a)(3); except that—

"(A) paragraph (1)(A) of section 806(c) shall be applied by substituting 'insurance' for 'life insurance' each place it appears, and

"(B) paragraph (2) of section 806(c) shall not apply.

"(3) EXCEPTION FOR ACQUISITION EXPENSES ATTRIBUTABLE TO CERTAIN REINSURANCE CONTRACTS.—This subsection shall not apply to any specified policy acquisition expenses for any taxable year which are attributable to premiums or other consideration under any reinsurance contract with any insurance company unless each insurance company which takes into account premiums with respect to the reinsured contract is a small company.

"(c) SPECIFIED POLICY ACQUISITION EXPENSES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'specified policy acquisition expenses' means, with respect to any taxable year, so much of the general deductions for such taxable year as does not exceed the sum of—

"(A) 1.5 percent of the net premiums for such taxable year on specified insurance contracts which are annuity contracts,

"(B) 1.80 percent of the net premiums for such taxable year on specified insurance contracts which are group life insurance contracts, and

"(C) 6.75 percent of the net premiums for such taxable year on specified insurance contracts not described in subparagraph (A) or (B).

"(2) GENERAL DEDUCTIONS.—The term 'general deductions' means the deductions provided in part VI of subchapter B (sec. 161 and following, relating to itemized deductions) and in part I of subchapter D (sec. 401 and following, relating to pension, profit sharing, stock bonus plans, etc.).

"(d) NET PREMIUMS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'net premiums' means, with respect to any category of specified insurance contracts set forth in subsection (c)(1), the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the gross amount of premiums and other consideration on such contracts, over

"(B) return premiums on such contracts and premiums and other consideration incurred for reinsurance of such contracts.

The rules of section 803(b) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence.

"(2) AMOUNTS DETERMINED ON ACCRUAL BASIS.—In the case of an insurance company subject to tax under part II of this subchapter, all computations entering into determinations of net premiums for any taxable year shall be made in the manner required under section 811(a) for life insurance companies.

"(3) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN POLICYHOLDER DIVIDENDS AND SIMILAR AMOUNTS.—Net premiums shall be determined without regard to section 808(e) and without regard to other similar amounts treated as paid to, and returned by, the policyholder.

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN REINSURANCE.—Premiums and other consideration incurred for reinsurance shall be taken into account under paragraph (1)(B) only to the extent such premiums and other consideration are includible in the gross income of an insurance company taxable under this subchapter or are subject to tax under this chapter by reason of subpart F of part III of subchapter N.

"(e) CLASSIFICATION OF CONTRACTS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) SPECIFIED INSURANCE CONTRACT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the term 'specified insurance contract' means any life insurance, annuity, or noncancellable accident and health insurance contract (including any life insurance or annuity contract combined with noncancellable accident and health insurance).

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—The term 'specified insurance contract' shall not include—

"(i) any pension plan contract (as defined in section 818(a)),

"(ii) any flight insurance or similar contract, and

"(iii) any qualified foreign contract (as defined in section 807(e)(4) without regard to paragraph (5) of this subsection).

"(2) GROUP LIFE INSURANCE CONTRACT.—The term 'group life insurance contract' means any life insurance contract—

"(A) which covers a group of individuals defined by reference to employment relationship, membership in an organization, or similar factor,

"(B) the premiums for which are determined on a group basis, and

"(C) the proceeds of which are payable to (or for the benefit of) persons other than the employer of the insured, an organization to which the insured belongs, or other similar person.

"(3) TREATMENT OF ANNUITY CONTRACTS COMBINED WITH NONCANCELLABLE ACCIDENT AND HEALTH INSURANCE.—Any annuity contract combined with noncancellable accident and health insurance shall be treated as a noncancellable accident and health insurance contract and not as an annuity contract.

"(4) TREATMENT OF GUARANTEED RENEWABLE CONTRACTS.—The rules of section 816(e) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(5) TREATMENT OF REINSURANCE CONTRACT.—A contract which reinsures another contract shall be treated in the same manner as the reinsured contract.

"(f) SPECIAL RULE WHERE NEGATIVE NET PREMIUMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any taxable year there is a negative capitalization amount with respect to any category of specified insurance contracts set forth in subsection (c)(1)—

"(A) the amount otherwise required to be capitalized under this section for such taxable year with respect to any other category of specified insurance contracts shall be reduced (but not below zero) by such negative capitalization amount, and

"(B) such negative capitalization amount (to the extent not taken into account under subparagraph (A))—

"(i) shall reduce (but not below zero) the unamortized balance (as of the beginning of such taxable year) of the amounts previously capitalized under subsection (a) (beginning with the amount capitalized for the most recent taxable year), and

"(ii) to the extent taken into account as such a reduction, shall be allowed as a deduction for such taxable year.

"(2) NEGATIVE CAPITALIZATION AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'negative capitalization amount' means, with respect to any category of specified insurance contracts, the percentage (applicable under subsection (c)(1) to such category) of the amount (if any) by which—

"(A) the amount determined under subparagraph (B) of subsection (d)(1) with respect to such category, exceeds

"(B) the amount determined under subparagraph (A) of subsection (d)(1) with respect to such category.

"(g) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CEDING COMMISSIONS.—Nothing in any provision of law (other than this section) shall require the capitalization of any ceding commission incurred on or after September 30, 1990, under any reinsurance contract.

"(h) TREATMENT OF QUALIFIED FOREIGN CONTRACTS UNDER ADJUSTED CURRENT EARNINGS PREFERENCE.—For purposes of determining adjusted current earnings under section 56(g), acquisition expenses with respect to contracts described in clause (iii) of subsection (e)(1)(B) shall be capitalized and amortized in accordance with the treatment generally required under generally accepted accounting principles as if this subsection applied to such contracts for all taxable years.

"(i) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—In the case of any taxable year which includes September 30, 1990, the amount taken into account as the net premiums (or negative capitalization amount) with respect to any category of specified insurance contracts shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which (but for this subsection) would be so taken into account as the number of days in such taxable year on or after September 30, 1990, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year."

(b) REPEAL OF SPECIAL TREATMENT OF ACQUISITION EXPENSES UNDER MINIMUM TAX.—Paragraph (4) of section 56(g) is amended by striking subparagraph (F) and redesignating subparagraphs (G) and (H) as subparagraphs (F) and (G), respectively.

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter L of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 848. Capitalization of certain policy acquisition expenses."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c) shall apply to taxable years ending on or after September 30, 1990. Any capitalization required by reason of such amendments shall not be treated as a change in method of accounting for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(2) SUBSECTION (b).—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990.

(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR YEAR WHICH INCLUDES SEPTEMBER 30, 1990.—In the case of any taxable year which includes September 30, 1990, the amount of acquisition expenses which is required to be capitalized under section 56(g)(4)(F) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect before the amendment made by subsection (b)) shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which (but for this subparagraph) would be so required to be capitalized as the number of days in such taxable year before September 30, 1990, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year. A similar reduction shall be made in the amount amortized for such taxable year under such section 56(g)(4)(F).

SEC. 13302. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN NONLIFE RESERVES OF LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (e) of section 807 (relating to special rules for computing reserves) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) SPECIAL RULES FOR TREATMENT OF CERTAIN NONLIFE RESERVES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount taken into account for purposes of subsections (a) and (b) as—

"(i) the opening balance of the items referred to in subparagraph (C), and

"(ii) the closing balance of such items, shall be 80 percent of the amount which (without regard to this subparagraph) would have been taken into account as such opening or closing balance, as the case may be.

"(B) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning on or after September 30, 1990, and on or before September 30, 1996, there shall be included in the gross income of any life insurance company an amount equal to 3⅓ percent of such company's closing balance of the items referred to in subparagraph (C) for its most recent taxable year beginning before September 30, 1990.

"(ii) TERMINATION AS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—Except as provided in section 381(c)(22), if, for any taxable year beginning on or before September 30, 1996, the taxpayer ceases to be a life insurance company, the aggregate inclusions which would have been made under clause (i) for such taxable year and subsequent taxable years but for such cessation shall be taken into account for the taxable year preceding such cessation year.

"(C) DESCRIPTION OF ITEMS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the items referred to in this subparagraph are the items described in subsection (c) which consist of unearned premiums and premiums received in advance under insurance contracts not described in section 816(b)(1)(B)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990.

SEC. 13303. TREATMENT OF LIFE INSURANCE RESERVES OF INSURANCE COMPANIES WHICH ARE NOT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (4) of section 832(b) (defining premiums earned) is amended by striking "section 807, pertaining" and all that follows down through the period at the end of the first sentence which follows subparagraph (C) and inserting "section 807.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 832(b)(7) is amended—

(1) by striking "amounts included in unearned premiums under the 2nd sentence of such subparagraph" and inserting "insurance contracts described in section 816(b)(1)(B)", and

(2) by striking "such amounts into account" and inserting "such contracts into account".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning on or after September 30, 1990.

Subpart B—Treatment of Salvage Recoverable

SEC. 13305. TREATMENT OF SALVAGE RECOVERABLE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subparagraph (A) of section 832(b)(5) (defining losses incurred) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'losses incurred' means losses incurred during the taxable year on insurance contracts computed as follows:

"(i) To losses paid during the taxable year, deduct salvage and reinsurance recovered during the taxable year.

"(ii) To the result so obtained, add all unpaid losses on life insurance contracts plus all discounted unpaid losses (as defined in section 846) outstanding at the end of the taxable year and deduct all unpaid losses on life insurance contracts plus all discounted unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year.

"(iii) To the results so obtained, add estimated salvage and reinsurance recoverable as of the end of the preceding taxable year and deduct estimated salvage and reinsurance recoverable as of the end of the taxable year.

The Secretary shall by regulations provide that the amounts referred to in clause (iii) shall be determined on a discounted basis in accordance with procedures established in such regulations."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsection (g) of section 846 is amended by adding "and" at the end of paragraph (1), by striking paragraph (2), and by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (2).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(2) AMENDMENTS TREATED AS CHANGE IN METHOD OF ACCOUNTING.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxpayer who is required by reason of the amendments made by this section to change his method of computing losses incurred—

(i) such change shall be treated as a change in a method of accounting,

(ii) such change shall be treated as initiated by the taxpayer, and

(iii) such change shall be treated as having been made with the consent of the Secretary.

(B) FRESH START.—Notwithstanding section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the net amount of the adjustments (otherwise required by such section 481 to be taken into account by the taxpayer) shall not be required to be taken into account for any taxable year.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR OVERESTIMATES.—If for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989—

(A) the amount of the section 481 adjustment which would have been required without regard to paragraph (2) and any discounting, exceeds

(B) the sum of the amount of salvage recovered taken into account under section 832(b)(5)(A)(i) for the taxable year and any preceding taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, attributable to losses incurred with respect to any accident year beginning before 1990 and the undiscounted amount of estimated salvage recoverable as of the close of the taxable year on account of such losses, such excess (adjusted by the discount rate used in determining the amount of salvage recoverable as of the close of the last taxable year of the taxpayer beginning before January 1, 1990) shall be included in gross income for such taxable year.

(4) EFFECT ON EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—The earnings and profits of any insurance company for its 1st taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, shall be increased by the amount of the section 481 adjustment which would have been required but for paragraph (2). For purposes of applying sections 56, 902, 952(c)(1), and 960 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, earnings and profits of a corporation shall be determined without regard to the preceding sentence.

Subpart C—Waiver of Estimated Tax Penalties

SEC. 13307. WAIVER OF ESTIMATED TAX PENALTIES.

No addition to tax shall be made under section 6655 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for any period before March 16, 1991, with respect to any underpayment to the extent such underpayment was created or increased by any provision of this part.

PART II—COMPLIANCE PROVISIONS

SEC. 13311. SUSPENSION OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DURING PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE CERTAIN SUMMONSES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 6503 (relating to suspension of running of period of limitation) is amended by redesignating subsection (k) as subsection (l) and by inserting after subsection (j) the following new subsection:

"(k) EXTENSION IN CASE OF CERTAIN SUMMONSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If any designated summons is issued by the Secretary with respect to any return of tax by a corporation, the running of any period of limitations provided in section 6501 on the assessment of such tax shall be suspended—

"(A) during any judicial enforcement period—

"(i) with respect to such summons, or

"(ii) with respect to any other summons which is issued during the 30-day period which begins on the date on which such designated summons is issued and which relates to the same return as such designated summons, and

"(B) if the court in any proceeding referred to in paragraph (3) requires any compliance with a summons referred to in subparagraph (A), during the 120-day period beginning with the 1st day after the close of the suspension under subparagraph (A).

If subparagraph (B) does not apply, such period shall in no event expire before the 60th day after the close of the suspension under subparagraph (A).

"(2) DESIGNATED SUMMONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'designated summons' means any summons issued for purposes of determining the amount of any tax imposed by this title if—

"(i) such summons is issued at least 60 days before the day on which the period prescribed in section 6501 for the assessment of such tax expires (determined with regard to extensions), and

"(ii) such summons clearly states that it is a designated summons for purposes of this subsection.

"(B) LIMITATION.—A summons which relates to any return shall not be treated as a designated summons if a prior summons which relates to such return was treated as a designated summons for purposes of this subsection.

"(3) JUDICIAL ENFORCEMENT PERIOD.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'judicial enforcement period' means, with respect to any summons, the period—

"(A) which begins on the day on which a court proceeding with respect to such summons is brought, and

"(B) which ends on the day on which there is a final resolution as to the summoned person's response to such summons."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to any tax (whether imposed before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act) if the period prescribed by section 6501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for the assessment of such tax (determined with regard to extensions) has not expired on such date of the enactment.

SEC. 13312. ACCURACY-RELATED PENALTY TO APPLY TO SECTION 482 ADJUSTMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (e) of section 6662 (defining substantial valuation overstatement under chapter 1) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) SUBSTANTIAL VALUATION MISSTATEMENT UNDER CHAPTER 1.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, there is a substantial valuation misstatement under chapter 1 if—

"(A) the value of any property (or the adjusted basis of any property) claimed on any return of tax imposed by chapter 1 is 200 percent or more of the amount determined to be the correct amount of such valuation or adjusted basis (as the case may be), or

"(B)(i) the price for any property or services claimed on any such return in connection with any transaction between persons described in section 482 is 200 percent or more (or 50 percent or less) of the amount determined under section 482 to be the correct amount of such price, or

"(ii) the net section 482 transfer price adjustment for the taxable year exceeds $10,000,000.

"(2) LIMITATION.—No penalty shall be imposed by reason of subsection (b)(3) unless the portion of the underpayment for the taxable year attributable to substantial valuation misstatements under chapter 1 exceeds $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of a corporation other than an S corporation or a personal holding company (as defined in section 542)).

"(3) NET SECTION 482 TRANSFER PRICE ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'net section 482 transfer price adjustment' means, with respect to any taxable year, the net increase in taxable income for the taxable year (determined without regard to any amount carried to such taxable year from another taxable year) resulting from adjustments under section 482 in the transfer price for any property or services. For purposes of the preceding sentence, rules similar to the rules of the last sentence of section 55(b)(2) shall apply."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (3) of section 6662(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Any substantial valuation misstatement under chapter 1."

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 6662(h)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) any substantial valuation misstatement under chapter 1 as determined under subsection (e) by substituting—

"(i) '400 percent' for '200 percent' each place it appears,

"(ii) '25 percent' for '50 percent', and

"(iii) '$20,000,000' for '$10,000,000',".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 13313. TREATMENT OF PERSONS PROVIDING SERVICES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (n) of section 6103 (relating to certain other persons) is amended—

(1) by striking "and the programming" and inserting "the programming", and

(2) by inserting after "of equipment," the following "and the providing of other services,".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 13314. APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS MADE BY SECTION 7403 OF REVENUE RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989 TO TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING ON OR BEFORE JULY 10, 1989.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments made by section 7403 of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989 shall apply to—

(1) any requirement to furnish information under section 6038A(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by such section 7403) if the time for furnishing such information under such section is after the date of the enactment of this Act,

(2) any requirement under such section 6038A(a) to maintain records which were in existence on or after March 20, 1990,

(3) any requirement to authorize a corporation to act as a limited agent under section 6038A(e)(1) of such Code (as so amended) if the time for authorizing such action is after the date of the enactment of this Act, and without regard to when the taxable year (to which the information, records, authorization, or summons relates) began. Such amendments shall also apply in any case to which they would apply without regard to this section.

(4) any summons issued after such date of enactment,

(b) CONTINUATION OF OLD FAILURES.—In the case of any failure with respect to a taxable year beginning on or before July 10, 1989, which first occurs on or before the date of the enactment of this Act but which continues after such date of enactment, section 6038A(d)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by subsection (c) of such section 7403) shall apply for purposes of determining the amount of the penalty imposed for 30-day periods referred to in such section 6038A(d)(2) which begin after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 13315. OTHER REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subpart A of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 (relating to information concerning persons subject to special provisions) is amended by inserting after section 6038B the following new section:

"SEC. 6038C. INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN U.S. BUSINESS.

"(a) REQUIREMENT.—If a foreign corporation (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'reporting corporation') is engaged in a trade or business within the United States at any time during a taxable year—

"(1) such corporation shall furnish (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe) the information described in subsection (b), and

"(2) such corporation shall maintain (at the location, in the manner, and to the extent prescribed in regulations) such records as may be appropriate to determine the liability of such corporation for tax under this title as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe (or shall cause another person to so maintain such records).

"(b) REQUIRED INFORMATION.—For purposes of subsection (a), the information described in this subsection is—

"(1) the information described in section 6038A(b), and

"(2) such other information as the Secretary may prescribe by regulations relating to any item not directly connected with a transaction for which information is required under paragraph (1).

"(c) PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO FURNISH INFORMATION OR MAINTAIN RECORDS.—The provisions of subsection (d) of section 6038A shall apply to—

"(1) any failure to furnish (within the time prescribed by regulations) any information described in subsection (b), and

"(2) any failure to maintain (or cause another to maintain) records as required by subsection (a), in the same manner as if such failure were a failure to comply with the provisions of section 6038A.

"(d) ENFORCEMENT OF REQUESTS FOR CERTAIN RECORDS.—

"(1) AGREEMENT TO TREAT CORPORATION AS AGENT.—The rules of paragraph (3) shall apply to any transaction between the reporting corporation and any related party who is a foreign person unless such related party agrees (in such manner and at such time as the Secretary shall prescribe) to authorize the reporting corporation to act as such related party's limited agent solely for purposes of applying sections 7602, 7603, and 7604 with respect to any request by the Secretary to examine records or produce testimony related to any such transaction or with respect to any summons by the Secretary for such records or testimony. The appearance of persons or production of records by reason of the reporting corporation being such an agent shall not subject such persons or records to legal process for any purpose other than determining the correct treatment under this title of any transaction between the reporting corporation and such related party.

"(2) RULES WHERE INFORMATION NOT FURNISHED.—If—

"(A) for purposes of determining the amount of the reporting corporation's liability for tax under this title, the Secretary issues a summons to such corporation to produce (either directly or as an agent for a related party who is a foreign person) any records or testimony,

"(B) such summons is not quashed in a proceeding begun under paragraph (4) of section 6038A(e) (as made applicable by paragraph (4) of this subsection) and is not determined to be invalid in a proceeding begun under section 7604(b) to enforce such summons, and

"(C) the reporting corporation does not substantially comply in a timely manner with such summons and the Secretary has sent by certified or registered mail a notice to such reporting corporation that such reporting corporation has not so substantially complied, the Secretary may apply the rules of paragraph (3) with respect to any transaction or item to which such summons relates (whether or not the Secretary begins a proceeding to enforce such summons). If the reporting corporation fails to maintain (or cause another to maintain) records as required by subsection (a), and by reason of that failure, the summons is quashed in a proceeding described in subparagraph (B) or the reporting corporation is not able to provide the records requested in the summons, the Secretary may apply the rules of paragraph (3) with respect to any transaction or item to which the records relate.

"(3) APPLICABLE RULES.—If the rules of this paragraph apply to any transaction or item, the treatment of such transaction (or the amount and treatment of any such item) shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion from the Secretary's own knowledge or from such information as the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise.

"(4) JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.—The provisions of section 6038A(e)(4) shall apply with respect to any summons issued under paragraph (2)(A); except that subparagraph (D) of such section shall be applied by substituting 'transaction or item' for 'transaction'.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the terms 'related party', 'foreign person', and 'records' have the respective meanings given to such terms by section 6038A(c)."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 6038A(a) is amended by striking "or is a foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States".

(2) The table of sections for subpart A of part III of subchapter A of chapter 61 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 6038B the following new item:

"Sec. 6038C. Information with respect to foreign corporations engaged in U.S. business."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to—

(1) any requirement to furnish information under section 6038C(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this section) if the time for furnishing such information under such section is after the date of the enactment of this Act,

(2) any requirement under such section 6038C(a) to maintain records which were in existence on or after March 20, 1990,

(3) any requirement to authorize a corporation to act as a limited agent under section 6038C(d)(1) of such Code (as so added) if the time for authorizing such action is after the date of the enactment of this Act, and

(4) any summons issued after such date of enactment, without regard to when the taxable year (to which the information, records, authorization, or summons relates) began.

SEC. 13316. STUDY OF SECTION 482.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall conduct a study of the application and administration of section 482 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. Such study shall include examination of—

(1) the effectiveness of the amendments made by this part in increasing levels of compliance with such section 482,

(2) use of advanced determination agreements with respect to issues under such section 482,

(3) possible legislative or administrative changes to assist the Internal Revenue Service in increasing compliance with such section 482, and

(4) coordination of the administration of such section 482 with similar provisions of foreign tax laws and with domestic nontax laws.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than March 1, 1992, the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report on the study conducted under subsection (a), together with such recommendations as he may deem advisable.

PART III—EMPLOYER REVERSIONS

Subpart A—Treatment of Reversions of Qualified Plan Assets to Employers

SEC. 13321. INCREASE IN REVERSION TAX.

Section 4980(a) (relating to tax on reversion of qualified plan assets to employer) is amended by striking "15 percent" and inserting "20 percent".

SEC. 13322. ADDITIONAL TAX IF NO REPLACEMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who remain as employees of the employer after the termination are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 30 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion, and the transfer is in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 30 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer.

"(ii) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415 LIMITATION.—If, by reason of any limitation under section 415, any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) may not be allocated to a participant before the close of the 7-year period under such clause—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants by reason of any such limitation, shall be allocated to the participant as provided in section 415.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause (after application of clause (ii)).

"(iv) UNALLOCATED AMOUNTS AT TERMINATION.—If any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) is not allocated as of the termination date of the plan—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) PRO RATA BENEFIT INCREASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if a plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(i) have an aggregate present value not less than 25 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(ii) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(B) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a pro rata increase is an increase in the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) as—

"(i) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(ii) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) by substituting 'equal to' for 'not less than'.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an annual benefit or annual addition for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(5) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) NONACTIVE PARTICIPANT.—The term 'nonactive participant' means an individual who—

"(i) is a participant in pay status as of the termination date,

"(ii) is a beneficiary who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or

"(iii) is a participant not described in clause (i) or (ii)—

"(I) who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, and

"(II) whose service, which was creditable under the terminated plan, terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending with the date on which the final distribution of assets occurs.

"(B) PRESENT VALUE.—Present value shall be determined as of the termination date and on the same basis as liabilities of the plan are determined on termination.

"(C) REALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(C), if any benefit increase is reduced by reason of the last sentence of paragraph (3)(A)(ii) or paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be allocated to the remaining participants on the same basis as other increases (and shall be treated as meeting any allocation requirement of this subsection).

"(D) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—The Secretary may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan under paragraph (2).

"(6) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO EMPLOYER IN BANKRUPTCY.—This subsection shall not apply to an employer who, as of the termination date of the qualified plan, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code or in similar proceedings under State law."

(b) AMENDMENTS TO EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.—

(1) FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.—Section 404 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1104) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) If, in connection with the termination of a single-employer plan, an employer elects to establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan, or to increase benefits, as provided under section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a fiduciary shall discharge the fiduciary's duties under this title and title IV in accordance with the following requirements:

"(A) In the case of a fiduciary of the terminated plan, any requirement—

"(i) under section 4980(d)(2)(B) of such Code with respect to the transfer of assets from the terminated plan to a qualified replacement plan, and

"(ii) under section 4980(d)(2)(B)(ii) or 4980(d)(3) of such Code with respect to any increase in benefits under the terminated plan.

"(B) In the case of a fiduciary of a qualified replacement plan, any requirement—

"(i) under section 4980(d)(2)(A) of such Code with respect to participation in the qualified replacement plan of active participants in the terminated plan,

"(ii) under section 4980(d)(2)(B) of such Code with respect to the receipt of assets from the terminated plan, and

"(iii) under section 4980(d)(2)(C) of such Code with respect to the allocation of assets to participants of the qualified replacement plan.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) any term used in this subsection which is also used in section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall have the same meaning as when used in such section, and

"(B) any reference in this subsection to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be a reference to such Code as in effect on January 1, 1991."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 404(a)(1)(D) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1104(a)(1)(D)) is amended by striking "or title IV" and inserting "and title IV".

(B) Section 4044(d)(1) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1344(d)(1)) is amended by inserting ", section 404(d) of this Act, and section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)" after "paragraph (3)".

SEC. 13323. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this subpart shall apply to reversions occurring after September 30, 1990.

(b) EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by this subpart shall not apply to any reversion after September 30, 1990, if—

(1) in the case of plans subject to title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, a notice of intent to terminate under such title was provided to participants (or if no participants, to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation) before October 1, 1990, or

(2) in the case of plans subject to title I (and not to title IV) of such Act, a notice of intent to reduce future accruals under section 204(h) of such Act was provided to participants in connection with the termination before October 1, 1990.

Subpart B—Transfers to Retiree Health Accounts

SEC. 13325. TRANSFER OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 (relating to pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"Subpart E—Treatment of Transfers to Retiree Health Accounts

"Sec. 420. Transfers of excess pension assets to retiree health accounts.

"SEC. 420. TRANSFERS OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If there is a qualified transfer of any excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan (other than a multiemployer plan) to a health benefits account which is part of such plan—

"(1) a trust which is part of such plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of subsection (a) or (h) of section 401 solely by reason of such transfer (or any other action authorized under this section),

"(2) no amount shall be includible in the gross income of the employer maintaining the plan solely by reason of such transfer,

"(3) such transfer shall not be treated—

"(A) as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980, or

"(B) as a prohibited transaction for purposes of section 4975, and

"(4) the limitations of subsection (d) shall apply to such employer.

"(b) QUALIFIED TRANSFER.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified transfer' means a transfer—

"(A) of excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan to a health benefits account which is part of such plan in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990,

"(B) which does not contravene any other provision of law, and

"(C) with respect to which the plan meets—

"(i) the use requirements of subsection (c)(1),

"(ii) the vesting requirements of subsection (c)(2), and

"(iii) the minimum benefit requirements of subsection (c)(3).

"(2) ONLY 1 TRANSFER PER YEAR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No more than 1 transfer with respect to any plan during a taxable year may be treated as a qualified transfer for purposes of this section.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—A transfer described in paragraph (4) shall not be taken into account for purposes of subparagraph (A).

"(3) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—The amount of excess pension assets which may be transferred in a qualified transfer shall not exceed the amount which is reasonably estimated to be the amount the employer maintaining the plan will pay (whether directly or through reimbursement) out of such account during the taxable year of the transfer for qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(II) the date such return is filed, and

"(ii) does not exceed the expenditures of the employer for qualified current retiree health liabilities for such preceding taxable year.

"(B) REDUCTION IN DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deductions otherwise allowable under this chapter to an employer for the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, shall be reduced by the amount of any qualified transfer to which this paragraph applies.

"(C) COORDINATION WITH REDUCTION RULE.—Subsection (e)(1)(B) shall not apply to a transfer described in subparagraph (A).

"(5) EXPIRATION.—No transfer in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995, shall be treated as a qualified transfer.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS OF PLANS TRANSFERRING ASSETS.—

"(1) USE OF TRANSFERRED ASSETS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any assets transferred to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (and any income allocable thereto) shall be used only to pay qualified current retiree health liabilities (other than liabilities of key employees not taken into account under subsection (e)(1)(D)) for the taxable year of the transfer (whether directly or through reimbursement).

"(B) AMOUNTS NOT USED TO PAY FOR HEALTH BENEFITS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any assets transferred to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (and any income allocable thereto) which are not used as provided in subparagraph (A) shall be transferred out of the account to the transferor plan.

"(ii) TAX TREATMENT OF AMOUNTS.—Any amount transferred out of an account under clause (i)—

"(I) shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer for such taxable year, but

"(II) shall be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980 (without regard to subsection (d) thereof).

"(C) ORDERING RULE.—For purposes of this section, any amount paid out of a health benefits account shall be treated as paid first out of the assets and income described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO PENSION BENEFITS ACCRUING BEFORE TRANSFER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if the plan provides that the accrued pension benefits of any participant or beneficiary under the plan become nonforfeitable in the same manner which would be required if the plan had terminated immediately before the qualified transfer (or in the case of a participant who separated during the 1-year period ending on the date of the transfer, immediately before such separation).

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

"(3) MINIMUM COST REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if each group health plan or arrangement under which applicable health benefits are provided provides that the applicable employer cost for each taxable year during the benefit maintenance period shall not be less than the higher of the applicable employer costs for each of the 2 taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year of the qualified transfer.

"(B) APPLICABLE EMPLOYER COST.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable employer cost' means, with respect to any taxable year, the amount determined by dividing—

"(i) the qualified current retiree health liabilities of the employer for such taxable year determined—

"(I) without regard to any reduction under subsection (e)(1)(B), and

"(II) in the case of a taxable year in which there was no qualified transfer, in the same manner as if there had been such a transfer at the end of the taxable year, by

"(ii) the number of individuals to whom coverage for applicable health benefits was provided during such taxable year.

"(C) ELECTION TO COMPUTE COST SEPARATELY.—An employer may elect to have this paragraph applied separately with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act at any time during the taxable year and with respect to individuals not so eligible.

"(D) BENEFIT MAINTENANCE PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'benefit maintenance period' means the 5 taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which the qualified transfer occurs. If a taxable year is in 2 or more overlapping benefit maintenance periods, this paragraph shall be applied by taking into account the highest applicable employer cost required to be provided under subparagraph (A) for such taxable year.

"(d) LIMITATIONS ON EMPLOYER.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) DEDUCTION LIMITATIONS.—No deduction shall be allowed—

"(A) for the transfer of any amount to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (or any retransfer to the plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)),

"(B) for qualified current retiree health liabilities paid out of the assets (and income) described in subsection (c)(1), or

"(C) for any amounts to which subparagraph (B) does not apply and which are paid for qualified current retiree health liabilities for the taxable year to the extent such amounts are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (A) (and income allocable thereto), over

"(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(2) NO CONTRIBUTIONS ALLOWED.—An employer may not contribute after December 31, 1990, any amount to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) with respect to qualified current retiree health liabilities for which transferred assets are required to be used under subsection (c)(1).

"(e) DEFINITION AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED CURRENT RETIREE HEALTH LIABILITIES.—For purposes of this section—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified current retiree health liabilities' means, with respect to any taxable year, the aggregate amounts (including administrative expenses) which would have been allowable as a deduction to the employer for such taxable year with respect to applicable health benefits provided during such taxable year if—

"(i) such benefits were provided directly by the employer, and

"(ii) the employer used the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the rule of section 419(c)(3)(B) shall apply.

"(B) REDUCTIONS FOR AMOUNTS PREVIOUSLY SET ASIDE.—The amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced by any amount previously contributed to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) to pay for the qualified current retiree health liabilities. The portion of any reserves remaining as of the close of December 31, 1990, shall be allocated on a pro rata basis to qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(C) APPLICABLE HEALTH BENEFITS.—The term 'applicable health benefits' mean health benefits or coverage which are provided to—

"(i) retired employees who, immediately before the qualified transfer, are entitled to receive such benefits upon retirement and who are entitled to pension benefits under the plan, and

"(ii) their spouses and dependents.

"(D) KEY EMPLOYEES EXCLUDED.—If an employee is a key employee (within the meaning of section 416(i)(1)) with respect to any plan year ending in a taxable year, such employee shall not be taken into account in computing qualified current retiree health liabilities for such taxable year or in calculating applicable employer cost under subsection (c)(3)(B).

"(2) EXCESS PENSION ASSETS.—The term 'excess pension assets' means the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(ii), over

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(i), or

"(ii) 125 percent of current liability (as defined in section 412(c)(7)(B)).

The determination under this paragraph shall be made as of the most recent valuation date of the plan preceding the qualified transfer.

"(3) HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNT.—The term 'health benefits account' means an account established and maintained under section 401(h).

"(4) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 412.—In the case of a qualified transfer to a health benefits account—

"(A) any assets transferred in a plan year after the valuation date for such year (and any income allocable thereto) shall, for purposes of section 412(c)(7), be treated as assets in the plan as of the valuation date for the following year, and

"(B) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under section 412(b)(2)(B)(iv) for the first plan year after the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer (reduced by any amounts transferred back to the pension plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)), except that such section shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 401(h) is amended by inserting ", and subject to the provisions of section 420" after "Secretary".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 13326. APPLICATION OF ERISA TO TRANSFERS OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

(a) EXCLUSIVE BENEFIT REQUIREMENT.—Section 403(c)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1103(c)(1)) is amended by inserting ", or under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)" after "insured plans)".

(b) FIDUCIARY DUTIES.—Section 404(a)(1) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1104(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "and subject to section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)," after "4044,".

(c) EXEMPTIONS FROM PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—Section 408(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1108(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) Any transfer in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1996, of excess pension assets from a defined benefit plan to a retiree health account in a qualified transfer permitted under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)."

(d) FUNDING LIMITATIONS.—Section 302 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1082) is amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h) and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) QUALIFIED TRANSFERS TO HEALTH BENEFIT ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, in the case of a qualified transfer (as defined in section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986)—

"(1) any assets transferred in a plan year after the valuation date for such year (and any income allocable thereto) shall, for purposes of subsection (c)(7), be treated as assets in the plan as of the valuation date for the following year, and

"(2) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under subsection (b)(2)(B)(iv) for the first plan year after the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer (reduced by any amounts transferred back to the plan under section 420(c)(1)(B) of such Code), except that such subsection shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

(e) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 101 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1021) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) NOTICE OF TRANSFER OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNTS.—

"(1) NOTICE TO PARTICIPANTS.—Not later than 60 days before the date of a qualified transfer by an employee pension benefit plan of excess pension assets to a health benefits account, the administrator of the plan shall notify (in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe) each participant and beneficiary under the plan of such transfer. Such notice shall include information with respect to the amount of excess pension assets, the portion to be transferred, the amount of health benefits liabilities to be funded with the assets transferred, and the amount of pension benefits of the participant which will be vested immediately after the transfer.

"(2) NOTICE TO SECRETARIES, ADMINISTRATOR, AND EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days before the date of any qualified transfer by an employee pension benefit plan of excess pension assets to a health benefits account, the employer maintaining the plan from which the transfer is made shall provide the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury, the administrator, and each employee organization representing participants in the plan a written notice of such transfer. A copy of any such notice shall be available for inspection in the principal office of the administrator.

"(B) INFORMATION RELATING TO TRANSFER.—Such notice shall identify the plan from which the transfer is made, the amount of the transfer, a detailed accounting of assets projected to be held by the plan immediately before and immediately after the transfer, and the current liabilities under the plan at the time of the transfer.

"(C) AUTHORITY FOR ADDITIONAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary may prescribe such additional reporting requirements as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), any term used in such paragraph which is also used in section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991) shall have the same meaning as when used in such section."

(2) PENALTIES.—

(A) Section 502(c)(1) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(c)(1)) is amended by inserting "or section 101(e)(1)" after "section 606".

(B) Section 502(c)(3) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(c)(3)) is amended—

(i) by inserting "or who fails to meet the requirements of section 101(e)(2) with respect to any person" after "beneficiary" the first place it appears, and

(ii) by inserting "or to such person" after "beneficiary" the second place it appears.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to qualified transfers under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

PART IV—CORPORATE PROVISIONS

SEC. 13331. RECOGNITION OF GAIN BY DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION IN CERTAIN SECTION 355 TRANSACTIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 355 (relating to distribution of stock and securities of a controlled corporation) is amended by striking subsection (c) and inserting the following new subsections:

"(c) TAXABILITY OF CORPORATION ON DISTRIBUTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), no gain or loss shall be recognized to a corporation on any distribution to which this section (or so much of section 356 as relates to this section) applies and which is not in pursuance of a plan of reorganization.

"(2) DISTRIBUTION OF APPRECIATED PROPERTY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(i) in a distribution referred to in paragraph (1), the corporation distributes property other than qualified property, and

"(ii) the fair market value of such property exceeds its adjusted basis (in the hands of the distributing corporation), then gain shall be recognized to the distributing corporation as if such property were sold to the distributee at its fair market value.

"(B) QUALIFIED PROPERTY.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'qualified property' means any stock or securities in the controlled corporation.

"(C) TREATMENT OF LIABILITIES.—If any property distributed in the distribution referred to in paragraph (1) is subject to a liability or the shareholder assumes a liability of the distributing corporation in connection with the distribution, then, for purposes of subparagraph (A), the fair market value of such property shall be treated as not less than the amount of such liability.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH SECTIONS 311 AND 336(A).—Sections 311 and 336(a) shall not apply to any distribution referred to in paragraph (1).

"(d) RECOGNITION OF GAIN ON CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS OF STOCK OR SECURITIES IN CONTROLLED CORPORATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a disqualified distribution, any stock or securities in the controlled corporation shall not be treated as qualified property for purposes of subsection (c)(2) of this section or section 361(c)(2).

"(2) DISQUALIFIED DISTRIBUTION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'disqualified distribution' means any distribution to which this section (or so much of section 356 as relates to this section) applies if, immediately after the distribution—

"(A) any person holds disqualified stock in the distributing corporation which constitutes a 50-percent or greater interest in such corporation, or

"(B) any person holds disqualified stock in the controlled corporation (or, if stock of more than 1 controlled corporation is distributed, in any controlled corporation) which constitutes a 50-percent or greater interest in such corporation.

"(3) DISQUALIFIED STOCK.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'disqualified stock' means—

"(A) any stock in the distributing corporation acquired by purchase after October 9, 1990, and during the 5-year period ending on the date of the distribution, and

"(B) any stock in any controlled corporation—

"(i) acquired by purchase after October 9, 1990, and during the 5-year period ending on the date of the distribution, or

"(ii) received in the distribution to the extent attributable to distributions on stock described in subparagraph (A).

"(4) 50-PERCENT OR GREATER INTEREST.—For purposes of this subsection, the term '50-percent or greater interest' means stock possessing at least 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or at least 50 percent of the total value of shares of all classes of stock.

"(5) AGGREGATION RULES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, a person and all persons related to such person (within the meaning of 267(b) or 707(b)(1)) shall be treated as one person. For purposes of the preceding sentence, sections 267(b) and 707(b)(1) shall be applied by substituting '10 percent' for '50 percent' each place it appears.

"(B) PERSONS ACTING PURSUANT TO PLANS OR ARRANGEMENTS.—If two or more persons act pursuant to a plan or arrangement with respect to acquisitions of stock in the distributing corporation or controlled corporation, such persons shall be treated as one person for purposes of this subsection.

"(6) PURCHASE.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the term 'purchase' means any acquisition but only if—

"(i) the basis of the property acquired in the hands of the acquirer is not determined (I) in whole or in part by reference to the adjusted basis of such property in the hands of the person from whom acquired, or (II) under section 1014(a),

"(ii) except as provided in regulations, the property is not acquired in an exchange to which section 351, 354, 355, or 356 applies, and

"(iii) the property is not acquired in any other transaction described in regulations.

"(B) CERTAIN 351 EXCHANGES TREATED AS PURCHASES.—The term 'purchase' includes any acquisition of stock in an exchange to which section 351 applies to the extent such stock is acquired in exchange for—

"(i) any cash or cash item,

"(ii) any marketable security, or

"(iii) any debt of the transferor.

"(C) CARRYOVER BASIS TRANSACTIONS.—If—

"(i) any person acquires stock from another person who acquired such stock by purchase (as determined under this paragraph with regard to this subparagraph), and

"(ii) the adjusted basis of such stock in the hands of such acquirer is determined in whole or in part by reference to the adjusted basis of such stock in the hands of such other person, such acquirer shall be treated as having acquired such stock by purchase on the date it was so acquired by such other person.

"(7) SPECIAL RULE WHERE SUBSTANTIAL DIMINUTION OF RISK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If this paragraph applies to any stock for any period, the running of the 5-year period set forth in subparagraph (A) or (B)(i) of paragraph (3) (whichever applies) shall be suspended during such period.

"(B) STOCK TO WHICH SUSPENSION APPLIES.—This paragraph applies to any stock for any period during which the holder's risk of loss with respect to such stock is (directly or indirectly) substantially diminished by—

"(i) an option,

"(ii) a short sale,

"(iii) any special class of stock,

"(iv) any device limiting risk from any portion of the activities of the corporation, or

"(v) any other device or transaction.

"(8) ATTRIBUTION FROM ENTITIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 318(a) shall apply in determining whether a person holds stock in any corporation (determined by substituting '10 percent' for '50 percent' in subparagraph (C) of such paragraph (2)).

"(B) DEEMED PURCHASE RULE.—If—

"(i) any person acquires by purchase an interest in any entity, and

"(ii) such person is treated under subparagraph (A) as holding any stock by reason of holding such interest, such stock shall be treated as acquired by purchase by such person on the date of the purchase of the interest in such entity.

"(9) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection, including regulations to prevent the avoidance of the purposes of this subsection through the use of related persons, pass-thru entities, options, or other arrangements."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—Subsection (c) of section 361 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For provision providing for recognition of gain in certain distributions, see section 355(d)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions after October 9, 1990.

(2) TRANSITIONAL RULES.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B)(i) of section 355(d)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by subsection (a)), an acquisition shall be treated as occurring on or before October 9, 1990 if—

(A) such acquisition is pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on October 9, 1990, and at all times thereafter before such acquisition,

(B) such acquisition is pursuant to a tender or exchange offer filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before October 9, 1990, or

(C) such acquisition is pursuant to an offer—

(i) the material terms of which were described in a written public announcement on or before October 9, 1990,

(ii) which was the subject of a prior filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and

(iii) which is subsequently filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before January 1, 1991.

SEC. 13332. MODIFICATIONS TO REGULATIONS ISSUED UNDER SECTION 305(c).

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (c) of section 305 (relating to certain transactions treated as distributions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Regulations prescribed under the preceding sentence shall provide that—

"(1) where the issuer of stock is required to redeem the stock at a specified time or the holder of stock has the option to require the issuer to redeem the stock, a redemption premium resulting from such requirement or option shall be treated as reasonable only if the amount of such premium does not exceed the amount determined under the principles of section 1273(a)(3),

"(2) a redemption premium shall not fail to be treated as a distribution (or series of distributions) merely because the stock is callable, and

"(3) in any case in which a redemption premium is treated as a distribution (or series of distributions), such premium shall be taken into account under principles similar to the principles of section 1272(a)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to stock issued after October 9, 1990.

(2) EXCEPTION.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall not apply to any stock issued after October 9, 1990, if—

(A) such stock is issued pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on October 9, 1990, and at all times thereafter before such issuance, or

(B) such stock is issued pursuant to a registration or offering statement filed on or before October 9, 1990, with a Federal or State agency regulating the offering or sale of securities and such stock is issued before the date 90 days after the date of such filing.

SEC. 13333. MODIFICATIONS TO SECTION 1060.

(a) EFFECT OF ALLOCATION AGREEMENTS.—Subsection (a) of section 1060 (relating to special allocation rules for certain asset allocations) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If in connection with an applicable asset acquisition, the transferee and transferor agree in writing as to the allocation of any consideration, or as to the fair market value of any of the assets, such agreement shall be binding on both the transferee and transferor unless the Secretary determines that such allocation (or fair market value) is not appropriate."

(b) INFORMATION REQUIRED IN CASE OF CERTAIN TRANSFERS OF INTEREST IN ENTITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1060 is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) INFORMATION REQUIRED IN CASE OF CERTAIN TRANSFERS OF INTERESTS IN ENTITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) a person who is a 10-percent owner with respect to any entity transfers an interest in such entity, and

"(B) in connection with such transfer, such owner (or a related person) enters into an employment contract, covenant not to compete, royalty or lease agreement, or other agreement with the transferee, such owner and the transferee shall, at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe, furnish such information as the Secretary may require.

"(2) 10-PERCENT OWNER.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term '10-percent owner' means, with respect to any entity, any person who holds 10 percent or more (by value) of the interests in such entity immediately before the transfer.

"(B) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—Section 318 shall apply in determining ownership of stock in a corporation. Similar principles shall apply in determining the ownership of interests in any other entity.

"(3) RELATED PERSON.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'related person' means any person who is related (within the meaning of section 267(b) or 707(b)(1)) to the 10-percent owner."

(2) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Clause (x) of section 6724(d)(1)(B) is amended by striking "section 1060(b)", and inserting "subsection (b) or (e) of section 1060".

(c) INFORMATION REQUIRED IN SECTION 338(h)(10) Transactions.—Paragraph (10) of section 338 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) INFORMATION REQUIRED TO BE FURNISHED TO THE SECRETARY.—Under regulations, where an election is made under subparagraph (A), the purchasing corporation and the common parent of the selling consolidated group shall, at such times and in such manner as may be provided in regulations, furnish to the Secretary the following information:

"(i) The amount allocated under subsection (b)(5) to goodwill or going concern value.

"(ii) Any modification of the amount described in clause (i).

"(ii) Any other information as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to acquisitions after October 9, 1990.

(2) BINDING CONTRACT EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by this section shall not apply to any acquisition pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on October 9, 1990, and at all times thereafter before such acquisition.

SEC. 13334. MODIFICATION TO CORPORATION EQUITY REDUCTION LIMITATIONS ON NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACKS.

(a) REPEAL OF EXCEPTION FOR ACQUISITIONS OF SUBSIDIARIES.—Clause (ii) of section 172(m)(3)(B) (relating to exceptions) is amended to read as follows:

"(ii) EXCEPTION.—The term 'major stock acquisition' does not include a qualified stock purchase (within the meaning of section 338) to which an election under section 338 applies."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to acquisitions after October 9, 1990.

(2) BINDING CONTRACT EXCEPTION.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall not apply to any acquisition pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on October 9, 1990, and at all times thereafter before such acquisition.

SEC. 13335. ISSUANCE OF DEBT OR STOCK IN SATISFACTION OF INDEBTEDNESS.

(a) ISSUANCE OF DEBT INSTRUMENT.—

(1) Subsection (e) of section 108 (relating to general rules for discharge of indebtedness) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) INDEBTEDNESS SATISFIED BY ISSUANCE OF DEBT INSTRUMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of determining income of a debtor from discharge of indebtedness, if a debtor issues a debt instrument in satisfaction of indebtedness, such debtor shall be treated as having satisfied the indebtedness with an amount of money equal to the issue price of such debt instrument.

(B) ISSUE PRICE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the issue price of any debt instrument shall be determined under sections 1273 and 1274. For purposes of the preceding sentence, section 1273(b)(4) shall be applied by reducing the stated redemption price of any instrument by the portion of such stated redemption price which is treated as interest for purposes of this chapter."

(2) Subsection (a) of section 1275 is amended by striking paragraph (4) and redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

(b) LIMITATION ON STOCK FOR DEBT EXCEPTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) of section 108(e)(10) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN STOCK IN TITLE 11 CASES AND INSOLVENT DEBTORS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any transfer of stock of the debtor (other than disqualified stock)—

"(I) by a debtor in a title 11 case, or

"(II) by any other debtor but only to the extent such debtor is insolvent.

"(ii) DISQUALIFIED STOCK.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'disqualified stock' means any stock with a stated redemption price if—

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu therof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Great Lakes Critical Programs Act of 1990".

TITLE I—GREAT LAKES

GREAT LAKES ACTION SCHEDULES

SEC. 101. Section 118 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268) is amended by inserting immediately after subsection (c)(1) the following new paragraphs, and by renumbering the existing paragraphs accordingly:

"(2) GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY GUIDANCE.—

"(A) By June 30, 1991, the Administrator, after consultation with the Program Office, shall publish in the Federal Register for public notice and comment proposed water quality guidance for the Great Lakes System. Such guidance shall conform with the objectives and provisions of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, shall be no less restrictive than the provisions of this Act and national water quality criteria and guidance, shall specify numerical limits on pollutants in ambient Great Lakes waters to protect human health, aquatic life, and wildlife, and shall provide guidance to the Great Lakes States on minimum water quality standards, anti-degradation policies, and implementation procedures for the Great Lakes System.

"(B) By June 30, 1992, the Administrator, in consultation with the Program Office, shall publish in the Federal Register, pursuant to this section and the Administrator's authority under this chapter, final water quality guidance for the Great Lakes System.

"(C) Within two years after such Great Lakes guidance is published, the Great Lakes States shall adopt water quality standards, anti-degradation policies, and implementaiton procedures for waters within the Great Lakes System which are consistent with such guidance. If a Great Lakes State fails to adopt such standards, policies, and procedures, the Administrator shall promulgate them not later than the end of such two-year period. When reviewing any Great Lakes State's water quality plan, the agency shall consider the extent to which the State has complied with the Great Lakes guidance issued pursuant to this section.

"(3) REMEDIAL ACTION PLANS.—

"(A) For each area of concern for which the United States has agreed to draft a Remedial Action Plan, the Program Office shall ensure that the Great Lakes State in which such area of concern is located—

"(i) submits a Remedial Action Plan to the Program Office by June 30, 1991;

"(ii) submits such Remedial Action Plan to the International Joint Commission by January 1, 1992; and

"(iii) includes such Remedial Action Plans within the State's water quality plan by January 1, 1993.

"(B) For each area of concern for which Canada has agreed to draft a Remedial Action Plan, the Program Office shall, pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(C) of this section, work with Canada to assure the submission of such Remedial Action Plans to the International Joint Commission by June 30, 1991, and to finalize such Remedial Action Plans by January 1, 1993.

"(C) For any area of concern designated as such subsequent to the enactment of this Act, the Program Office shall (i) if the United States has agreed to draft the Remedial Action Plan, ensure that the Great Lakes State in which such area of concern is located submits such Plan to the Program Office within two years of the area's designation, submits it to the International Joint Commission no later than six months after submitting it to the Program Office, and includes such Plan in the State's water quality plan no later than one year after submitting it to the Commission; and (ii) if Canada has agreed to draft the Remedial Action Plan, work with Canada, pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(C) of this section, to ensure the submission of such Plan to the International Joint Commission within two years of the area's designation and the finalization of such Plan no later than eighteen months after submitting it to such Commission.

"(D) The Program Office shall compile formal comments on individual Remedial Action Plans made by the International Joint Commission pursuant to section 4(d) of Annex 2 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and, upon request by a member of the public, shall make such comments available for inspection and copying. The Program Office shall also make available, upon request, formal comments made by the Environmental Protection Agency on individual Remedial Action Plans.

"(4) LAKEWIDE MANAGEMENT PLANS.—The Administrator, in consultation with the Program Office shall—

"(A) by January 1, 1992, publish in the Federal Register a proposed Lakewide Management Plan for Lake Michigan and solicit public comments;

"(B) by January 1, 1993, submit a proposed Lakewide Mangement Plan for Lake Michigan to the International Joint Commission for review; and

"(C) by January 1, 1993, publish in the Federal Register a final Lakewide Management Plan for Lake Michigan and begin implementation.

Nothing in this subparagraph shall preclude the simultaneous development of Lakewide Management Plans for the other Great Lakes.

"(5) SPILLS OF OIL AND HAZARDOUS MATERIALS.—The Program Office, in consultation with the Coast Guard, shall identify areas within the Great Lakes which are likely to experience numerous or voluminous spills of oil or other hazardous materials from land based facilities, vessels, or other sources and, in consultation with the Great Lakes States, shall identify weaknesses in Federal and State programs and systems to prevent and respond to such spills. This information shall be included on at least a biennial basis in the report required by this section".

CONTAMINATED SEDIMENTS

SEC. 102 Section 118(c)(7) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(c)(3)), as renumbered by section 101 of this title, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(A)" following the title; and

(2) by adding the following new subsections:

"(B) The Program Office shall—

"(i) by December 31, 1990, complete chemical, physical, and biological assessments of the contaminated sediments at the locations selected for the study and demonstration projects;

"(ii) by December 31, 1990, announce the technologies that will be demonstrated at each location and the numerical standard of protection intended to be achieved at each location;

"(iii) by December 31, 1992, complete full or pilot scale demonstration projects on site at each location of promising technologies to remedy contaminated sediments; and

"(iv) by December 31, 1993, issue a final report to Congress on its findings.

"(C) The Administrator, after providing for public review and comment, shall publish information concerning the public health and environmental consequences of contaminants in Great Lakes sediment. Information published pursuant to this subparagraph shall include specific numerical limits to protect health, aquatic life, and wildlife from the bioaccumulation of toxins. The Administrator shall, at a minimum, publish information pursuant to this subparagraph within 2 years of the date of the enactment of this title.".

SEC. 202. Title I of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 119. LONG ISLAND SOUND.—(a) The Administrator shall continue the Management Conference of the Long Island Sound Study (hereinafter referred to as the 'Conference') as established pursuant to section 320 of this Act, and shall establish an office (hereinafter referred to as the 'Office') to be located on or near Long Island Sound.

"(b) ADMINISTRATION AND STAFFING OF OFFICE.—The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be detailed by the Administrator, following consultation with the Administrators of EPA regions I and II, from among the employees of the Agency who are in civil service. The Administrator shall delegate to the Director such authority and detail such additional staff as may be necessary to carry out the duties of the Director under this section.

"(c) DUTIES OF THE OFFICE.—The Office shall assist the Management Conference of the Long Island Sound Study in carrying out its goals. Specifically, the Office shall—

"(1) assist and support the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan for Long Island Sound developed pursuant to section 320 of this Act;

"(2) conduct or commission studies deemed necessary for strengthened implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan including, but not limited to—

"(A) population growth and the adequacy of wastewater treatment facilities,

"(B) the use of biological methods for nutrient removal in sewage treatment plants,

"(C) contaminated sediments, and dredging activities,

"(D) nonpoint source pollution abatement and land use activities in the Long Island Sound watershed,

"(E) wetland protection and restoration,

"(F) atmospheric deposition of acidic and other pollutants into Long Island Sound,

"(G) water quality requirements to sustain fish, shellfish, and wildlife populations, and the use of indicator species to assess environmental quality,

"(H) State water quality programs, for their adequacy pursuant to implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan, and

"(I) options for long-term financing of wastewater treatment projects and water pollution control programs.

"(3) coordinate the grant, research, and planning programs authorized under this section;

"(4) coordinate activities and implementation responsibilities with other Federal agencies which have jurisdiction over Long Island Sound and with national and regional marine monitoring and research programs established pursuant to the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act;

"(5) provide administrative and technical support to the conference;

"(6) collect and make available to the public publications, and other forms of information the conference determines to be appropriate, relating to the environmental quality of Long Island Sound;

"(7) not more than two years after the date of the issuance of the final Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan for Long Island Sound under section 320 of this Act, and biennially thereafter, issue a report to the Congress which—

"(A) summarizes the progress made by the States in implementing the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan;

"(B) summarizes any modifications to the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan in the twelve-month period immediately preceding such report; and

"(C) incorporates specific recommendations concerning the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan; and

"(8) convene conferences and meetings for legislators from State governments and political subdivisions thereof for the purpose of making recommendations for coordinating legislative efforts to facilitate the environmental restoration of Long Island Sound and the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan.

"(d) GRANTS.—(1) The Administrator is authorized to make grants for projects and studies which will help implement the Long Island Sound Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan. Special emphasis shall be given to implementation, research and planning, enforcement, and citizen involvement and education.

"(2) State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies, and other public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, and organizations held be eligible for grants pursuant to this subsection.

"(3) Citizen involvement and citizen education grants under this subsection shall not exceed 95 per centum of the costs of such work. All other grants under this subsections shall not exceed 50 per centum of the research, studies, or work. All grants shall be made on the condition that the non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources.

"(E) AUTHORIZATIONS.—(1) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the implementation of this section, other than subsection (d), such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1996.

"(2) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the implementation of subsection (d) not to exceed $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1996.".

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS

SEC. 203. Amend subsection 116(g) of the Marine Protection Research and Sanctuaries Act (33 U.S.C. 1416(g)) by striking all after "shall comply with" and inserting in lieu thereof the following "the requirements of this title.".

TITLE III—LAKE CHAMPLAIN

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Lake Champlain Special Designation Act of 1990".

DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 302. Paragraph (2) of section 314(d) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1324(d)) is amended by inserting "Lake Champlain, New York and Vermont;" before "Lake Huston, Texas".

LAKE CHAMPLAIN MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

"SEC. 303. Title I of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section—

"LAKE CHAMPLAIN MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

"SEC. 120. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a Lake Champlain Management Conference to develop a comprehensive pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan for Lake Champlain. The Administrator shall convene the management conference within ninety days of the date of enactment of this section.

"(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Members of the Management Conference shall be comprised of—

"(1) the Governors of the States of Vermont and New York;

"(2) each interested Federal agency, not to exceed a total of five members;

"(3) the Vermont and New York Chairpersons of the Vermont, New York, Quebec Citizens Advisory Committee for the Environmental Management of Lake Champlain;

"(4) four representatives of the State legislature of Vermont;

"(5) four representatives of the State legislature of New York;

"(6) six persons representing local governments having jurisdiction over any land or water within the Lake Champlain basin, as determined appropriate by the Governors; and

"(7) eight persons representing affected industries, nongovernmental organizations, public and private educational institutions, and the general public, as determined appropriate by the trigovernmental Citizens Advisory Committee for the Environmental Management of Lake Champlain, but not to be current members of the Citizens Advisory Committee.

"(c) TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—(1) The Management Conference shall, not later than one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of this section, appoint a Technical Advisory Committee.

"(2) Such Technical Advisory Committee shall consist of officials of: appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government; the State governments of New York and Vermont; and governments of political subdivisions of such States; and public and private research institutions.

"(d) RESEARCH PROGRAM.—(1) The Management Conference shall establish a multi-disciplinary environmental research program for Lake Champlain. Such research program shall be planned and conducted jointly with the Lake Champlain Research Consortium.

"(e) POLLUTION PREVENTION, CONTROL, AND RESTORATION PLAN.—(1) Not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this section, the Management Conference shall publish a pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Plan') for Lake Champlain.

"(2) The Plan developed pursuant to this section shall—

"(A) identify corrective actions and compliance schedules addressing point and nonpoint sources of pollution necessary to restore and maintain the chemical, physical, and biological integrity of water quality, a balanced, indigenous population of shellfish, fish and wildlife, recreational, and economic activities in and on the lake;

"(B) incorporate environmental management concepts and programs established in State and Federal plans and programs in effect at the time of the development of such plan;

"(C) clarify the duties of Federal and State agencies in pollution prevention and control activities, and to the extent allowable by law, suggest a timetable for adoption by the appropriate Federal and State agencies to accomplish such duties within a reasonable period of time;

"(D) describe the methods and schedules for funding of programs, activities, and projects identified in the Plan, including the use of Federal funds and other sources of funds; and

"(E) include a strategy for pollution prevention and control that includes the promotion of pollution prevention and management practices to reduce the amount of pollution generated in the Lake Champlain basin.

"(3) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Management Conference, shall provide for public review and comment on the draft plan. At a minimum, the Management Conference shall conduct one public meeting to hear comments on the draft plan in the State of New York and one such meeting in the State of Vermont.

"(4) Not less than one hundred and twenty days after the publication of the plan required pursuant to this section, the Administrator shall approve such plan if the plan meets the requirements of this section and the Governors of the States of New York and Vermont concur.

"(5) Upon approval of the plan, such plan shall be deemed to be an approved management program for the purposes of section 319(h) of this Act and such plan shall be deemed to be an approved comprehensive conservation and management plan pursuant to section 320 of this Act.

"(f) GRANT ASSISTANCE.—(1) The Administrator may, in consultation with the Management Conference, make grants to State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies, and public or nonprofit agencies, institutions, and organizations.

"(2) Grants under this subsection shall be made for assisting research, surveys, studies, and modeling and technical and supporting work necessary for the development of the Plan and for retaining expert consultants in support of litigation undertaken by the State of New York and the State of Vermont to compel cleanup or obtain cleanup damage costs from persons responsible for pollution of Lake Champlain.

"(3) The amount of grants to any person under this subsection for a fiscal year shall not exceed 75 per centum of the costs of such research, survey, study and work and shall be made available on the condition that non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources.

"(4) The Administrator may establish such requirements for the administration of grants as he determines to be appropriate.

"(g) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'Lake Champlain drainage basin' means all or part of Clinton, Franklin, Warren, Essex, and Washington counties in the State of New York and all or part of Franklin, Grand Isle, Chittenden, Addison, Rutland, Lamoille, Orange, Washington, Orleans, and Caledonia counties in Vermont, that contain all of the streams, rivers, lakes, and other bodies of water, including wetlands, that drain into Lake Champlain.

"(h) STATUTORY INTERPRETATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to affect the jurisdiction or powers of—

"(1) any department or agency of the Federal Government or any State government; or

"(2) any international organization or entity related to Lake Champlain created by treaty or memorandum to which the United States is a signatory.

"(i) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Environmental Protection Agency to carry out this section $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.".

FEDERAL PROGRAM COORDINATION

SEC. 304. (a) DESIGNATION OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN AS A SPECIAL PROJECT AREA UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Lake Champlain basin, as defined under section 120(h) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, shall be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a special project area under the Agricultural Conservation Program established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590h(b)).

(2) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE REIMBURSEMENT.—To carry out the purposes of this subsection, the technical assistance reimbursement from the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service authorized under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, shall be increased from 5 per centum to 10 per centum.

(3) COMPREHENSIVE AGRICULTURAL MONITORING.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Management Conference and appropriate State and Federal agencies, shall develop a comprehensive agricultural monitoring and evaluation network for all major drainages within the Lake Champlain basin.

(4) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—In allocating funds under this subsection, the Secretary of Agriculture shall consult with the Management Conference established under section 120 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act and to the extent allowable by law, allocate funds to those agricultural enterprises located at sites that the Management Conference determines to be priority sites, on the basis of a concern for ensuring implementation of nonpoint source pollution controls throughout the Lake Champlain basin.

(b) COOPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.—For the purpose of enhancing and expanding basic data collection and monitoring in operation in the Lake Champlain basin, as defined under section 120 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the heads of water resources divisions of the New York and New England districts of the United States Geological Survey, shall—

(1) in cooperation with appropriate universities and private research institutions, and the appropriate officials of the appropriate departments and agencies of the States of New York and Vermont, develop an integrated geographic information system of the Lake Champlain basin;

(2) convert all partial recording sites in the Lake Champlain basin to continuous monitoring stations with full gauging capabilities and status; and

(3) establish such additional continuous monitoring station sites in the Lake Champlain basin as are necessary to carry out basic data collection and monitoring, as defined by the Secretary of the Interior, including ground water mapping, and water quality and sediment data collection.

(c) COOPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.—

(1) RESOURCE CONSERVATION PROGRAM—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, in cooperation with the Lake Champlain Fish and Wildlife Management Cooperative and the Management Conference established pursuant to this subsection shall—

(A) establish and implement a fisheries resources restoration, development and conservation program, including dedicating a level of hatchery production within the Lake Champlain basin at or above the level that existed immediately preceding the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) conduct a wildlife species and habitat assessment survey in the Lake Champlain basin, including—

(i) a survey of Federal threatened and endangered species, listed or proposed for listing under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), New York State and State of Vermont threatened and endangered species and other species of special concern, migratory nongame species of management concern, and national resources plan species;

(ii) a survey of wildlife habitats such as islands, wetlands, and riparian areas; and

(iii) a survey of migratory bird populations breeding, migrating and wintering within the Lake Champlain basin.

(2) To accomplish the purpose of paragraph (1), the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service is authorized to carry out activities related to—

(A) controlling sea lampreys and other non-indigenous aquatic animal nuisances;

(B) improving the health of fishery resources;

(C) conducting investigations about and assessing the status of fishery resources, and disseminating that information to all interested parties; and

(D) conducting and periodically updating a survey of the fishery resources and their habitats and food chains in the Lake Champlain basin.

(d) AUTHORIZATIONS.—(1) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Agriculture $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 to carry out subsection (a) of this section.

(2) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Interior $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 to carry out subsections (b) and (c) of this section.

MOYNIHAN AMENDMENT NO. 3021

Mr. FORD (for Mr. MOYNIHAN) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3020 proposed by Mr. FORD (for Mr. LEVINE, for himself and Mr. LIEBERMAN) to the bill H.R. 4323, supra, as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following:

(a) The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Governor of the State of New York, acting jointly, shall convene a management conference for the restoration, conservation, and management of Onondaga Lake. The purpose of this management conference shall include but not be limited to—

(1) the development, within a two year period following the date of the enactment of this Act, of a comprehensive restoration, conservation, and management plan for Onondaga Lake that recommends priority corrective actions and compliance schedules for the cleanup of such Lake; and

(2) the coordination of the implementation of such plan by the State of New York, the United States Army Corps of Engineers, the Environmental Protection Agency and all local agencies, governments, and other groups participating in such management conference.

(b)(1) The members of the mamagement conference convened pursuant to subsection (a) shall include, at a minimum, the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Governor of the State of New York, and representatives of—

(A) the Attorney General of the State of New York;

(B) Onondaga County, New York; and

(C) The city of Syracuse, New York.

(2) Any member of the management conference may designate a representative to attend meetings of the management conference and otherwise represent such member on the management conference.

(3) The management conference shall have ex officio members which shall include, at a minimum—

(A) the United States Senators from the State of New York; and

(B) the memeber(s) of the United States House of Representatives within whose congressional district(s) lies Onondaga Lake.

(4) The management conference shall have standing committees which shall include, at a minimum—

(A) a Citizens Advisory Committee; and

(B) a Technical Review Committee.

(c)(1) Not later than 120 days after the completion of the plan developed pursuant to subsection (a), and after providing for public review and comment, Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall approve such plan if such plan meets the requirements of this section, and if the Governor of the State of New York concurs in such approval.

(2) Upon approval of the plan under this subsection, such plan shall be implemented.

(d)(1) The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency are authorized to make grants to the State of New York to perform activities authorized under this section or to contract for such performance, provided that such grants shall not exceed 70 percent of the costs of such activities and that the non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources. Administrative services for the development and implementation of the plan approved pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided by a not-for-profit corporation established for the purpose of assisting with the planning and coordination of the clean up of Onondaga Lake.

(2) To carry out this section, the Governor of the State of New York may, using funds provided pursuant to paragraph (1), make grants for—

(A) research, surveys, administrative services and studies approved by the management conference as necessary for the development of the plan under this section;

(B) other activities including administrative services that are approved by the management conference and are necessary to implement the plan approved by the management conference pursuant to subsection (a); and

(C) gathering data and retaining expert consultants in support of litigation undertaken by the State of New York to compel clean up or obtain clean up and damage costs from parties responsible for the pollution of Onondaga Lake, including administrative services.

(3) In-kind payments shall qualify for the purpose of meeting the total non-Federal matching requirements of this subsection.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

(f) Grants made under this section are not intended to relieve any person who would otherwise be liable under Federal or State law for damages, response costs, natural resource damages, restitution, equitable relief or any other relief, from liability for such relief.

HISTORIC SITES, BUILDINGS, AND ANTIQUITIES ACT AMENDMENTS

BUMPERS AMENDMENT NO. 3022

Mr. FORD (for Mr. BUMPERS) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2582) to amend the Historic Sites, Buildings, and Antiquities Act, as follows:

1. In section 102(3), strike "and the State of West Virginia".

2. Section 105(a)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Three individuals who are nationally recognized as experts and authorities on the history of the Civil War, and two individuals who are nationally recognized as experts and authorities in historic preservation, appointed by the Secretary."

3. In section 105(g), strike "terminate after" and insert in lieu thereof, "terminate 90 days after".

4. In section 108(a), strike "associated with the Civil War" and insert in lieu thereof, "associated with military action during the Civil War".

5. Strike section 109 in its entirety and redesignate section 110 as section 109.

6. Strike titles II and III in their entirety insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE II—NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM ADVISORY BOARD

"SEC. 201. NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM ADVISORY BOARD

"Section 3 of the Act of August 21, 1935, entitled 'An Act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes' (49 Stat. 667; 16 U.S.C. 463(b)) is amended in the first sentence of subsection (b) by striking '1990' and inserting in lieu thereof '1995'.".

7. Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to provide for a Civil War Sites Study and to reauthorize the National Park System Advisory Board, and for other purposes.".

NEZ PERCE NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

HATFIELD AMENDMENT NO. 3023

Mr. SYMMS (for Mr. HATFIELD) proposed amendment to the bill (S. 2804) to amend the Act of May 15, 1965, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate the Nez Perce National Historical Park in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes, as follows:

In section 2 of the bill, after "Camas Meadows Battle Sites, Idaho;" insert "Joseph Canyon Viewpoint, Oregon; Old Chief Joseph's Gravesite and Cemetery, Oregon (limited to the portion that is, on the date of enactment of this Act, owned by the United States in trust for the Umatilla and Nez Perce tribes); Traditional Campsite at the fork of the Lostine and Wallowa Rivers, Oregon;".

In section 3(c) of the bill, strike "Idaho, Washington," and insert Idaho, Oregon, Washington,".

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, October 17, at 10 a.m. to conduct a hearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Intelligence be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, October 17, 1990, at 5 p.m. to hold a closed conference meeting with the House Intelligence Committee on Intelligence Matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HOLLYWOOD WOMEN'S PRESS CLUB

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, on December 9, 1990, the Hollywood Women's Press Club will be celebrating its 50th annual Golden Apple Awards. It is with great admiration for its many contributions to Hollywood and its distinguished history that I salute the Hollywood Women's Press Club in this Chamber of the U.S. Senate and call upon my Senate colleagues to join with me in commending its members, past and present, for their immeasurable contributions to Hollywood and motion picture history.

Originally launched as a luncheon and swapping of shop talk, the Hollywood Women's Press Club was founded in 1928 by Louella Parsons and 10 of her fellow writing colleagues. Originally the founding members met in their homes, but when time and space demanded a central meeting place, the group decided to meet at the Photoplay office within Hollywood's first skyscraper, the 13-floor Taft Building. Upon expansion of membership, the luncheon club began to meet monthly at the American Room of Holywood's famed Brown Derby. It was here that they named themselves, the Hollywood Women's Press Club.

Averaging nearly 140 members, the HWPC restricted its memberships to newspaper and magazine writers. However, in 1938 when the club's 25-cent monthly dues proved to be too small to purchase a going-away gift for a member, they decided to invite the Publicity Girls to join.

As the club's coverage expanded, so did its membership and its legacy. Today's roster of past and present members includes playwriters, screen writers, producers, novelists, lecturers, editors, press agents, and personalities, in addition to the original magazine and newspaper writers. The roster includes such impressive names as columnists Louella O. Parsons and Rona Barrett; Isobell Sheldon, Madamoiselle; Morgan, Time/Life. Bette Davis, Cary Grant, Charlton Heston, and Bob Hope are just a few others, all of whom were accorded honorary membership.

For all its many contributions to Hollywood, not the least of which is an active scholarship fund, the HWPC is probably best known for its Golden Apple Awards luncheon. Beginning in 1940, and celebrating its 50th anniversary, this awards luncheon recognizes the best image of the entertainment industry to the world, the newsworthy male and female stars, most promising newcomers, and least newsworthy. With the presentation of these awards in 1990, the year of their 50th anniversary, the club's archives will become a special collection at the Margaret Herrick Library of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It is its preservation of Hollywood's lore which is the most important legacy of the Hollywood Women's Press Club. I am confident that this venerable organization will continue to flourish and serve our American community while keeping strong the legacy which it has built over the past 50 years.●

ONE BILLION DOLLAR 504 DEBENTURE SALE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today the Small Business Administration [SBA] 504 Program is celebrating the issuance of over $1 billion in guaranteed debentures.

The 504 Loan Program provides financial assistance through certified development companies [CDC] to support communities, both urban and rural, in stimulating the growth and expansion of small business. Financing for 10 or 20 years is provided to small businesses for the acquisition of land and buildings, construction, conversion, expansion, modernization, and the purchase of machinery and equipment.

Under the 504 Program, SBA sells—on behalf of a CDC—100 percent guaranteed debentures in the capital market. A debenture carries a maximum of $750,000 and may not exceed 40 percent of a total project. Debentures are pooled monthly and sold to the public through a certificate mechanism. Today the program will hold its 48th consecutive monthly debenture sale closing. This sale, a $38.8 million offering of 10- and 20-year debenture certificates, will push the 504 Program past the $1 billion mark.

In order to qualify for a 504 loan, a small business must have a net worth of less than $6 million and a net income of less than $2 million annually. The business must also create one job for every $35,000 borrowed. In the typical CDC loan, the small business borrower must supply a 10 percent downpayment, the bank contributes 50 percent and the CDC provides a guaranteed loan for the remaining 40 percent. The bank receives the first mortgage claim on the entire asset; SBA takes the second position.

My State of Minnesota currently has seven certified development companies providing funds to small businesses in Minnesota. Mr. President, I would like to share with you two examples in which one particular CDC—Coon Rapids Development Co.—provided assistance to businesses in Minnesota.

The Judd Supply Co. is a wholesaler of electrical parts components located in Coon Rapids. It has received three loans from the Coon Rapids Development Co. Judd went from 3 employees and no business in 1979 to 34 employees and $12 million in sales in 1989.

Furniture and Things, Inc., is a retail furniture store now having three locations—Anoka, Elk River, and Coon Rapids. It has received two SBA 504 expansion loans. The company went from 2 employees and $100,000 in sales in 1980 to 27 employees and $2 million in sales in 1989.

Mr. President, the 504 Loan Program has only been in existence since November 1986. It is remarkable how much financial assistance it has provided to small business in this short period of time. I commend those associated with this program and encourage its continued success.●

REPORT ACCOMPANYING S. 2724, THE ARTS, HUMANITIES, AND MUSEUM AMENDMENTS

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources recently filed its report on S. 2724, the Arts, Humanities and Museums Amendments of 1990. It has been brought to my attention that this Report 101-472 contains two errors which I believe are of significant importance.

The first error is of a typographical nature. On page 20, paragraph VIII, line 14, the figure $10,000 should read $100,000.

Secondly, the cost estimate supplied by the Congressional Budget Office contained an error in reference to the salary of the Director of the Institute of Museum Services. The bill proposes a salary increase for the Director rather than a salary reduction. The Congressional Budget Office has submitted a corrected cost estimate for S. 2721 and I ask that the text of this letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The letter follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1990.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has revised its previous cost estimate for S. 2724, a bill to extend and improve arts and humanities programs, museum services, and arts and artifacts indemnification, as ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on September 12, 1990. The original estimate incorrectly indicated that the salary for the Director of the Institute of Museum Services would be reduced. The bill actually authorizes an increase in salary associated with a promotion from Executive Level V to Executive Level IV.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE—OCTOBER 3, 1990

1. Bill number: S. 2724.

2. Bill title: Arts, Humanities, and Museums Amendments of 1990.

3. Bill status: As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on September 12, 1990.

4. Bill purpose: This bill extends and improves arts and humanities programs, museum services, and arts and artifacts indemnification, and for other purposes.

5. Estimated cost to the Federal Government:

[By fiscal years, in millions of dollars]

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
AUTHORIZATIONS
National Endowment of the Arts:
Authorization level	195.3	203.2	211.3	219.7	228.5
Estimated outlays	66.4	160.9	194.7	212.2	220.7
American Arts Celebration:
Authorization level	10.0	10.0	10.0	10.0	10.0
Estimated outlays	3.4	8.1	9.5	10.0	10.0
Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities:
Authorization level	.3	.3	.3	.3	.3
Estimated outlays	.1	.2	.3	.3	.3
National Endowment of the Humanities:
Authorization level	165.0	171.7	178.5	185.6	193.1
Estimated outlays	74.3	141.6	167.1	180.3	187.6
Institute of Museum Services:
Authorization level	24.0	25.0	26.0	27.0	28.1
Estimated outlays	6.2	24.3	25.2	26.2	27.3
Bill total:
Authorization level	394.6	410.1	426.0	442.6	460.0
Estimated outlays	150.4	335.0	396.7	429.1	445.8

The costs of this bill fall in Function 500.

Basis of estimate: S. 2724 extends and improves arts and humanities programs, museum services, and arts and artifacts indemnification. The authorizations for 1991 appropriation are specified in the bill. The estimate of amounts authorized for 1992-1995 are the 1991 levels increased for projected annual inflation, except for the American Arts Celebration authorization, which is specified for 1991-1995. Estimated outlays assume full appropriation of the amounts authorized and assume continuation of the current spending patterns. The bill proposes an increase in salary for the Director of the Institute of Museum Services, which would result in an estimated cost of $18,000 for 1991.

This bill also amends the Arts and Artifacts Indemnity Act. The maximum limits of coverage for agreements entered into by the Council are currently $1.2 billion in total and $125 million for a single exhibit. This amendment would raise the current limit for the aggregate maximum amount of coverage to $5 billion, increasing the potential liability to the government by $3.8 billion. It is not known if, or when, any of the additional $3.8 billion would need to be funded. Since enactment of the Arts and Artifacts Indemnity Act in 1975 only two claims have ever been filed. The most recent claim was made in 1989 and was for $4,700. While there could be increased costs to the federal government, CBO has no basis on which to make a precise estimate.

6. Estimated cost to State and local government: The federal share of grants and agreements entered into for the purpose of encouraging and developing arts education cannot exceed 50 percent of the cost of the activity for which the grant is made. State and local governments, or private entities would assume the remaining cost of the activity.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: CBO prepared a cost estimate for S. 2724 for the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources on September 13, 1990. This estimate incorrectly indicated that the salary for the Director of the Institute of Museum Services would be reduced by the bill.

9. Estimate prepared by: Diane Celuch.

10. Estimate approved by: C.G. Nuckols, for James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.●

TRANSFER BY LEASE TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BRAZIL

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 3215, introduced earlier today by Senators Nunn and Warner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3215) to authorize the transfer by lease of a specified naval landing ship dock to the Government of Brazil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3017

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator Helms, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] for Mr. HELMS, proposes an amendment numbered 3017.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 1(a) of the bill, strike out "The Secretary" and insert in lieu thereof "Subject to section 5, the Secretary".

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 5. CONDITION ON AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER

The Secretary may not exercise the authority granted under section 1(a) unless and until the Government of Brazil has provided written assurances to the Secretary of State that Brazil is in compliance with the United Nations sanctions against Iraq and has discontinued the export to Iraq of all military equipment, materials, and technologies, including the export of all nuclear, chemical, and biological warfare equipment, materials, and technologies and all missile equipment, material, and technologies. The Secretary of State shall transmit to Congress a copy of any such assurances received by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment (No. 3017) was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments? If there are no further amendments, the bill is considered read a third time and passed.

So the bill (S. 3215) as amended, was passed, as follows:

S. 3215

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AUTHORITY TO LEASE

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to section 5, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to lease the naval landing ship dock Alamo (LSD-33) to the Government of Brazil. A lease under this act may be renewed.

(b) APPLICABLE LAW.—Such leasing shall be in accordance with chapter 6 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2796 et seq.), except that section 62(a) of that Act (22 U.S.C. 2796a(a)) shall apply only to renewals of the lease.

SEC. 2. COSTS OF LEASING

Any expense of the United States in connection with the lease authorized by section 1 shall be charged to the Government of Brazil.

SEC. 3. CONSIDERATION FOR LEASE

Notwithstanding section 321 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (40 U.S.C. 303b), the lease of the ship described in section 1(a) may provide, as part or all of the consideration for the lease, for the maintenance, protection, repair, or restoration of the ship by the Government of Brazil.

SEC. 4. EXPIRATION OF AUTHORITY

The authority granted by section 1(a) shall expire at the end of the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act unless the lease authorized by that section is entered into during that period.

SEC. 5. CONDITION ON AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER

The Secretary may not exercise the authority granted under section 1(a) unless and until the Government of Brazil has provided written assurances to the Secretary of State that Brazil is in compliance with the United Nations sanctions against Iraq and has discontinued the export to Iraq of all military equipment, materials, and technologies, including the export of all nuclear, chemical, and biological warfare equipment, materials, and technologies and all missile equipment, materials, and technologies. The Secretary of State shall transmit to Congress a copy of any such assurances received by the Secretary.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration en bloc of the following joint resolutions just received from the House: House Joint Resolution 214, House Joint Resolution 518, House Joint Resolution 525, House Joint Resolution 566, and House Joint Resolution 669; that the resolutions be deemed read a third time and passed en bloc, that the preambles be agreed to, and that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL MILITARY FAMILIES RECOGNITION DAY

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 566) acknowledging the sacrifices that military families have made on behalf of the Nation and designating November 19, 1990, as "National Military Families Recognition Day" was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on Senate Joint Resolution 158.

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the resolution from the Senate (S.J.Res. 158) entitled "Joint resolution designating October 22 through 28, 1989, as 'World Population Awareness Week'," do pass with the following amendments:

Page 3, line 3, strike out "October 22 through 28, 1989,", and insert: "October 21 through October 27, 1990,".

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution designating October 21 through October 27, 1990, as 'World Population Awareness Week'.".

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SPARK M. MATSUNAGA DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator AKAKA I ask unanimous consent that the Veterans Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. 3032, a bill to name the proposed Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Hawaii for our late colleague, Senator Spark Matsunaga, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3032) to designate the planned Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Honolulu, Hawaii, as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I am pleased to rise in support of Senate passage of legislation I recently introduced to name the proposed VA medical center in Hawaii after our dear, departed friend and colleague, Senator Spark Masayuki Matsunaga. My bill, S. 3032, cosponsored by Senators INOUYE and GRAHAM, is strongly supported by the Hawaii congressional delegation, the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, and Hawaii veterans service organizations.

Mr. President, few in this Chamber may be aware that Hawaii is one of only two States without a VA medical center [VAMC], or that Hawaii ranks at or near the bottom of the scale in terms of Federal medical expenditures per veteran. This despite the fact Hawaii veterans number more than 100,000—fully a tenth of the State's population—and despite the fact that Hawaii has the highest ratio of service connected disabled veterans in the Nation.

Up until 2 years ago, the only VA facility in the entire State was a small outpatient clinic located in the bowels of the local Federal office building in Honolulu; there were then no VA facilities in the neighbor islands as there are today. While there was on-again, off-again talk about establishing a VA inpatient facility at Tripler Army Medical Center E-wing (interestingly, it was Senator Matsunaga himself who first proposed using E-wing as far back as 1975), continual delays by the military in turning over the wing to the VA rendered the project purely speculative.

Mr. President, if veterans required medical or psychiatric care, they were forced to negotiate a highly fragmented health delivery system involving the outpatient clinic, Tripler Army Medical Center, and private health care providers. As it does today, Tripler, the primary inpatient referral center for veterans, gave veterans lowest priority of care, after active duty military, their dependents, and retirees. Worse, Tripler personnel displayed little sensitivity to veterans, at times treating them like poor relations; horror stories abound about veterans who were victimized by inferior treatment accorded them by Army doctors and nurses.

Veterans in the neighbor islands had an even more difficult time accessing health care because of the absence of VA facilities in those areas. As a consequence, many veterans turned away from VA, preferring to suffer in silence or seek care in the private sector at their own oftentimes considerable expense.

It was this situation that impelled Senator Matsunaga, himself a wounded and decorated veteran of the famous 100th Infantry Battalion and 442d Regimental Combat Team, to hold a Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee oversight hearing on the status of Hawaii veterans health care. That hearing, which took place in April 1987, featured compelling testimony from veterans about the many shortcomings of VA's patchwork health care system in Hawaii, and led directly to the formation of a special VA task force to assess the short- and long-term needs of Hawaii veterans.

The task force report, issued 2 months later, confirmed the hearing's finding that Hawaii veterans had been seriously neglected, criticized the state of VA health care in Hawaii, and offered a number of far-reaching recommendations to enhance VA's presence in the 50th State, including proposals to expand the outpatient clinic, establish colocated primary care clinics and veterans readjustment counseling centers in the neighbor islands, and construct a full-fledged VA medical center on Oahu.

Today, as a result of pressure brought to bear on VA by Senator Matsunaga, many improvements suggested by the hearing and the task force have been carried out. For example, the outpatient clinic has tripled in size; primary care clinics and veterans readjustment counseling centers have been established on the Big Island, Maui, and Kauai; and, Tripler is now far more accommodating of veterans—the military hospital's new commanding general has taken radical steps to improve cooperation between VA and Tripler as well as to sensitize Tripler health care staff to veterans needs.

Most important, however, because of the late Hawaii lawmaker's untiring advocacy, the VA has at last agreed that there is ample justification to build a veterans medical center in Hawaii. Seizing on the task force recommendation that VA build a 165-bed free-standing hospital on Oahu, Sparky became the conscience of the Department, pressing VA officials to endorse the recommendation in countless letters, phone calls, and hearings. In late 1988, his efforts bore fruit when then-Chief Medical Director Dr. John Gronvall, gave his official sanction to the hospital recommendation.

But Senator Matsunaga's final victory came a few months later when, in early 1989, Secretary-designate Derwinski indicated at his confirmation hearing that he would strongly support the initiative. Knowing that the future Secretary of Veterans Affairs was a man of his word, Sparky believed at that moment that his dream would eventually come true. During the long illness that preceded his death last Easter, I am quite certain, Mr. President, that Spark took great comfort in knowing that the Hawaii veterans hospital would someday become a reality.

Mr. President, I think it is important to recount this tale of an individual legislator's tireless, singleminded effort to accomplish something of immense value to his electorate. No one represented his State's veterans more effectively, or with more sympathy and understanding, than Spark Matsunaga. This is why I hope that the Senate will join us in our effort to name the proposed Hawaii VA medical center after our late friend and colleague.

While to some this bill may seem redundant, given the fact that Secretary Derwinski has already indicated his support for naming the hospital after Senator Matsunaga, I believe that Congress, an institution he loved above all others and in which he took so much joy and pride in serving, should have the privilege and opportunity to express its will on this matter.

Mr. President, it is eminently fitting that Spark Matsunaga's name be forever associated with a veterans medical center. Aside from the fact that it was his advocacy that today makes the Hawaii veterans hospital a possibility, it is suitable that the war hero who preferred to be remembered as a peacemaker is recognized in this way. For the essential truth about Sparky was this: although he accepted that war was sometimes necessary, he never accepted the pain and tragedy it engendered.

For Spark was far more about healing than he was about fighting, as his long efforts to establish the U.S. Peace Institute amply demonstrates. Those who knew him personally, as I did, knew that his abhorrence of conflict extended to his personal dealings as well: he never raised his voice in anger, he never twisted arms, always preferring to use the art of gentle persuasion rather than the bludgeon of confrontation. It is therefore appropriate that a veterans medical center be named in his honor—a place where wounds and illnesses are mended, a place where those who have suffered the terrible experience of war can receive succor and comfort.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to thank the chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committe, Senator CRANSTON, and the ranking minority Member, Senator MURKOWSKI, for their assistance in getting this bill to the floor with dispatch. Without Chairman CRANSTON's support, in particular, it is doubtful that the Senate could have acted on my bill this year.

Thank you, Mr. President. I urge my colleagues to support the designation of the planned Hawaii veterans hospital as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center."

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no amendments, without objection, the bill is deemed read the third time and passed.

So the bill (S. 3032) was passed, as follows:

S. 3032

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. THE SPARK M. MATSUNAGA DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER.

The medical center planned to be constructed in Honolulu, Hawaii, by the Department of Veterans Affairs shall be known and designated as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center" in honor of the late United States Senator from the State of Hawaii, Spark M. Matsunaga.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

39-059 O-91-29 (Pt. 21)

RALPH H. JOHNSON DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3216) to designate the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Charleston, South Carolina, as the "Ralph H. Johnson Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today with great pride to introduce legislation to rename the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Charleston, SC, in honor of Pfc. Ralph H. Johnson. I am pleased that Senator HOLLINGS has joined as a cosponsor.

Pfc. Ralph H. Johnson, a native of Charleston, SC, served with distinction in the U.S. Marine Corps during the Vietnam war. While involved in combat operations, Private first class Johnson threw himself on a live enemy grenade in order to save the lives of his fellow marine squad members. For his selfless act of courage, Private first class Johnson was awarded posthumously the Congressional Medal of Honor.

The South Carolina delegation unanimously agrees that Private first class Johnson's supreme act of courage can best be remembered and honored by naming the Charleston Veterans Hospital after this great South Carolinian and American patriot. This legislation is also supported by Gov. Carroll Campbell, the General Assembly of South Carolina, the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

I hope that this legislation can be passed before Congress adjourns. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of support and letters be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Whereas, the late Ralph H. Johnson was Private First Class, United States Marine Corps, Company A, 1st Reconnaissance Battalion, 1st Marine Division (Rein), FMF; and

Whereas, he was born on January 11, 1949, at Charleston, South Carolina; and

Whereas, he entered the military service of his country at Oakland, California, and he died near the Quan Duc Valley, Republic of Vietnam, on March 5, 1968; and

Whereas, he was cited for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty while serving as a reconnaissance scout with Company A in action against the North Vietnamese Army and Viet Cong forces; and

Whereas, his bravery and gallantry saved another life at the cost of his own and inspired valor and selfless devotion to duty among others in keeping with the highest traditions of the Marine Corps and the United States Naval Service; and

Whereas, for his heroism he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor; and

Whereas, It would be a fitting memorial indeed to this great South Carolinian and American, and it would honor the heroism of thousands of young Americans who served the cause of freedom in Vietnam, to name the Veterans Administration Hospital in Charleston for the late Ralph H. Johnson. Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, by this resolution, memorializes Congress to take whatever action may be necessary to name the Veterans Administration Hospital in Charleston, South Carolina in honor of the late Ralph H. Johnson of Charleston County, a great South Carolinian and American and recipient of the Congressional Medal of Honor who gave his life in the cause of freedom while in the service of his country in Vietnam: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and all eight members of South Carolina's congressional delegation, all at Washington, DC.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Greenville, SC, July 24, 1990.

Senator STROM THURMOND,
209 Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: As the newly elected Department Commander from South Carolina it is my pleasure to report that the vote was unanimous in support of your recommendation for a name for the Veterans Hospital in Charleston.

This vote of support for Ralph Johnson was given at our recent state convention held in Charleston.

The best to you in your re-election campaign. If I can be of any help don't hesitate to call on me.

Very Truly Yours,
J. NORRIS KINION,
Commander,
Department of South Carolina.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS,
Columbia, SC, May 16, 1990.

Hon. J. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senator, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: The Department of South Carolina, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States endorses the resolution naming the Charleston Veterans Administration Medical Center after the late Ralph Johnson, a Medal of Honor recipient from Charleston County.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,
GEORGE M. PULLIES,
Commander,
Department of South Carolina,

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
West Columbia, SC, June 11, 1990.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: In regards to your recent correspondence concerning naming the Charleston VA Hospital for PFC Ralph Johnson, I am writing to let you know that this is something that the D.A.V., Department of South Carolina endorses and fully supports.

Sincerely,
W. LEVAKE CAUBLE,
Commander,
Department of South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise with great pride as a South Carolinian to cosponsor legislation to rename the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Charleston, SC, in honor of Pfc. Ralph H. Johnson.

Ralph H. Johnson was born on January 11, 1949, in Charleston, SC. He entered the U.S. Marine Corps in March 1967, and died near the Quan Duc Valley, Republic of Vietnam, on March 5, 1968. He died gallantly and with utmost selflessness by throwing himself on a live, enemy grenade, which landed in his three-man fox hole. He absorbed the blast of the grenade, saving the life of one of the other marines and preventing the enemy penetration of his sector. For this act of extraordinary valor, he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor posthumously on April 20, 1970.

It is fitting that a facility devoted to caring for veterans be named after a man who sacrificed himself out of heroic concern for his fellow man. It is also appropriate that at a site where the wounds of war are healed, we look back on the Vietnam war with a deep appreciation of the sacrifices which were made in valor for our country; such selfless, heroic actions help make sense of the horrors of war. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to join South Carolinians in preserving the memory of Ralph Johnson, and in renaming the Veterans Medical Center of Charleston, SC in his honor. This a fitting and long overdue honor for Private first class Johnson, a hero and an American patriot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 3216

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center located in Charleston, South Carolina, after the date of enactment of this Act shall be known and designated as the "Ralph H. Johnson Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center". Any reference to such medical center in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the Ralph H. Johnson Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL KEY CLUB WEEK

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 356, National Key Club Week, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 356) designating November 4 through 11, 1990, as "National Key Club Week."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S.J. RES. 356

Whereas Key Club International is the largest youth service organization in the world with a membership of over one hundred thirty-three thousand high school students in more than three thousand eight hundred schools across fourteen nations;

Whereas Key Club International emphasizes the human and spiritual rather than the material values of life;

Whereas Key Club International encourages the daily living of the "Golden Rule" in all human relationships;

Whereas Key Club International promotes the adoption and application of higher standards in scholarship, sportsmanship and social contacts, and seeks to develop a more aggressive and serviceable citizenship;

Whereas Key Club International provides a practical means for high school students to form enduring friendships, render unselfish service, and build better communities; and

Whereas Key Club International contributes to creating and maintaining the sound public opinion and high idealism which make possible the increase of righteousness, justice, partriotism, and good will: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 4 through 11, 1990, is designated as "National Key Club Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

USE OF NAMES OR INSIGNIA OF THE VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 950, S. 682, a bill to amend the United States Code to prohibit the unauthorized use of the names Visiting Nurses Association, Visiting Nurses Service, VNA, or VNS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 682) to amend chapter 33 of title 18, United States Code, to prohibit the unauthorized use of the names "Visiting Nurse Association," "Visiting Nurse Service," "VNA," "VNS," or "VNAA," or the unauthorized use of the name or insignia of the Visiting Nurse Association of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION OF UNAUTHORIZED USE OF NAME VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION OR VISITING NURSE SERVICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Whoever, not being a Visiting Nurse Association, Visiting Nurse Service, or Visiting Nurse Associations of America, as these terms are defined in this Act, knowingly uses the words "Visiting Nurse Association," "Visiting Nurse Service," "VNA," "VNS," or colorable imitation thereof, in commerce, on or in connection with any goods or services, in such a manner as to cause confusion, mistake, or deceptive, or to falsely suggest, that the goods or services are those of or endorsed by, or that the person or organization is associated in any way with, a Visiting Nurse Association, Visiting Nurse Service, or Visiting Nurse Association of America, as these terms are defined in this Act, shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $1,000 for each violation and shall be enjoined from further uses of these terms. The court shall levy the appropriate civil penalties, and may order reasonable attorney's fees, costs of the action, and such other and further relief as the court may deem proper, to the injured party.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) The terms "Visiting Nurse Association," "VNA," "Visiting Nurse Service," and "VNS" mean a community-based home health agency which is controlled by an independent, self-perpetuating, voluntary board of directors, is exempt from Federal taxation under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and is described in section 501(c)(3) of such Code.

(2) The term "Visiting Nurse Associations of America" means a non-profit corporation which is organized under the laws of the State of Delaware in 1983, and which is an umbrella organization of Visiting Nurse Associations and Visiting Nurse Services, as these terms are defined in this Act.

(c) The remedies provided under the Act are in addition to those provided by any other law.

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of this Act shall take effect six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) EXCEPTION.—The provisions of this Act shall not apply to any person or organization who has used the words described in Section 1(a), continuously for at least two years prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to amend chapter 33 of title 18, United States Code, to prohibit the unauthorized use of the names "Visiting Nurse Association," "Visiting Nurse Service," "VNA," or "VNS."

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WEIR FARM NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE ESTABLISHMENT ACT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2059.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 2059) entitled "An Act to establish the Weir Farm National Historic Site in the State of Connecticut," do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Weir Farm National Historic Site Establishment Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(2) The term "historic site" means the Weir Farm National Historic Site establsihed in section 4.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Weir Farm in Connecticut is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as a historic site associated with major American artists and several artistic developments:

(2) the Weir Farm, acquired in 1882 by J. Alden Weir, a founder and principal exponent of American Impressionism, has been continuously occupied by working artists and their families who have maintained its significance and integrity as a historic site; and

(3) the Weir Farm, including the house, barns, studios, pond, field, and woods thereon, and the approximately 113 acres of adjacent natural areas owned by the Nature Conservancy and the Town of Ridgefield, Connecticut, provide opportunities for illustrating and interpreting cultural themes of our Nation's heritage and provide opportunities for public use and enjoyment.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to preserve a significant site of the tradition of American Impressionism;

(2) to maintain the integrity of a setting that inspired artistic expression and encourages public enjoyment; and

(3) to offer opportunities for the inspirational benefit and education of the American people.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF WEIR FARM NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established, as a unit of the National Park System, the Weir Farm National Historic Site in the State of Connecticut.

(b) DESCRIPTION.—The historic site shall consist of—

(1) the approximately 2-acre core parcel containing the Weir House, studio, and barn; and

(2) the approximately 60 acres and improvements thereon owned by the State of Connecticut; both as generally depicted on a map entitled "Land Ownership Map, Weir Farm Historic Site", Figure 5, dated October 1989, as contained in the National Park Service Weir Farm Suitability/Feasibility Study, February, 1990. Such map shall be on file and available for public inspection in the appropriate offices of the National Park Service.

SEC. 5. ACQUISITION OF REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY AND SERVICES.

(a) REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.—The Secretary is authorized to acquire by donation, exchange, or purchase with donated or appropriated funds, the lands and improvements within the boundaries of the historic site, except that any such lands and improvements owned by the State of Connecticut may be acquired only by donation. The Secretary may also acquire by the same methods personal property associated with, and appropriate for, the interpretation of the historic site: Provided, That the Secretary may acquire works of art associated with the Weir family, J. Alden Weir, and other artists who lived at or visited the site only by donation or purchase with donated funds.

(b) OTHER PROPERTY, FUNDS, AND SERVICES.—The Secretary is authorized to accept and use donated funds, property, and services to carry out this Act.

SEC. 6. ADMINISTRATION OF HISTORIC SITE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall administer the historic site in accordance with this Act and the laws generally applicable to units of the National Park System, including the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1916 (16 U.S.C. 1 et seq.), and the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national historic significance, and for other purposes", approved August 21, 1935 (16 U.S.C. 461 et seq.), except that the Secretary shall take no action with respect to the 60 acres owned by the State of Connecticut within the boundaries of the historic site until such time as the State has transferred all right, title, and interests therein to the Secretary.

(b) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—(1) The Secretary may consult and enter into cooperative agreements with the Weir Farm Heritage Trust, the State of Connecticut, the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and other organizations and groups in the development, presentation and funding of art exhibits, resident artist programs, and other appropriate activities related to the preservation, development, and use of the historic site.

(2) The Secretary may consult and enter into cooperative agreements with the Nature Conservancy and the towns of Ridgefield and Wilton for the purpose of coordinating activities on the historic site with activities on the Nature Conservancy's Weir Preserve and lands adjoining the historic site owned by the towns.

(c) EXHIBITS.—The Secretary may display, and accept for the purpose of display, works of art associated with J. Alden Weir, the Weir Farm, and the American Impressionist movement, as may be necessary for the interpretation of the historic site.

(d) GENERAL MANAGEMENT PLAN.—Within 2 complete fiscal years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the Unites States House of Representatives and to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate a general management plan for the historic site. The plan shall be prepared in accordance with section 12(b) of the Act of August 18, 1970 (16 U.S.C. 1a-1 through 1a-7) and other applicable law.

SEC. 7 AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, except that not more than $1,500,000 may be appropriated for the acquisition of real and personal property.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. S. 903 and 904, en bloc; that committee amendments, where indicated, be agreed to; that the concurrent resolutions be agreed to, the amendment to the preamble, and the preambles to the concurrent resolutions be agreed to; and the motion to reconsider adoption of the concurrent resolutions en bloc be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENSE OF CONGRESS ON NUCLEAR SALES TO SOUTH ASIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 113) expressing the sense of the Congress on international nuclear sales to South Asia, which was considered, and agreed to.

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, and the preamble, as amended, as are follows:

S. CON. RES. 113

Whereas section 403 of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978 directs the President to take immediate and vigorous steps to seek agreement from all nations to ensure that IAEA safeguards will be applied to all peaceful nuclear activities in, under the jurisdiction of, or under the control of any non-nuclear-weapon state;

Whereas France, China, and Soviet Union have recently announced their intentions to sell nuclear reactors to Pakistan and India without any requirement for full-scope international safeguards;

Whereas both of these nations have fought three wars in forty three years and the situation in South Asia remains potentially volatile;

Whereas both nations are continuing research and development activities related to nuclear explosive devices and have in the past used peaceful nuclear technology for such purposes; and

Whereas full-scope international nuclear safeguards benefit the peace and security of all nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That (a) it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the sale or transfer by any nation of nuclear materials and equipment or sensitive nuclear technology to any non-nuclear-weapon state without the requirement of full-scope safeguards will undermine international efforts to halt the regional and global spread of nuclear weapons;

(2) the President should continue his efforts to encourage Pakistan, India, and other non-nuclear-weapon states that are not parties to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty to agree to full-scope safeguards;

(3) the President should urge all current adherents to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty to join the United States in seeking these objectives; and

(4) the President should continue and expand his efforts to encourage all nuclear supplier nations to require full-scope safeguards as a condition for future nuclear commerce and cooperation with all non-nuclear-weapon nations.

(b) For purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) the term "non-nuclear-weapon state" is used within the meaning of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, done at Washington, London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968; and

(2) the terms "nuclear materials and equipment" and "sensitive nuclear technology" have the same meanings as are given to such terms in paragraphs (4) and (6), respectively, of section 4(a) of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978.

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON THE DETERIORATING HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN KENYA

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 141) expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the deteriorating human rights situation in Kenya, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, and the preamble, are as follows:

S. CON. RES. 141

Whereas the United States and Kenya have enjoyed friendly relations based on their mutual respect of human rights and democratic freedoms;

Whereas Kenya has been an important and politically stable ally to the United States in Africa;

Whereas such aid has been offered to encouraged democratic freedoms, human rights, and political stability in Kenya;

Whereas Kenya is one of the largest recipients of United States aid in sub-Saharan Africa;

Whereas such aid has been offered to encourage democratic freedoms, human rights, and political stability in Kenya;

Whereas the Government of Kenya has been waging a campaign of repression designed to eliminate criticism and dissent;

Wheres the Government of Kenya has compromised the independence of the Kenyan judiciary and increasingly restricted freedom of the press;

Whereas government security forces have harassed and detained government critics, including former Cabinet Members and other advocating multi-party democracy, and assaulted their families and co-workers;

Whereas government security forces have targeted human rights attorneys by interfering with their work and arresting and detaining them;

Whereas the government crackdown compelled Gibson Kamau Kuria, one of the world's foremost human rights attorneys and the recipient of the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award in 1988, to seek refuge in the United States Embassy in Nairobi for five days, and forced his partner, human rights attorney Paul Muite, into hiding;

Whereas the Government of Kenya has resorted to the use of force against demonstrators calling for multi-party democracy and peaceful political change;

Whereas at least one thousand five hundred peaceful demonstrators have been arrested and detained by government security forces during the first two weeks of July;

Whereas the Government of Kenya's ongoing campaign against its citizens violates basic standards of international law with respect to human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

Wheres Kenya's political stability is threatened by the government's crackdown on individual rights and democratic freedoms and intolerance of political dissent: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(A) condemns the arrest and detention of Kenyan citizens for the peaceful expression of their political views and the recent violence against unarmed civilians by Kenyan securities forces;

(B) condemns the Government of Kenya's disregard of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(C) calls upon the Government of Kenya to end the intimidation and harassment of those who are critical of government policies, particularly individuals within the church, the press, and the legal and academic communities; and

(D) calls upon the Government of Kenya to implement effective safeguards to ensure undrestricted freedom of the press and the independence of the judiciary and to guarantee due process and other fundamental civil rights and human rights for individuals imprisoned or otherwise detained by the government; and

(2) It is the sense of the Congress that the President of the United States should suspend all military assistance and economic support fund assistance to the Government of Kenya, and review development assistance programs to ensure that they directly benefit the Kenyan population, until that Government—

(A) restores basic rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of free speech, free press, and free association;

(B) releases all detainees and persons arrested for the peaceful expression of their political views;

(C) ends the harassment and detention of its political opponents and human rights lawyers by security forces; and

(D) enables the Kenyan people to enjoy the benefits of a multi-party democratic system.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 714, S. 15, the Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Center Improvement Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 15) to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve emergency medical services and trauma care, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Federal Government and the governments of the States have established a history of cooperation in the development, implementation, and monitoring of integrated, comprehensive systems for the provision of emergency medical services throughout the United States;

(2) physical trauma causes 140,000 deaths each year, is the leading cause of death of Americans between the ages of 1 and 44, and is the fourth leading cause of death in the general population of the United States;

(3) a disproportionate amount of serious trauma occurs in rural settings, the rural area death rate for motor vehicle accidents is over twice the rate for large cities, and 38 percent of all machinery-related deaths occur on farms even though farm workers constitute only four percent of U.S. workers;

(4) physical trauma in the United States results in an aggregate annual cost of $135,000,000,000 in medical expenses, insurance, administrative costs, property damage, and indirect costs (including more than an annual $31,000,000,000 in lost wages of individuals who are in their most productive work years);

(5) barriers still exist in many parts of the country that prevent quick and efficient emergency medical services from being provided;

(6) few States and communities have developed and implemented regional trauma care systems;

(7) uncompensated care costs associated with trauma have forced many trauma centers to drop out of trauma systems; and

(8) the number of deaths and disabilities resulting from incidents of physical trauma can be substantially reduced by improving emergency medical services systems and, in particular, the trauma care components of such systems.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAMS WITH RESPECT TO TRAUMA CARE.

The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended by inserting after title XI the following new title:

"TITLE XII—TRAUMA CARE

"PART A—GENERAL AUTHORITY AND DUTIES OF SECRETARY

"SEC. 1201. CLEARINGHOUSE ON EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall by contract provide for the establishment and operation of a National Clearinghouse on Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care (hereinafter referred to in this title as the 'Clearinghouse').

"(b) DUTIES.—The Clearinghouse shall—

"(1) foster the development of appropriate, modern emergency medical services and trauma care (including the development of policies for the notification of family members of individuals involved in a medical emergency) through the sharing of information among agencies and individuals involved in planning, furnishing, and studying such services and care;

"(2) collect, compile, and disseminate information on the achievements of, and problems experienced by, State and local agencies and private entities in providing emergency medical services and trauma care and, in so doing, give special consideration of the unique needs of rural areas;

"(3) provide technical assistance relating to emergency medical services and trauma care to State and local agencies; and

"(4) sponsor workshops and conferences on emergency medical services and trauma care.

"(c) FEES AND ASSESSMENTS.—A contract entered into by the Secretary under this section may provide that the Clearinghouse shall charge fees or assessments in order to defray, and beginning with fiscal year 1991, to cover, the costs of operating the Clearinghouse.

"(d) AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS.—The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in Appropriation Acts.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $500,000 for the later of fiscal year 1991 or the first fiscal year thereafter for which funds are appropriated under this section, $300,000 for the later of fiscal year 1992 or the second fiscal year after fiscal year 1991 for which funds are so appropriated, and $100,000 for fiscal year 1993 or the third fiscal year after fiscal year 1991 for which funds are so appropriated.

"SEC. 1202. GENERAL DUTIES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

"(1) conduct and support research, training, evaluations, and demonstration projects with respect to emergency medical services and trauma care systems;

"(2) provide to State and local agencies technical assistance relating to emergency medical services and trauma care systems; and

"(3) establish guidelines for the development of uniform State data reporting systems as described in section 1214(b)(8).

"(b) GRANTS, COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS, AND CONTRACTS.—The Secretary may make grants, and enter into cooperative agreements and contracts, for the purpose of carrying out subsection (a).

"PART B—GRANTS WITH RESPECT TO MODIFICATIONS OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 1211. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.

"(a) REQUIREMENT OF ALLOTMENTS FOR STATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to section 1242(b), the Secretary shall for each fiscal year make an allotment for each State in an amount determined in accordance with section 1220.

"(2) APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall make payments each fiscal year to each State from the allotment for the State if the Secretary approves for the fiscal year involved an application submitted by the State pursuant to section 1219.

"(b) AVAILABILITY.—Any amount paid to a State for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available for the next fiscal year to such State for the purposes for which such amount was paid.

"SEC. 1212. USE OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) PLANNING, IMPLEMENTING, ETC.—Not less than 35 percent of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year shall be used by a State to pay the costs of planning, implementing, monitoring, and evaluating the operation of, county, regional, or State trauma care systems. Such funds shall be administered by the head of the State agency or office responsible for the planning and coordination of emergency medical services system in the State. Each trauma care system supported with amounts made available under this subsection shall—

"(1) meet the standards and requirements established under the State plan submitted under section 1214;

"(2) provide for prehospital triage by paramedics, emergency medical technicians, and other emergency care providers to assess the severity of injury incurred by trauma patients;

"(3) provide for appropriate transportation and transfer policies, including those referenced in section 1214(c), to ensure the delivery of patients to designated trauma centers, including facilities with specialized capabilities and expertise in the care of pediatric trauma patients, and other facilities within and outside of the jurisdiction of such system, including policies to ensure that only individuals appropriately identified as trauma patients are transferred to designated trauma centers;

"(4) improve or establish injury prevention programs and conduct public education activities concerning obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care; and

"(5) establish criteria and procedures, in accordance with the State plan required under section 1214, for the identification and designation of trauma centers to participate in the trauma care system.

"(b) TRAUMA CARE EXPENDITURES.—Not less than 35 percent of the amount available for a fiscal year to a State from the total amount paid to the State under section 1211 for such fiscal year shall be used by the State to reimburse designated trauma centers for such portions of the uncompensated trauma care expenditures of such centers (including uncompensated professional services) as the State considers appropriate. In order to receive reimbursement for uncompensated trauma-care expenditures under this subsection, a designated trauma center shall—

"(1) be a center that—

"(A) meets the standards and requirements established by the State in accordance with the State plan required under section 1214; and

"(B) meets the guidelines for level I or level II trauma centers or in the case of rural communities, a level III trauma center as specified by the State plan required under section 1214;

"(2) serve an area in which the procedures and policies described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) have been implemented; and

"(3) maintain its designation as a designated trauma center throughout the fiscal year for which reimbursement is provided under this subsection.

"(c) REMAINING AMOUNTS.—After the application of subsections (a) and (b) for a fiscal year, the amount remaining available for such fiscal year to a State from the total amount paid to the State under section 1211 for such fiscal year may be used for any purposes for which funds are required to be used under such subsections.

"(d) ADJUSTMENTS IN USE OF AMOUNTS AND ADMINISTRATION.—

"(1) ADJUSTMENTS.—The percentage of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year that is required by subsection (a) to be used for the uses specified in such subsection may be adjusted by the Secretary in order to—

"(A) permit the State to use for such uses such greater proportion of such amount as the Secretary determines, based upon a demonstration by the State of the extent to which the State is unable to use 35 percent of such amount for reimbursements under subsection (b), that the State is unable to use for such reimbursements; or

"(B) permit the State to use for such uses such lesser proportion of such amount as the Secretary determines, based on a demonstration by the State of the extent to which the State does not need to use 35 percent of such amount for such uses in order to carry out adequately during such fiscal year the activities described in subsection (a), that the State needs to use for such uses.

"(e) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Not more than 5 percent of the total amount paid to a State under section 1211 for a fiscal year may be used for administering the funds made available under section 1211. The State shall pay from non-Federal sources the remaining costs of administering such funds.

"SEC. 1213. REQUIREMENT OF MATCHING FUNDS FOR FISCAL YEARS SUBSEQUENT TO FISCAL YEAR 1991.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) PROHIBITION.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) unless the State involved agrees, with respect to the costs to be incurred by the State in carrying out the purposes described in section 1212, to make available non-Federal contributions (in cash or in kind under subsection (b)) toward such costs in an amount equal to not less than $1 for each $3 of Federal funds provided in payments from the allotment for such fiscal year.

"(2) LIMITATION ON CONDITIONS.—With respect to an allotment under section 1211(a) for a State for fiscal year 1991, the Secretary may not require the State to make non-Federal contributions as a condition of receiving payments from the allotment.

"(b) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION.—Non-Federal contributions required in subsection (a) may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services. Amounts provided by the Federal Government, or services assisted or subsidized to any significant extent by the Federal Government, may not be included in determining the amount of such non-Federal contributions.

"SEC. 1214. REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO CARRYING OUT PURPOSE OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) STATE PLAN.—

"(1) TRAUMA CARE COMPONENT.—For each fiscal year, beginning with fiscal year 1991, each State shall submit the trauma care component of the State emergency medical services plan (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'State plan') to the Secretary.

"(2) INTERIM PLAN.—For fiscal year 1991, if a State has not completed the State plan, such State may provide, in lieu of a completed plan, an interim plan or description of efforts made toward the completion of the plan.

"(b) REQUIREMENTS OF PLAN.—Each State plan shall—

"(1) specify that the modifications required pursuant to paragraphs (2) through (10) will be implemented by the principal State agency with respect to emergency medical services or by the designee of such agency;

"(2) specify the State or local public agency or private entity that will designate trauma care regions and trauma centers in the State;

"(3) contain minimum standards and requirements for the designation of different categories of trauma centers (including facilities with specified capabilities and expertise in the care of the pediatric trauma patient) by such agency or entity, including standards and requirements for—

"(A) ensuring that such centers will have sufficient experience and expertise to be able to provide quality care for victims of injury which, in the case of level I or level II trauma centers, include the number and types of trauma patients for whom such centers must provide care in order to;

"(B) the resources and equipment needed by such centers;

"(C) the availability of rehabilitation services for trauma patients; and

"(D) the provision of assurances that such centers may not refuse the transfer of a trauma patient because the patient is unable to pay for the care that the patient requires;

"(4) contain standards and requirements for the implementation of regional trauma care systems, including standards and guidelines (consistent with the provisions of section 1867 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1935d(d) and subsection (c) of this section) for medically directed triage and transportation of trauma patients;

"(5) contain standards and requirements for medically directed triage and transport of severely injured children to facilities with specified capabilities and expertise in the care of the pediatric trauma patient;

"(6) specify procedures for the evaluation of designated trauma centers (including facilities described in paragraph (5)) and trauma care systems;

"(7) provide that the standards and requirements described in paragraphs (3) and (4) address the special needs and problems of rural communities;

"(8) provide for the establishment in the State of a central data reporting and analysis system for—

"(A) identifying severely injured trauma patients within regional trauma care systems in the State;

"(B) identifying the nature and cause of severe injuries, and if known, factors contributing to the injury;

"(C) identifying patient outcomes;

"(D) monitoring trauma care resources (including prehospital care) within a regional trauma care system (including relevant rehabilitation information);

"(E) identifying the total amount of uncompensated trauma care expenditures made for each fiscal year by each trauma center in the State; and

"(F) identifying patients transferred within a regional trauma system, including reasons for such transfer;

"(9) provide periodic reviews of the transfers and the auditing of such transfers determined to be inappropriate;

"(10) improve or establish injury prevention programs and conduct public education activities concerning obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care; and

"(11) with respect to the requirements established in paragraphs (2) through (10), provide for the coordination and cooperation between the State and any other State with which the State shares any standard metropolitan statistical area.

"(c) EXAMINATION AND TREATMENT FOR EMERGENCY MEDICAL CONDITIONS.—Appropriate transfer policies referred to in subsection (b)(4) and section 1212(a)(3) shall include the following requirements:

"(1) MEDICAL SCREENING REQUIREMENTS.—In the case of a hospital that has a hospital emergency department, if any individual comes to the emergency department and a request is made on the individual's behalf for examination or treatment for a medical condition, the hospital shall provide for an appropriate medical screening examination within the capability of the hospital's emergency department to determine whether or not an emergency medical condition (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(1))) exists or to determine if the individual is in active labor (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(2))).

"(2) NECESSARY STABILIZING TREATMENT FOR EMERGENCY MEDICAL CONDITIONS AND ACTIVE LABOR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any individual comes to a hospital and the hospital determines that the individual has an emergency medical condition or is in active labor (as so defined), the hospital must provide either—

"(i) within the staff and facilities available at the hospital, for such further medical examination and such treatment as may be required to stabilize the medical condition or to provide for treatment of the labor; or

"(ii) for transfer of the individual to another medical facility in accordance with paragraph (3).

"(B) REFUSAL TO CONSENT TO TREATMENT.—A hospital shall be considered to meet the requirement of subparagraph (A) with respect to an individual if the hospital offers the individual the further medical examination and treatment described in such clause but the individual (or a legally responsible person acting on the individual's behalf) refuses to consent to the examination or treatment.

"(C) REFUSAL TO CONSENT TO TRANSFER.—A hospital shall be considered to meet the requirements of subparagraph (A) with respect to an individual if the hospital offers to transfer the individual to another medical facility in accordance with paragraph (3) but the individual (or a legally responsible person acting on the individual's behalf) refuses to consent to the transfer.

"(3) RESTRICTING TRANSFERS UNTIL PATIENT STABILIZES.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—If a patient at a hospital has an emergency medical condition which has not been stabilized (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(4)(B))) or is in active labor, the hospital may not transfer the patient.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—A patient that has not been stabilized (as such term is defined in section 1867(e)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395dd(e)(4)(B))) or is in active labor may be transferred if—

"(i)(I) the patient (or a legally responsible person acting on the patient's behalf) requests that the transfer be effected, or

"(II) a physician, or other qualified medical personnel when a physician is not readily available in the emergency department, has signed a certification that, based on the reasonable risks and benefits to the patient, and based on the information available at the time, the medical benefits reasonably expected from the provision of appropriate medical treatment at another medical facility outweigh the increased risks to the individual's medical condition from effecting the transfer; and

"(ii) the transfer is an appropriate transfer (within the meaning of subparagraph (D)) to that facility.

"(C) REQUIREMENT.—If a patient at a hospital has an emergency medical condition that has been stabilized, the hospital may transfer the patient but only by means of an appropriate transfer.

"(D) APPROPRIATE TRANSFER.—A transfer to a medical facility is an appropriate transfer if—

"(i) the receiving facility—

"(I) has available space and qualified personnel for the treatment of the patient, and

"(II) has agreed to accept transfer of the patient and to provide appropriate medical treatment, except that a hospital may not refuse to accept a transferred patient unless such hospital does not have the facilities or personnel available to provide proper care for such transferred patient, or the hospital has a full census at that time;

"(ii) the transferring hospital provides the receiving facility with appropriate medical records (or copies thereof) of the examination and treatment affected at the transferring hospital;

"(iii) the transfer is effected through qualified personnel and transportation equipment, as required including the use of necessary and medically appropriate life support measures during the transfer; and

"(iv) the transfer meets such other requirements as the Secretary may find necessary in the interest of the health and safety of the patient transferred.

"(4) CALL SCHEDULES.—In the case of a hospital that has a hospital emergency department, such hospital shall provide a call schedule that lists the appropriate medical specialists that will be immediately available for duty to provide ongoing, definitive treatment to a patient after the initial examination by the emergency physicians.

"(d) CERTAIN STANDARDS WITH RESPECT TO TRAUMA CARE CENTERS AND SYSTEMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (b), the State shall adopt standards for the designation of trauma centers, and for triage, transfer, and transportation policies. In adopting such standards the State shall—

"(A) take into account existing national standards concerning such;

"(B) consult with medical and nursing speciality groups, hospital associations, emergency medical services State and local directors, concerned advocates and other interested parties;

"(C) conduct hearings on the proposed standards after providing adequate notice to the public concerning such hearing; and

"(D) beginning in fiscal year 1992, take into account the model plan described in subsection (e).

"(2) QUALITY OF TRAUMA CARE.—The highest quality of trauma care shall be the primary goal of State standards adopted under this subsection.

"(3) STATES WITH EXISTING STANDARDS.—In the case of a State that has adopted standards with respect to trauma care centers and systems prior to the date of enactment of this title, such State shall demonstrate in the State plan that the State standards provide for the highest possible quality of trauma care and that the State—

"(A) took into account existing national standards in adopting such standards; and

"(B) consulted with medical and nursing speciality groups, hospital associations, emergency medical services State and local directors, concerned advocates and other interested parties.

"(4) APPROVAL BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year if the Secretary determines that—

"(A) the State has not taken into account existing national standards in adopting standards under this subsection;

"(B) beginning in fiscal year 1992, the State has not taken into account the model plan as described in subsection (e) in adopting such standards; and

"(C) the State has not developed such standards in an open process or has not provided all interested parties an opportunity to participate.

"(e) MODEL TRAUMA CARE PLAN.—Not later than 1 year after that date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall develop a model plan for the designation of trauma centers and for triage, transfer and transportation policies that may be adopted for guidance by the State. Such plan shall—

"(1) take into account existing national standards;

"(2) take into account existing State plans;

"(3) be developed in consultation with medical and nursing speciality groups, hospital associations, emergency medical services State directors and associations, concerned advocated and other interested parties; and

"(4) include standards for the designation of rural health facilities and hospitals best able to receive, stabilize, and transfer trauma patients to the nearest appropriate designated trauma center, and for triage, transfer, and transportation policies as they relate to rural areas.

Standards described in paragraph (4) shall be applicable to all rural areas in the State, including both non-metropolitan areas and frontier areas that have populations of less than 6,000 per square mile.

"SEC. 1215. REQUIREMENT OF ANNUAL REPORT BY DESIGNATED TRAUMA CENTERS.

"The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees to require each designated trauma center in the State to provide to the central data reporting system of the State pursuant to section 1214(b)(8) each fiscal year a report that—

"(1) specifies the number of severely-injured trauma patients cared for by such facility by injury severity grouping and nature of the injury during the fiscal year;

"(2) specifies the average length of hospital stay by such patients according to injury severity groupings during the fiscal year;

"(3) specifies the outcomes, including the disability outcome, of severly-injured trauma patients and their discharge disposition;

"(4) specifies the total amount of uncompensated trauma care expenditures incurred by such facility for such patients for such fiscal year; and

"(5) specifies the number of patients transferred in a manner not in accordance with the provisions of section 1214(c)(3)(D).

"SEC. 1216. REQUIREMENT OF PROVISION OF CERTAIN INFORMATION TO SECRETARY.

"(a) INFORMATION RECEIVED BY STATE REPORTING AND ANALYSIS SYSTEM.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees that the State will, not less than once each year, provide to the Secretary the information received by the State pursuant to section 1214(b)(8).

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES IN RURAL AREAS.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless—

"(1) the State involved identifies any rural area in the State for which—

"(A) there is no system of access to emergency medical services through the telephone number 911;

"(B) there is no basic life-support system; or

"(C) there is no advanced life-support system; and

"(2) the State submits to the Secretary a list of rural areas identified pursuant to paragraph (1) or, if there are no such areas, a statement that there are no such areas.

"SEC. 1217. RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF PAYMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not, except as provided in subsection (b), make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees that the payments will not be expended—

"(1) to make cash payments to intended recipients of services provided pursuant to such section;

"(2) to purchase or improve real property (other than minor remodeling of existing improvements to real property) or to purchase major medical or communication equipment, ambulances, or aircraft; or

"(3) to satisfy any requirement for the expenditure of non-Federal funds as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds.

"(b) EXCEPTION.—If the Secretary finds that the purpose described in section 1212 cannot otherwise be carried out, the Secretary may, with respect to an otherwise qualified State, waive the restriction established in subsection (a)(3).

"SEC. 1218. REQUIREMENT OF REPORTS BY STATES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) for a fiscal year unless the State involved agrees to prepare and submit to the Secretary an annual report in such form and containing such information as the Secretary determines (after consultation with the States and the Comptroller General of the United States) to be necessary for—

"(1) securing a record and a description of the purposes for which payments received by the State pursuant to such section were expended and of the recipients of such payments; and

"(2) determining whether the payments were expended in accordance with the purpose of the program involved.

"(b) AVAILABILITY TO PUBLIC OF REPORTS.—The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) unless the State involved agrees that the State will make copies of the report described in subsection (a) available for public inspection.

"(c) EVALUATIONS BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall, from time to time, evaluate the expenditures by States of payments under section 1211(a) in order to assure that expenditures are consistent with the provisions of the program involved.

"SEC. 1219. REQUIREMENT OF SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION CONTAINING CERTAIN AGREEMENTS AND ASSURANCES.

"The Secretary may not make payments under section 1211(a) to a State for a fiscal year unless—

"(1) the State submits to the Secretary an application for the payments containing agreements in accordance with section 1212 through section 1218;

"(2) the agreements are made through certification from the chief executive officer of the State;

"(3) with respect to such agreements, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(4) the application contains the information required to be submitted to the Secretary pursuant to sections 1214(a) and 1216(b)(2); and

"(5) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this part.

"SEC. 1220. AMOUNTS OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) FORMULA.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary shall allot to each State under section 1211(a) an amount that shall be the sum of the amounts allotted to the State under paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) POPULATION.—Eighty percent of the total amount made available under section 1242(b)(2) for a fiscal year shall be allotted to States under this paragraph. The allotment of a State under this paragraph shall be the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment under this paragraph as the population of the State bears to the population of all States.

"(3) SQUARE MILEAGE.—Twenty percent of the total amount made available under section 1242(b)(2) for a fiscal year shall be allotted to States under this paragraph. The allotment of a State under this paragraph shall be the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment under this paragraph as the square mileage of the State bears to the square mileage of all States.

"(4) MAXIMUM ALLOTMENT.—The total amount allotted to a State under this subsection shall not be greater than three times the greater of—

"(A) the amount the State would otherwise receive if a State's allotment were determined by the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount available for allotment as the population of the State bears to the population of all States; or

"(B) the minimum allotment as determined under subsection (b).

"(b) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—Notwithstanding subsection (a)—

"(1) if the total amount appropriated under section 1242 for any fiscal year equals or exceeds $25,000,000, the allotment of a State under this section for such fiscal year shall not be less than the greater of—

"(A) $250,000, or

"(B) an amount equal to one-half of one percent of the total amount appropriated to carry out this part for such fiscal year; or

"(2) if the total amount appropriated under section 1242 for any fiscal year is less than $25,000,000—

"(A) the Secretary shall allot 25 percent of such amount equally among the States; and

"(B) the Secretary shall allot 75 percent of such amount according to a formula developed by the Secretary designed to target funds to States that demonstrate in their applications the greatest commitment to establishing and maintaining trauma systems and that have the greatest need to develop, implement, and maintain such systems.

"(c) DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN FUNDS APPROPRIATED FOR ALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts described in paragraph (2) shall, in accordance with paragraph (3), be allotted by the Secretary to States receiving payments under section 1211(a) for the fiscal year (other than any State referred to in paragraph (2)(C)).

"(2) TYPE OF AMOUNTS.—The amounts referred to in paragraph (1) are any amounts made available pursuant to 1242(b)(2) that are not paid under section 1211(a) to a State as a result of—

"(A) the failure of the State to submit an application under section 1219;

"(B) the failure, in the determination of the Secretary, of the State to prepare within a reasonable period of time such application in compliance with such section; or

"(C) the State informing the Secretary that the State does not intend to expend the full amount of the allotment made for the State.

"(3) AMOUNT.—The amount of an allotment under paragraph (1) for a State for a fiscal year shall be in proportion to the amount otherwise allotted to such State for the fiscal year without regard to this subsection.

"SEC. 1221. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH AGREEMENTS.

"(a) REPAYMENT OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may, in accordance with subsection (b), require a State to repay any payments received by the State pursuant to section 1211(a) that the Secretary determines were not expended by the State in accordance with the agreements required to be made by the State as a condition of the receipt of payments under such section.

"(2) FAILURE TO REPAY.—If a State fails to make a repayment required in paragraph (1), the Secretary may offset the amount of the repayment against any amount due to be paid to the State under section 1211(a).

"(b) OPPORTUNITY FOR A HEARING.—Before requiring repayment of payments under subsection (a)(1), the Secretary shall provide to the State an opportunity for a hearing.

"SEC. 1222. PROHIBITION AGAINST CERTAIN FALSE STATEMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) MATERIAL FACT.—A person may not knowingly make or cause to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in connection with the furnishing of items or services for which payments may be made by a State from amounts paid to the State under section 1211(a).

"(2) INTENT TO DEFRAUD.—A person with knowledge of the occurrence of any event affecting the right of the person to receive any payments from amounts paid to the State under section 1211(a) may not conceal or fail to disclose any such event with the intent of fraudulently securing such amount.

"(b) CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF PROHIBITION.—Any person who violates a prohibition established in subsection (a) may for each violation be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 1223. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND PROVISION BY SECRETARY OF SUPPLIES AND SERVICES IN LIEU OF GRANT FUNDS.

"(a) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary shall, without charge to a State receiving payments under section 1211(a), provide to the State (or to any public or nonprofit private entity designated by the State) technical assistance with respect to the planning, development, and operation of any program or service carried out pursuant to section 1212. The Secretary may provide such technical assistance directly, through contract, or through grants.

"(b) SUPPLIES AND SERVICES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—On the request of a State receiving an allotment under section 1211(a), the Secretary may, subject to paragraph (2), provide supplies, equipment, and services for the purpose of aiding the State in carrying out section 1211(b) and, for such purpose, may detail to the grantee any officer or employee of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"(2) REDUCTION IN AMOUNTS.—With respect to a request described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall reduce the amount of payments to the State under section 1211(a) by an amount equal to the fair market value of any supplies, equipment, or services provided by the Secretary and shall, for the payment of expenses incurred in complying with such request, expend the amounts withheld.

"SEC. 1224. REPORT BY SECRETARY.

"Not later than February 1, 1993, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a report on the activities of the States carried out pursuant to section 1211. Such report may include any recommendations of the Secretary for appropriate administrative and legislative initiatives and shall include—

"(1) an evaluation of the trauma system plans and standards of the State and their respective data as required by section 1216(a);

"(2) recommendations regarding the plans and standards that result in the most favorable patent outcomes; and

"(3) recommendations regarding and, if appropriate, modifications of the model State plan as required by section 1214(e).

"PART C—RURAL EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE

"SEC. 1231. IMPROVING RURAL EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE.

"(a) GRANT PROGRAM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants, on a competitive basis, to States to carry out activities to improve rural emergency medical services.

"(2) APPLICATION.—A State wishing to receive a grant under this section shall prepare and submit an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information, including the proposed activities and projects to be assisted with such grants, to the Secretary.

"(3) REDISTRIBUTION.—Grants made to States under this section shall be redistributed to the individuals, organizations, or governmental entities on whose behalf the State submitted an application under this section.

"(b) PRIORITY.—In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to—

"(1) projects aimed at filling gaps in basic and advanced life support emergency medical services in rural communities;

"(2) projects that are necessary in order for the State to carry out the activities described under section 1212; and

"(3) States and communities that serve large numbers of individuals that reside in rural communities;

"(c) ACTIVITIES AND PROJECTS.—Financial assistance may be provided with a grant received under subsection (a) by a State for—

"(1) the support of rural emergency medical services systems;

"(2) the recruitment, training, and retention of personnel to provide emergency medical services and system support, including first responders, emergency medical technicians, paramedics, and emergency medical services systems managers;

"(3) the purchase, upgrading, and maintenance of medical and communications equipment relating to emergency medical services, including equipment for the implementation 911 telephone systems;

"(4) the improvement and maintenance of transportation services for medical emergencies; and

"(5) the conduct of public education activities concerning preventing injuries of special concern to rural communities, including injuries to children resulting from farm equipment, and obtaining access to emergency medical services and trauma care.

"PART D—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1241. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this title—

"(1) DESIGNATED TRAUMA CENTER.—The term 'designated trauma center' means a trauma center designated in accordance with the modifications to the State plan described in section 1214.

"(2) PLAN FOR THE PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES.—The term 'plan for the provision of emergency medical services' means a plan for a comprehensive, organized system to provide for the access, response, triage, field stabilization, transport, hospital stabilization, definitive care, and rehabilitation of patients of all ages with respect to emergency medical services.

"(3) STATE.—The term 'State' means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(4) TRAUMA CARE COMPONENT OF THE PLAN FOR THE PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES.—The term 'trauma care component of the plan for the provision of emergency medical services' means a plan for a comprehensive health care system, within rural and urban areas of the State, for the prompt recognition, prehospital care, emergency medical care, acute surgical and medical care, rehabilitation, and outcome evaluation of seriously injured patients.

"(5) UNCOMPENSATED TRAUMA CARE EXPENDITURES.—The term 'uncompensated trauma care expenditures' means any amount that is expended by a health care facility to provide health care services to a trauma patient and for which such facility does not receive payment or reimbursement.

"SEC. 1242. FUNDING.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this title, there is authorized to be appropriated $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1993.

"(b) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS BY SECRETARY.—

"(1) PART A.—For the purpose of carrying out part A, the Secretary shall make available 5 percent of the amounts appropriated for a fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a).

"(2) PART B.—For the purpose of making allotments under section 1211(a), the Secretary shall make available 80 percent of the amounts appropriated for a fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a).

"(3) PART C.—For the purpose of making grants under section 1231(a), the Secretary shall make available 15 percent of the amounts appropriated for a fiscal year pursuant to subsection (a).".

SEC. 4. REQUIREMENT OF CERTAIN STUDIES RELATING TO TRAUMA CARE.

(a) MEDICAID POLICIES OF STATES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study for the purpose of determining the policies adopted by States in reimbursing trauma centers pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.). The study shall assess the adequacy and appropriateness of the reimbursements provided pursuant to such title by States to such centers and shall include recommendations with respect to whether the requirements imposed under such title should be modified in order to ensure that such centers are appropriately reimbursed.

(b) LONG-TERM ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF TRAUMA.—The Secretary shall conduct a comprehensive multidisciplinary study of the long-term economic effects of incidences of trauma in the United States. In conducting the study, the Secretary shall utilize the services of individuals with expertise in appropriate fields (including epidemiology, statistics, behavioral sciences, and health economics) in order to identify and evaluate as many factors as possible that influence the impact and long-term outcome of a trauma incident.

(c) TIME FOR COMPLETION.—The Secretary shall, not later than 1 year and 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, complete the studies required in subsections (a) and (b), respectively, and submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a report describing the findings made as a result of the studies.

SEC. 5. COOPERATION BETWEEN STATE AGENCIES.

(a) CERTIFICATIONS REQUIRED IN APPLICATIONS FOR PHHS BLOCK GRANT.—Section 1905(c) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300w-4(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) agrees to provide the officer of the State government responsible for the administration of the State highway safety program with an opportunity to—

"(A) participate in the development of any plan by the State relating to emergency medical services, as such plan relates to highway safety, including the State plan required by section 1910B; and

"(B) review and comment on any proposal by any State agency to use any Federal grant or Federal payment received by the State for the provision of emergency medical services as such proposal relates to highway safety.".

(b) HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAM.—Paragraph (1) of section 402(b) of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of each subparagraph and inserting in lieu thereof a comma;

(2) by adding "or" at the end of subparagraph (F); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) provide procedures that ensure that State officials who are responsible for the administration, planning, and coordination of emergency medical services within the State have the opportunity to—

"(i) participate in the development of the State highway safety program as such program relates to emergency medical services;

"(ii) provide advice on the development and implementation of those provisions of the State highway safety program related to emergency medical services; and

"(iii) review, and comment on, any proposals to use funds provided to the State under this section for emergency medical services.".

SEC. 6. IMPROVING COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS.

(a) WATER AND WASTE FACILITY LOANS AND GRANTS.—The first sentence of section 306(a)(1) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1926(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "emergency telephone service, communications equipment for emergency medical services," after "recreational developments,".

(b) FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Federal Communications Commission shall—

(1) complete a study of the availability of radio frequency channels for emergency medical services communications (including in such study, to the maximum feasible extent, an analysis of communications between public and private ambulances and public and private hospitals);

(2) establish a plan to ensure that the needs of emergency medical services communications (including effective prehospital communications) shall be adequately provided for in the allocation of frequencies for public safety; and

(3) prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report that contains the results of such study and plan relating to emergency medical services communications; and

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1990, or on the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am delighted to bring S. 15, the proposed Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act to the full Senate for its consideration. This legislation is greatly needed to assist communities to develop and preserve trauma care systems.

I introduced S. 15 on the first day of the 101st Congress. I was joined by my good friends, the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee [Mr. KENNEDY] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. Today, S. 15 is cosponsored by 35 Senators from both sides of the aisle.

The bill is supported by a broad coalition of individuals and organizations who believe that improving trauma care throughout the United States is an important health priority.

THE COSTS OF INJURY

In 1985, the prestigious National Academy of Sciences issued a report, "Injury in America," which assessed the magnitude and characteristics of injury in the United States, efforts to prevent and treat injury, and Federal support for injury research. It was conducted as a followup to a landmark study conducted 20 years earlier by the National Research Council, entitled "Accidental Death and Disability: The Neglected Disease of Modern Society." The National Academy of Sciences concluded that, tragically, insufficient progress had been made in injury control since the first study was reported.

Each year, approximately 145,000 Americans die from injuries and 2.3 million Americans suffer injuries serious enough to warrant hospitalization. Injury is the fourth leading cause of death among all Americans and the major killer of children and young adults. More Americans between the ages of 5 and 34 die from injuries than from all diseases combined.

Injury is also a leading cause of short- and long-term disability. More than 80,000 persons become permanently disabled from brain or spinal cord injuries each year. Over 4 million years of future worklife are lost to injury annually—nearly double that lost to heart disease or cancer.

Injury represents one of our most expensive health problems. According to a 1989 report to Congress, entitled "Cost of Injury in the United States," injury "imposed a $158 billion burden on the U.S. economy" in 1985. The total economic cost is estimated to have risen to $180 billion in 1988; 75 percent of the cost was incurred in the first year of injury with the remaining 25 percent incurred in later years.

The report further concluded that, of the total lifetime costs, direct costs for medical care and rehabilitation account for $45 billion or 29 percent; morbidity costs—the value of goods and services not produced because of injury-related illness and disability—account for $64.9 billion or 41 percent; and mortality costs—the value of lifetime earnings lost from individuals who die prematurely from injury—account for $47.9 billion or 30 percent.

The Federal Government's share of the cost of injuries is enormous. Of all direct care costs, the Federal Government pays $8.9 billion or 21 percent. The Federal Government also pays $13 billion in disability and death benefits under Social Security Disability Insurance, Supplemental Security Income, the Department of Veterans Affairs, and workers' compensation.

Much of the death disability resulting from injury—particularly severe injury—can be prevented or ameliorated by quick-response teams providing prehospital care and through the accessibility and availability of sophisticated emergency hospital care when needed. In Washington, DC, trauma deaths declined 50 percent over a 5-year period after implementation of a trauma system, and fell 55 percent in San Diego. Experts estimate that as many as 25,000 trauma deaths per year in the United States could be prevented with appropriate medical treatment. At least two studies show that with prompt, expert trauma care over 80 percent of the most seriously injured patients return to full-time productivity 4 years following the injury, with most regaining full activity within 1 year.

Well-coordinated EMS and trauma care systems help ensure that injury and trauma victims—as well as others, such as heart attack victims, in need of emergency care—receive that kind of swift and effective medical attention. Regional trauma systems are also cost effective by providing for appropriate distribution and utilization of expensive health-care technology and resources.

TRAUMA CENTERS THREATENED WITH CLOSURE

Over the last 3 years, many urban trauma care systems have come under siege and are now threatened by total collapse. An estimated 20 designated trauma centers in different parts of the country have withdrawn from regional trauma systems because of financial losses. Although trauma patients number only 600,000, a high proportion of them are uninsured and the cost of trauma care is two to four times higher than the average cost of care. Inadequate funding of trauma centers resulted in seven level II centers dropping out of the Dade County, FL, trauma system, leaving James Jackson Memorial Hospital as the county's only remaining trauma center. The Los Angeles trauma system is on the verge of collapse after 11 of the city's 23 trauma centers dropped out because of high uncompensated costs associated with providing trauma care—between $500,000 and $2 million annually per trauma center. Huntington Memorial Hospital in Pasadena lost $3.7 million last year and is the most recent trauma center to withdraw. San Diego's trauma system reported a loss of $6.8 million for 1988 for its six designated trauma centers.

In Chicago, 4 out of 10 trauma centers have dropped out of the system. Houston's Hermann Hospital—one of only two level I trauma centers in that city—decided to withdraw from the city's trauma system late last year after losing more than $7 million. The MedSTAR Trauma Center at the Washington Hospital Center in Washington, DC, is threatening to close after sustaining losses of $8.9 million in 1989 associated with providing care to trauma and burn victims.

A recent study on trauma care reimbursement found that trauma care represents an estimated $1.69 billion or 24 percent of the total uncompensated acute care, which costs $6.96 billion.

The issue of uncompensated trauma care must be addressed comprehensively and on a systemwide basis. At the same time, however, stop-gap measures are needed to preserve existing trauma systems and prevent more trauma centers from closing their doors.

Mr. President, the cover story for the May 28, 1990, Time magazine was entitled, "Emergency! Overwhelmed and Understaffed, Medicine's Front Lines are Collapsing Across America." It chronicled the dire straits of trauma centers and emergency departments throughout the country. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. CRANSTON. Although S. 15 is a modest bill, it is an important first step toward addressing the problems outlined in the Time article.

AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, I would like to address briefly six amendments that have been worked out on both sides. The first, offered by Senator COCHRAN would change the method for allocating funding under section 1231 of the Public Health Service Act as added by the bill, the set-aside for rural EMS projects. The amendment would require that funding be distributed on a formula basis, according to the rural population of the State. States would apply for this funding as part of the application for funding under the Trauma Care Grant Program. However, if the overall appropriation for the Trauma Grant Program fell below $25 million—and, therefore, only $4.75 million would be available for rural EMS projects—funding for section 1231 would be awarded on a competitive basis. I think this amendment streamlines the application process and improves the bill. I congratulate the Senator from Mississippi.

The second amendment would delete section 4(a) of the bill, which would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study of State Medicaid policies with regard to trauma care. I am aware that the GAO is already conducting a study regarding the financing of trauma care, which would include financing under Medicaid. I have therefore proposed to delete that requirement from the bill.

Mr. President, the third amendment would delete the prior language under subsection 6(b), which would have required that the Federal Communications Commission complete a study of the availability of radio frequency channels for the emergency medical services community, establish a plan to ensure the needs of emergency medical services communications are met, and prepare a report for Congress containing the results of the study and plan.

Mr. President, this amendment would still require the FCC to report the Congress on the overall adequacy of the communications systems for prehospital emergency medical services providers. It would also leave intact the requirement that the FCC provide Congress with recommendations regarding the future availability of radio frequency channels for these service providers. However, rather than requiring the FCC to submit a separate report regarding the development of a national assignment plan, the amendment would require the FCC to provide the Congress with ongoing assessments of prehospital emergency medical communications based on several steps the FCC is currently undertaking.

The FCC is presently in the process of implementing a national public safety plan in which approximately 55 regions across the country develop and implement plans with respect to the allocation of public safety radio frequencies. According to the FCC, plan approval is contingent on, among other things, the inclusion of the emergency medical community in the frequency allocation planning process. Once the plan is developed it is submitted to the FCC for review and public comment. This amendment would require that the FCC use the planning process to monitor future allocations of radio frequencies to identify problems experienced by emergency medical services providers and to report such problems to Congress.

In addition, the FCC has recently received a petition for rulemaking to establish new radio service related directly to the emergency medical services. Under this amendment, the FCC would provide further assessments and recommendations to Congress based on comments received on the petition and any subsequent rulemaking activity in this area.

Mr. President, it is my hope that these ongoing assessments by the FCC will go far in identifying and meeting the communication needs of the emergency medical services providers. It is crucial that Congress remain informed of the availability of frequency channels for these vital pre- hospital communications.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth amendments would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to consult and coordinate with the Secretary of transportation with respect to the research, training evaluations, and demonstration projects regarding emergency medical services and trauma care systems. I understand that the Department of Transportation has several excellent emergency medical service and trauma care programs in place. These amendments are intended to clarify that the implementation of this act does not conflict with the activities carried out by the Department of Transportation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, 17 years ago the first comprehensive law to upgrade emergency medical services throughout the United States was enacted. That law and those that followed in 1976 and 1979, which I am very proud to have authored, enabled communities to transform emergency medical services that consisted of poorly trained ambulance and emergency room personnel, outdated equipment, and little coordination of services into efficient and effective EMS systems able to respond to all kinds of medical crises.

The measure before us today would enable communities to build on those systems in order that victims of serious injuries can be assured of receiving the highest quality of medical care available, and more importantly, be given every opportunity to continue full and productive lives.

This legislation is the culmination of more than 3 years of effort, and I am proud that the Senate is now on the verge of passing it. I want to express my great appreciation to the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Mr. KENNEDY, who has been an ardent supporter of this legislation and who was a principal cosponsor of the original EMS legislation in the 1970's and who has done so very much to cooperate with me and my staff to develop this legislation, and the ranking Republican of the committee, Mr. HATCH, for their assistance in bringing this bill before the Senate today. I also want to express my appreciation to two organizations that have worked tirelessly with me and my staff on this legislation—the American College of Surgeons and the American Trauma Society.

Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues to support this measure.

EXHIBIT 1

EMERGENCY! OVERWHELMED AND UNDERSTAFFED MEDICINE'S FRONT LINES ARE COLLAPSING ACROSS AMERICA

[By Nancy Gibbs]

"We do traumas; we do heart attacks; we do orthopedic fractures; we deliver babies; we do it all," explains Peter Moyer, chief of emergency medicine at Boston City Hospital. "I think of us as the urban GP." Tonight Moyer's trauma team is summoned to save a man who has overdosed on heroin. They cut his clothes away, thump on his chest and connect an IV tube, all the while talking to him, trying to keep him awake. "Do you want to die?" resident Stuart Kessler yells at the man, who is feebly pushing the doctors away. The man shakes his head. "Good," says Kessler. "I don't want you to die either." He administers Narcan, a heroin antidote. An hour later, the patient regains his strength and wants to leave before the police come. He gets angry when a nurse tells him his clothes were cut to pieces. She tries to hide her annoyance. "You understand, sir, that our first priority was saving your life."

The gray Cadillac was going more than 50 m.p.h. when it swerved off the road onto a Little League field in Riverside, Ill. By the time the car rolled to a stop, the bodies of children and parents were strewn across the infield. Ambulances came whooping and screeching to Loyolas McGaw Hospital, 23 blocks away, and the trauma team went to work. Research shows tht if basic life support is used on serious trauma victims within four minutes and advanced life support with in eight, nearly 50% of them survive. McGaw beat the averages. The first child was in cardiac arrest, and two more died on the operating table. But five others with severe head, chest and abdominal injuries survived. "It could have been my child," murmured one doctor, whose boy was only slightly injured in the accident. "My son could have been sitting next to the children who got killed."

It's not really all the blood on the gunshot victims, or the long wait for a doctor, or the smell of the street people that bothers patients in the emergency room at Booth Memorial in Queens, N.Y. It's the indignity.

"Forty-year-old people come in with terminal cancer, and this is where they die," says Dr. Mark Henry. "With the lights on, no privacy, no curtains, with their bedpans and medical charts in clear sight of other patients and their relatives forced to crowd around their gurney and cry.

In large cities and small towns, the emergency room is the abused child of American medicine. Overburdened, understaffed and underfinanced, emergency departments across the country are reeling from multiple blows. Start with 37 million patients who have no health insurance. Add a graying population with a growing need for expensive treatment. Substract government reimbursements, which often cover only half the cost of treating the poor. Factor in the effects of the AIDS epidemic and drug violence. Under such pressures, the miracle is that the system shows any vital signs at all.

Fighting hard to keep it alive are some 110,000 doctors and nurses, plus technicians, social workers and paramedics, employed by roughly 5,700 emergency departments nationwide. Last year they treated 90 million patients for everything from hangnails to heart attacks. In the busiest hospitals, emergency-room personnel minister to an average of 200 patients in a single, brutal twelve-hour shift, while stretchers stack up in the waiting rooms, hallways and even closets. Staffers eat large meals before going on duty, since there will be no breaks once they start. They treat wounds they hoped never to see outside a war zone: it is to Los Angeles, which had more automatic-weapons victims than Beirut last year, that the U.S. Army sends its physicians for combat training, at the Martin Luther King Jr./Drew Medical Center. "What gives out is not patient care," says Dr. Elisabeth Rosenthal of New York Hospital, "but our sanity."

With each passing month, a few more hospitals decide they can no longer stand the strain. Chicago has lost four of its ten trauma centers—specialized units set up within hospitals to handle victims of car wrecks, violence and other life-threatening injuries. In Dade County, Fla., every hospital has dropped out of the trauma network, except James M. Jackson Memorial: one trauma center for more than 2 million residents. Many other emergency departments across the country have "down licensed," or substantially reduced the scope of their emergency services.

When emergency rooms and trauma centers shut down, either permanently or temporarily, the impact sends a shudder throughout the entire medical system. Though patients may be able to choose where they go to have brain surgery, they cannot choose where to have a heart attack, or crash their car, or stumble into cross fire. "The hospitals don't just close their doors to poor people," says Virginia Price-Hastings, director of Los Angeles' trauma hospital programs. "When they're closed, they're closed to everyone." Furthermore, if hospital beds are filled with emergency patients, doctors cannot schedule elective surgeries like breast biopsies, gallbladder removals and cardiac bypasses. Delay a bypass too long, and it can turn into a heart attack—which brings the patient back to the crowded emergency room.

A typical May afternoon in the District of Columbia's George Washington University Medical Center: half a dozen suspected heart attacks; a man who was mowing the lawns at Oak Hill cemetery and caught his foot in the mower; another who was cleaning the meatslicing machine at a restaurant and cut off his fingertip. A 40-year-old man with black hair and gray skin is complaining of sharp stomach pains. He is HIV positive and taking AZT. "That's what someone looks like who's going to die soon," Dr. Michael Bourland explains quietly as he moves on. Doctors here agree that they make the vast majority of their decisions within the first 15 seconds of seeing a patient. But some things simply demand more time. When a patient cannot be saved, Dr. Bourland says, "you have to go tell the family that their loved one died, and you know that you only have about 120 seconds to do it—to get them to cry, to get them to yell and scream, to get them calm enough to give them all the facts so they won't wonder later what we did to try to save him. But I've only 120 seconds to do all that, because if I don't get out of there, then three other people are going to die while I'm sitting talking to a family."

If people think this is a problem only of big inner-city hospitals, they are wrong. They may be dead wrong," says Dr. Stephan Lynn, the director of the emergency department at Manhatten's St. Luke's—Roosevelt Hospital. It is true that there are healthy suburban hospitals that have been largely spared the city's crises. But many rural hospitals are also swamped with trauma cases: farming, fishing and forestry are the most dangerous occupations in America. Isolated from major urban centers, rural hospitals are struggling to recruit and train emergency physicians and to pay for the sophisticated trauma networks that make all the difference in saving accident victims. At the same time they are coping with the AIDS patients, drug overdoses and hopsital overcrowding that were once largely confined to the cities. "Sometimes this place is like a M.A.S.H. unit," says Dr. E. Jackson Allison Jr. of Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville, N.C. "The patients don't stop coming. We end up putting people in the hallways and numbering the beds H1, H2, H3 and so on."

But it is the cities like New York, Chicago and Los Angeles that are suffering a meltdown. During the busiest periods, paramedics talk of "medical gridlock." They cannot even unload their ambulances because the emergency room cannot open because every last bed in the hospital is taken. At this point the hospital may go on "bypass" and ask that ambulances be sent elsewhere. But many hospitals that used to go on bypass once or twice a year now do so every week. In California emergency rooms open and shut like tollgates depending on the traffic. Because surgeons were too busy, one homeless woman who was transferred to Harbor-UCLA Medical Center to have a kidney stone removed was released with a wastecollection tube protruding from her body. She was told to come back for surgery—in one month.

Doctors are loath to admit that patients may be dying because they cannot get proper treatment in overcrowded emergency rooms. Indeed, under such harsh conditions, they are rightly proud of the high level of expert care they maintain. But in some hospitals, as volume grows, there are bound to be errors: in 1988, for example, the New York State health department reported that poor patient care was at least partly responsible for twelve deaths that year at Lincoln Hospital in the South Bronx. In one case, a 30-year-old woman with chest pains died after waiting 5½ hours for a chest X ray; she was never given oxygen or an EKG. At Martin Luther King Jr./Drew Medical Center, an 18-year-old woman who needed a tracheotomy had her throat inadvertently slit and both jugular veins cut by the hospital's trauma doctors. Despite massive bleeding, she managed to recover.

"I know from observation that there have been preventable deaths," says an emergency-room doctor at a private New York hospital. "Ambulances don't get there soon enough. Nurses can't get medicine to patients on schedule. Physicians can't assess all the critically ill patients early. The IVs, the antibiotics and the cardiac medications are delayed. There are no monitors available and sometimes no one to monitor the monitor.

The doctors and nurses of St. Bernard Hospital in Chicago already had their hands full when the Trans Am nearly crashed into the emergency room. The driver, who had been shot in the neck, lost consciousness as he approached the hospital and ran into a retaining wall just out front. Five more feet and he would have landed in the waiting room. The trauma team dragged him out of the car, raced him into the emergency room, cut off his clothes and tried to use suction equipment to get the blood out of his lungs. A thoracic surgeon was called in to locate the bullet, which had entered his Adam's apple and been deflected into his lung. Hospital officials figured that they would get roughly $71 from the state for treating the patient. The first two hours of his care had already cost $2,000.

The crisis is all the more ironic in light of the revolutionary advances in trauma care during the past decade. A generation ago, emergency rooms were dumping grounds for bad doctors and training grounds for young ones. But the experience of two world wars, Korea and especially Vietnam taught doctors that saving injured patients depended as much on speed as on skill. Doctors refer to "the golden hour" after a trauma, before irreversible shock sets in, when lifesaving treatment is most likely to succeed. Beginning in the early '80s, states organized themselves into trauma networks and began tailoring training programs for physicians interested in emergency care as a specialty. The goal was not entirely altruistic: the hope was that most accident victims would be middle class and well insured. "A lot of hospitals looked to trauma victims as $250,000 pieces of meat, and everyone wanted them," says Fred Hurtado, president of the United Paramedics of Los Angeles.

Whatever the hospitals' motives, the advantages for patients were obvious. Trauma is the leading cause of death for people under 44, killing more than 140,000 in the U.S. each year. By improving paramedic training, integrating ambulance services and diverting critical patients to hospitals that specialize in burns or limb reattachment or spinal injury, death rates could be dramatically reduced. In the year after setting up their trauma networks, Peoria, Ill, saw traffic fatalities drop 50%, and Orange County, Calif., saw deaths among non-head-injured auto-accident victims drop from an estimated 73% to 9%.

But in gearing up their emergency-care capacity, hospitals didn't bargain on a crucial economic fact: in the cities, at least, the patients most likely to need such treatment are least likely to be able to pay. Hospitals have always subsidized nonpaying patients by tacking excess charges on to bills of those with health insurance. But when it comes to emergency care, hospitals cannot handpick their clientele. A 1986 law forbids hospitals to turn away poor patients at the emergency room before they are "stablized." The typical trauma-patient bill last year was $13,000, on average hospitals took a loss of $5,000 on each. Says Dr. Robert Hockberger of Harbor-UCLA: "It's amazing to me that in 1983 all the hospitals didn't realize that most of the people who shoot and stab each other and wreck their cars at 3 a.m. don't have insurance."

At the same time that the trauma centers were expanding, government subsidies were collapsing. To cap soaring health-care costs, the federal and state governments tightened the controls over how much hospitals could charge Medicare patients for any procedure. Private insurers soon followed suit, with the result that patients who have used up their quota of covered costs are often discharged too early—only to return sooner and sometimes sicker to the emergency room.

Under pressure to contain their costs, many hospitals began eliminating beds, including some in their intensive-care units. ICU beds are the most expensive because they must be vigorously monitored by nurses. But by cutting back on ICU beds, hospitals simply shifted the burden to emergency rooms and other facilities. "A young man who needed neurosurgery waited eight days before he could get a bed," says Dr. Albert Lauro, director of emergency medicine at New Orleans' Charity Hospital. "Another woman, who had had a stroke, waited four days. They sit in the emergency department hours and days trying to get into the intensive-care units."

In some cases, private hospitals dump expensive patients on public facilities—not because the private institutions are losing money but because they are not making as much money as they are accustomed to. "Hospitals have shifted resources away from emergency care to drug and alcohol rehabilitation or outpatient psychiatric care," says Dr. Hockberger. "These are the things that make money." According to the National Association for Hospital Development, by the year 2000, 40% of the nation's 2,200 acute-care hospitals will be closed or converted to other uses.

At the heart of the problem, health-care experts agree, is the absence of any national consensus or policy on how to care for the poor and underinsured. Many of those flocking to emergency rooms are working people whose employers are no longer able or willing to provide insurance. "The 9-to-5 executive with benefits can take time off to see his doctor," says Dr. Keith T. Sivertson, director of the Johns Hopkins emergency department in Baltimore. "The poor slob mopping the floor until 4 a.m. may be sick after work, yet has to be ready to go back on the job the next day because if he doesn't work he doesn't get paid. Where does he get a doctor at 4 a.m.?" For many people the answer used to be walk-in health clinics; but when funding for these clinics started drying up, some closed their doors.

In those neighborhoods that have functioning clinics, patients may still choose the emergency room because it is open 24 hours a day or because they think the care is better. At Chicago's Michael Reese Hospital, some pregnant women wait in the parking lot until they are close to delivery so they can be admitted through the emergency room. The deluge has forced most hospitals to adapt their primary-care systems. Triage nurses divide patients into two groups: the critically ill, who must be seen immediately, and the less serious cases, which can be sent to "urgent-care centers." For millions of Americans, the emergency room has become the family doctor.

But even the best emergency department is a poor substitute for reliable primary care. Fearful of the harsh conditions and long waits at hospitals, people often put off treatment as long as possible. When they do show up at the emergency room, they are sicker than if they had had regular preventive care, and often require longer hospitalization—which further ties up valuable beds. "The longer the length of stay, the higher the occupancy rate," says Kenneth Raske, president of the Greater New York Hospital Association, "and the more pressure on the emergency rooms." This is especially true of AIDS patients. While the average hospital stay is around eight days, the typical AIDS patient remains between 20 and 30 days.

One day last spring, Dr. Peter Moyer at Boston City was tending to a young man who had been wounded in a shoot-out, presumably over the cocaine the staff found stashed in his underwear. Hovering nearby was the patient's bodyguard, an immense personage who kept his hand on a bulging object inside his jacket. He refused to leave when the security guards ordered him out. When they threatened to call the police, the patient climbed off the treatment table and walked out with the bullet still lodged in his arm.

The trasnformation of urban neighborhoods into war zones has turned many hospitals into combat units. "Intentional penetrating injuries"—which is to say, gunshot and stab wounds—used to be rare outside the worst inner-city areas. Now every hospital sees them. At the Washington Hospital Center, the number of violent injuries has jumped 94% since 1987, totaling 681 cases last year. Gunshot wounds were up 150%. Today roughly half of those with serious traumatic injuries in Los Angeles have been cut, stabbed or shot.

The drug war is often fought in the hospitals themselves. Patients try to steal drugs and syringes, and attack doctors and nurses who get in their way. At Philadelphia's Albert Einstein Medical Center, three-quarters of those screened at the trauma center tested positive for illegal or prescription drugs. Again, it is not only inner cities that suffer. "Drug pushers realize rural America is an easy mark," says Dr. Allison in Greenville, N.C. "Coke is color blind. It is overwhelming the community, particularly the poor." Adds Dr. Herbert Garrison III: "We have people who come in here carrying weapons and who are out of their heads. Sometimes we have police officers with shotguns in our parking lot."

Drugs and violence combine with a host of social problems that often overpower the medical ones. At Bellevue in Manhattan, a survey last year uncovered the astonishing fact that 42 percent of the patients in the hospital were homeless. As emergency rooms become the refuge of last resort, social workers are just as busy as the doctors and nurses. Victims of domestic violence are looking for a safe haven, homeless people for a place to sleep, addicts for a chance at treatment. Doctors at G.W.U.'s department of emergency medicine recall the day an elderly, malnourished woman from a local boarding home was brought to the hospital in cardiac arrest. As they were trying, unsuccessfully, to resuscitate her, doctors noticed that she had maggots on her legs under her stockings, and bedsores. "The paramedics said that home was the worst place they'd ever seen," social worker Mary Helen Harris recalls, "and they've seen a lot." She launched an investigation, testified in court about conditions, and the place was closed down.

Before crack, nurse Kathleen Paolicelli could handle drug addicts. "They would come in, they were quiet and you could treat them," says the 18-year veterans of the Elmhurst Hospital Center in Queens, N.Y. But crack, she says, has transformed her clientele and the dynamics of the emergency room. "With crack, it's overwhelming. They're wild, they go after patients, they swing from the IV packets, they jump out of the stretchers. They become paranoid. And they have enormous strength." Paolicelli, a robust woman herself, says the times for playing "little Nancy Nurse" in the emergency room are over. "You're tying people on top of stretchers, sitting on top of people and fighting with them constantly.

For some hospital administrators, the critical-care problem is essentially one of personnel. In New York, a hard-hit city, about 5,000 registered nurses' positions—about 1 of every 6 nursing jobs in the city—are vacant and about 900 beds are idle because of staffing shortages. Not surprisingly, emergency rooms are the ones that suffer the largest nurse shortages. Some nurses burn out; others leave because they are frustrated by a job that has come to demand as much baby-sitting of patients as emergency medicine. "I know one who's painting houses right now," says Dr. Thomas Coffee, director of emergency services at Cabrini Medical Center in Manhattan. "She left the profession because it broke her heart."

The doctors are often just a few steps behind. Some pioneering hospitals, like G.W.U. in Washington, have worked to give emergency medicine a higher professional status and to attract doctors to the specialty. The regular, albeit high-stress, hours are appealing, as is the chance to see a wide variety of ailments. "I think generally people see what goes on down here as either stress or excitement," says Dr. Bourland. "Those who interpret it as stress burn out, and those who see it as excitement don't."

Others flee the field because of the risk of malpractice suits. "In the E.R. you're a sitting duck for malpractice, and people here know it," says Dr. Rosenthal. For all their heroic efforts, emergency-room doctors have little chance to establish a continuing relationsip with patients and little time for tenderness. The waits can be long, the treatments painful and the sheer volume of patients high. "You have to work quickly during an emergency," she says, "with a lot of angry people, in a climate in which lawsuits are used by people to express their anger."

The obvious solutions to emergency-room overload are expensive and controversial: give people access to affordable health care, pay nurses decently, allow doctors some flexibility in treating their patients and recognized that good preventive care is a sound investment. Though politicians may resist boosting their budgets for medical care, they might be surprised to learn that many of their constituents are willing to pay the price. According to a Gallup poll released this month, 73 percent of Californians who believe the government should provide better health care for the poor were willing to pay higher taxes for such expanded coverage; 84 percent favored mandatory employer-provided health insurance.

But in cities like New York, once again facing a crippling budget battle, the hospital crisis cannot be solved without huge new investments and new priorities. "In New York City," says Dr. Lynn of St. Luke's-Roosevelt, "we have a phrase: 'It always gets worse before it gets worse.'" By 1994, AIDS patients alone, who now fill 9% of the city's beds, will need an additional 2,300 hospital beds—the equivalent of four new hospitals. The major municipal hospitals are crumbling; private facilities are eating into their endowments in order to pay expenses. "It's a crazy way to run a health-care system," says Dr. Alexander Kuehl, director of New York Hospital's emergency room. "Either give us national health insurance or give us an entrepreneurial system, but don't play games asking private hospitals to spend endowment to take care of patients. The endowment is the future."

Another, perhaps inevitable, answer is to ration health care more scrupulously. Already many hospital administrators are arguing that less money should be spent on highly specialized care—patients with terminal conditions, babies born with multiple defects who are not expected to live long, elderly patients in need of organ transplants. "We have to let some babies die, some old people die," says Dr. John West, a trauma-care expert at the University of California at Irvine. "We have to look at the quality of life, and we have to look at the return on our health-care buck. You just can't keep everyone alive forever."

But the decisions and solution will not come easily or soon. AIDS will not be cured tomorrow, nor will the population cease to age. Drugs will continue to kill, as will people who use them. When the doctors and nurses who devote themselves to saving lives on the edge are also asked to be baby-sitters, body-guards, street fighters and traffic cops, the burnout rate will only increase. And the last thing that a grievously wounded or ailing person needs to think about in a speeding ambulance is whether the hospital doors will be open when it arrives. Until the emergency room is made safe for emergencies, no one will be safe.

A HARD DAY'S NIGHT IN L.A.

(By James Willworth)

Frantic family members and blinking squad-car lights surrounded Antonio Ramirez. Knocked down by a passing pickup truck, the six-year-old boy screamed in pain as he lay on a curbside patch of grass in a south Los Angeles County barrio. For paramedics Edwin St. Andrew, 27, and Walter Tayenaka, 32, summoned to an "unknown T.C." (traffic collision), the moment was routine yet unnerving. The boy briefly lost consciousness and appeared to have broken bones. They had to move him quickly to a hospital. "You never know about kids," explained St. Andrew. "They seem to be doing well and suddenly they just drop."

St. Andrew and Tayenaka work for Paramedic Squadron 39 of the Los Angeles County Fire Department, a unit that serves a working-class white and Hispanic area within comfortable reach of five hospital emergency rooms. But as time passes each day, one E.R. after another claims saturation and closes down. Paramedics with life-and-death cases must sometimes beg or bluff their way in. Equally frustrating, trauma-care capability gets entangled with the community's demand for street medicine. High speed runs for "unknown rescue" all too often involve nothing more than cut fingers, headaches and family hysteria.

Little Tony Ramirez seemed to be in serious trouble. Wrapping the boy in head-to-knee flexible braces to keep his spine straight, technicians gingerly placed him in the ambulance. It left the scene at 7:05 p.m., just 13 minutes after St Andrew and Tayenaka got the call. St. Andrew monitored Tony's blood pressure while he cradled a portable phone and asked a county trauma center for permission to bring in the case. He tried to insert an IV needle, but the boy, who spoke no English, cried and resisted. "No moveas," St. Andrew cajoled in semi-Spanish. An impatient nurse on the phone demanded a blood-pressure reading. Suddenly Tony stopped crying. St. Andrew shook him gently: "Antonio, Antonio!" The boy began to wail again. Everything was chaotically routine. Hospital tests eventually showed that Tony had neither head injuries nor broken bones.

The radio barked again while St. Andrew and Tayenaka were still in the parking lot, and they took off at top speed. Arriving with the siren blaring, they found a man who had cut his hand in a minor traffic accident and wanted hospital care. A county-contracted private ambulance took the case. "He'll get a bill," said Tayenaka, "but nobody pays." Later a drunken partygoer fell and cut his head slightly; he wanted an ambulance too.

At 8:05 p.m., retired landscape gardener Robert McKinney, 76, sat shaky and pale in a room full of firemen. As paramedics attached red EKG clips to his chest, McKinney explained in a raspy voice that he had got out of bed at 1 a.m.—19 hours earlier—and had been struggling to breathe ever since. His blood pressure was an alarming 200 over 140 (120 over 80 is normal). Such severe hypertension can impair lung function and lead to congestive heart failure. McKinney's EKG showed an irregular, rapid heartbeat.

In the ambulance St. Andrew turned on oxygen, spritzed nitroglycerin under McKinney's tongue to relieve the hypertension and potential heart problems, and briefed a hospital over the phone. He warned McKinney to be ready for "a stick," then put in the IV needle to administer the diuretic drug Lasix, which dilates blood vessels. McKinney rallied as his pressure slipped down to 164 over 120. "I was scared," he admitted hoarsely. "I didn't think I'd make it." He did.

"I'm so sick! I'm so sick!" wailed Mona Aguayo as the paramedics entered her tiny bedroom at 1:30 a.m. Observed St. Andrew: "She's 96 years old, maybe senile, hurts all over. But basically she's healthy." Carried out by burly firemen, Aguayo seemed like a wounded bird with her thin, angular features, frightened eyes and short silver hair. "My hands! My hands!" she cried. She began to vomit as the ambulance sped toward Santa Marta Hospital, the last "open" emergency room of the night. But her pain and terror were apparently caused by hysteria. The woman was sent home within hours.

St. Andrew and Tayenaka remember the night they forced a local community hospital to admit a man who was gushing blood from a bullet wound to the neck. The sophisticated county trauma centers were closed; a less-equipped emergency room at Downey Community Hospital, six minutes away, was full. The paramedics were ordered to St. Francis Medical Center, twice the distance. They went instead to Downey, and the man survived the night. "I know the situation," said St. Andrew. "I'd pay extra taxes to keep the trauma centers open. I want one available if my kid is hurt."

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senate will today act on S. 15, the Emergency Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act. This is an extremely important bill, and it is one that I know has received very careful attention from its sponsor, the senior Senator from California, Senator CRANSTON, and from our committee.

Mr. President, this bill contains a small provision of which I am particularly proud. Last summer, I received a very compelling letter from a constituent of mine in Peace Dale, RI. It was this letter from Mrs. Anne B. Barrington that prompted me to include in the bill a provision which I believe may help people cope just a little better with the sudden injury or death of a loved one.

Mrs. Barrington wrote to tell me of a tragedy that befell a close friend of hers. Her friend, Richard Monahan, who now lives in North Kingston, RI, was living in New Hampshire with his bride, Patricia. One day, he came home from his midnight to 8 a.m. work shift to find that Patricia was not there. Her car was undisturbed in its parking space; their neighbors did not know Patricia's whereabouts. Richard grew worried; he noticed a chair not in its proper place and discovered on the floor the nose piece of oxygen equipment. He began to call hospitals, and fortunately, located the hospital to which Patricia had been taken. Mrs. Barrington's letter eloquently expresses the sad result:

[Richard] was informed it would be best for him to get to the hospital as soon as he could. When he arrived, he was ushered into a room and informed that his wife had been able to dial 911 at 6 a.m., the paramedics had found her unconscious when they arrived just minutes after Patricia had called, that the paramedics and hospital staff had done everything they could for her, but that she had died from a massive coronary before reaching the hospital.

Mr. President, Mrs Barrington's description of the tragic situation faced by Richard Monahan says two things to me: one is that we need this comprehensive trauma care legislation. We need excellent trauma care systems in every State in this Nation. Traumatic injury or death can happen anywhere, anytime, and whether we or a loved one survives the injury should not depend on where we live or what community we happen to be driving through.

Mrs. Barrington's letter says something else to me too. It is a reminder that there is a human component to trauma care—it says that we have families and loved ones who experience fear, anxiety, and potentially great tragedy if they cannot locate an absent family member who has been stricken or injured. How much better it would be if we could ensure that loved ones are notifed that an emergency has occurred and instructed where to call for information.

Mr. President, I am delighted that this legislation requires the "Clearinghouse on Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care" established by the bill to "foster * * * the development of policies for the notification of family members of individuals involved in a medical emergency * * *." Providing notices to indicate that an emergency has occurred has two purposes: It may save a life if a family member can locate an absent relative quickly and help doctors by providing missing medical information, such as medications the victim may be taking, or whether the victim has certain allergies or a particular medical problem. Second, it would help families, and perhaps the victim, cope better with the trauma that has occurred. In the words of Mrs. Barrington:

[I]t is a terrible shock to be caught up in a situation such as this not knowing what to do or where to turn as panic sets in. If some of the panic could be alleviated, it would make it a little easier to bear the outcome.

Mr. President, Mrs. Barrington has told me that the towns of East Greenwich and South Kingstown, RI, have already put a notification plan in effect, and the town of Narragansett, RI, had plans to implement a plan as well. I am very pleased by these developments, and hope that by including this important provision in today's legislation, we may provide encouragement and support for the development of such policy nationwide.

I would like to thank Mrs. Barrington for sharing her excellent idea with me, and extend my appreciation to Mr. Richard Monahan, who has since moved to North Kingstown, RI, for allowing us to try to make some good out of a terrible personal tragedy. I would also like to thank Senator CRANSTON, the bill's sponsor and moving force, and the members of our committee, for supporting this important addition to the bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this time the letter I received from Mrs. Anne Barrington, to which I have referred in my remarks, and note that I have excised certain personal data provided by Mrs. Barrington to protect her privacy.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEACE DALE, RI,
August 21, 1989.

Hon. CLAIBORNE PELL,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: I am writing to ask your help in getting some type of legislation set up nationwide to help people involved in medical emergencies. I do not know where to start other than to let you know what happened to very dear friends of my husband and I (using them as an example), as well as to let you know what so many of us in the Town of South Kingstown would like to see done.

About four months ago, Patricia and Richard Monahan were married and Patricia relocated to Nashua, New Hampshire to be with her husband. On July 29 Richard, who works from midnight until 8:00 a.m., returned home from work and found his wife no where in sight. Patricia was no where in the apartment, her car was still parked in its proper space, and no one in the apartment complex was aware of anything going on, and could give Richard no information as to her where-abouts. He had no way of knowing what was going on, until after looking for her everywhere inside the apartment and the surrounding grounds, he noticed a chair moved from its normal position. Upon checking closer, he noticed the nose piece to oxygen paraphernalia and then the panic set in. In his panic, he was able to gain enough composure to start checking hospitals and was able to locate the hospital Patricia was taken to. (Richard was luckier than most in his plight to locate his wife as there are only two hospitals in Nashua, and not dozens as in the big cities such as New York, Chicago, etc.) He was informed it would be best for him to get to the hospital as soon as he could. When he arrived, he was ushered into a room and informed that his wife had been able to dial 911 at 6:00 a.m., the paramedics had found her unconscious when they arrived just minutes after Patricia had called, that the paramedics and hospital staff had done everything they could for her, but that she had died from a massive coronary before reaching the hospital.

The United States would be lost without the excellent paramedics and EMTs we have in existence today. They are well-trained in what they do, they are efficient, they are kind, sympathetic and quick, and know what to do without any hesitation whatsoever. In essence, they have to be the doctor until they can get their patient to the proper facility, and all medical decisions made while the patient is in their care, are theirs alone. They have saved numerous lives with the training they have. However, there is one thing wrong; especially in a situation such as our friend went through. Since no one else was home at the time, the paramedics were able to find a medicine bottle with Patricia's name on it, but had no way of knowing it was not her married name since the prescription had been filled before she was married. The other problem was that when Richard walked through the door that morning, he had no way of knowing what had happened until he called hospitals and was finally able to locate the hospital where his wife had been taken. You can imagine his anxiety in not being able to find out immediately what was going on, knowing that his wife was happy and perfectly healthy when he had left for work nine hours earlier.

One of the solutions so many of us have come up with is to get some kind of legislation going which would make it mandatory so that in an emergency such as this the paramedics, firemen (or any type of emergency personnel), have some kind of a sticker, flyer, or anything very bright in color that would catch the eye with the simple words of, "There has been a medical (fire, etc.) emergency at this address. For information please call — — —." The emergency personnel, as they leave, would put this preprinted information at a spot where it would be seen immediately by anyone entering the dwelling after the emergency. Since the sticker (or whatever) is already printed, they would not have to take the added time to fill information out other than to place the sticker on a door, wall, table or at some spot where it is readily seen. The information number could be attached to the 911 headquarters, at the local fire stations, at the local police stations, or some office of higher authority who would have all the information they need to know within minutes of the emergency. When a person in our friend's situation calls that number, he/she is told when the emergency occurred, where to go, or who to call. This will alleviate much of the terror and confusion of someone in Richard's position, and save a considerable amount of time; even though it would not quell any fears or alter the outcome.

I am sure so many people have thought of something like this, but probably in their bereavement they were not up to doing anything about it. However, since Patricia's death, we have all been doing some checking and talking to try to get something started. (I have to add that Patricia was a very dear and close friend of mine for over 23 years.) Richard's brother, William, has talked to the Commander of the South Kingstown Ambulance Corps, David Weinreich, and David would also like to see something done; and in fact, has already started the ball rolling on his part. Richard has also talked to numerous fire department members, state and town officials, and we have all talked to everyone we see about getting something in the works to make it a must to leave some kind of information where it can be seen to avoid situations like Richard's from happening again. It is a terrible shock to be caught up in a situation such as this not knowing what to do or where to turn as panic sets in. If some of the panic could be alleviated, it would make it a little easier to bear the outcome; whether the outcome is good or bad.

I guess what I am trying to ask is if there is anything we need to do from our end to get some kind of legislation going, or is there something you can do to help us. I cannot honestly say whether there is any state in the Union that has something such as we are proposing, but it would seem to me that it is something well worth looking into. If legislation is needed to get this going, can you tell me where to start, what you need from me, etc.; in other words, where do we go from here. I can be reached during the day in —— if you would like to discuss this with me further. Richard would also be very willing to talk with you and can be reached in Nashua at .

Thanking you in advance for any help you can give me.

Sincerely yours,

ANNE B. BARRINGTON.

AMENDMENT NO. 3019, EN BLOC

(Purpose: To revise provisions relating to rural emergency medical services and trauma care)

(Purpose: To eliminate the requirement for the conduct of a study concerning certain Medicaid policies)

(b) FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Federal Communications Commission shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report that—

(1) describes in detail any problems and solutions identified by the National Public Safety Planning process in meeting the communications requirements of pre-hospital emergency medical service providers; and

(2) assesses the overall adequacy of, and makes recommendations concerning, such communications services as indicated by comments the Commission receives in any on-going proceedings related to pre-hospital emergency medical communications.

On page 43, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new subsection:

"(c) CONSULTATION AND COORDINATION.—The Secretary shall consult and coordinate with the Secretary of Transportation to ensure that the implementation of this title will not conflict with the responsibilities of the Secretary of Transportation under title 23, United States Code, with respect to emergency services.".

On page 78, line 8, strike out "participate in the development" and insert in lieu thereof "communicate and coordinate with regard to".

On page 79, line 6, strike out "participate in the development" and insert in lieu thereof "communicate and coordinate with regard to".

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments, the substitute, as amended, is agreed to.

Without objection, the bill is considered read a third time and passed.

So the bill (S. 15), as amended, was passed.

(The text of the bill as passed, will appear in a future edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 1829

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader, may at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXII, proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 787, S. 1829, a bill to amend the Controlled Substances Act to further restrict the use of steroids and human growth hormones, and that it be considered under the following time limitations:

Thirty minutes on the bill, equally divided and controlled in usual form between Senators BIDEN and THURMOND or their designees; that no amendments, other than the committee reported substitute amendment and an amendment to be offered by the manager on behalf of Senator HUMPHREY to amend title 18, section 1961(1), on which there be no time for debate, be in order; and that no motions to recommit be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT REFERRAL OF S. 3217

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Inouye-McCain bill authorizing additional positions for the National Museum of the American Indian, introduced earlier today, be jointly referred to the Rules Committee and the Indian Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KOREAN WAR VETERANS MEMORIAL 38TH ANNIVERSARY COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House on S. 2737, a bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint a silver dollar coin in commemoration of the 38th anniversary of the ending of the Korean war and in honor of those who served.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 2737) entitled "An Act to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint a silver dollar coin in commemoration of the thirty-eighth anniversary of the ending of the Korean War and in honor of those who served", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Korean War Veterans Memorial Thirty-Eighth Anniversary Commemorative Coin Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) on June 25, 1950, the Republic of Korea was invaded by the North Korean Army,

(2) Untied States forces in a United Nations action defended South Korea and repelled the attackers,

(3) further aggression by the Chinese Communists was also repelled,

(4) an armistice was signed on July 27, 1953

(5) American combat deaths totaled 33,629, and more than 8,000 remains are still unaccounted for,

(6) an additional several thousand nonbattle deaths occurred on or around the Korean peninsula,

(7) 103,284 Americans were wounded, with many disabled and handicapped,

(8) this war, waged under the United Nations aegis, halted communist aggression in Northeast Asia, preserved the human rights of 40 million people, and restored the territorial integrity of the Republic of Korea,

(9) the desire to memorialize American gratitude to the courageous men and women who served has led to the Korean War Veterans Memorial authorization,

(10) this memorial must be built by private donations, and

(11) the moneys must be raised by the thirty-eighth anniversary of the ending of the war.

(b) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress—

(1) that the thirty-eighth anniversary of the ending of the Korean War should not go unrecognized,

(2) that the United States should recognize this anniversary and the veterans of the Korean War by minting and issuing a silver dollar coin; and

(3) that issuance of this coin will enable the Korean War Veterans Memorial to be built in the Nation's capital on schedule, with all donations to be deposited in the United States Treasury Memorial Fund.

SEC. 3. KOREAN WAR VETERANS COMMEMORATIVE COIN.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall mint and issue not more than 1,000,000 one-dollar silver coins to commemorate the thirty-eighth anniversary of the ending of the Korean War.

(b) SPECIFICATIONS.—Each silver coin minted under this Act shall—

(1) have a diameter of 1.500 inches; and

(2) be composed of 90 percent silver and 10 percent copper.

(c) DESIGN.—The design of the coins minted in accordance with this section shall be symbolic of the Korean War Veterans' heroic service. Each coin shall bear a designation of the value of the coin, an inscription of the years "1953-1991", an inscriptions of the words "Liberty", "In God We Trust", "United States of America", and "E Pluribus Unum". The design for the coins authorized by this Act shall be selected by the Secretary after consultation with the Korean War Veterans Memorial Advisory Board and the American Battle Monuments Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Advisory Board" and the "Commission", respectively).

(d) NUMISMATIC ITEMS.—For purposes of section 5132(a)(1) of title 31, United States Code, all coins minted under this Act shall be considered to be numismatic items.

(e) LEGAL TENDER.—The coins referred to in subsection (a) shall be legal tender as provided in section 5103 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 4. SOURCES OF BULLION.

The Secretary shall obtain silver for minting coins under this Act only from stockpiles established under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act.

SEC. 5. MINTING AND ISSUANCE OF COINS.

(a) UNCIRCULATED AND PROOF QUALITIES OF COINS.—Coins minted under this Act may be issued in uncirculated and proof qualities, except that only one facility of the United States Mint may be used to strike each quality of coins.

(b) COMMENCEMENT OF ISSUANCE.—The Secretary may issue the coins minted under this Act beginning on January 1, 1991.

(c) TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.—Coins may not be minted under this Act after December 31, 1991.

SEC. 6. SALE OF COINS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall sell the coins minted under this Act at a price equal to the face value, plus the cost of designing and issuing the coins (including labor, materials, dies, use of manchinery, and overhead expenses).

(b) SURCHARGES.—Sales of coins minted under this Act shall include a surcharge of $7 for each one-dollar coin.

(c) BULK SALES.—The Secretary shall make any bulk sales of the coins minted under this Act at a reasonable discount to reflect the lower costs of such sales.

(d) PREPAID ORDERS.—The Secretary shall accept prepaid orders for the coins minted under this Act prior to the issuance of such coins. Sale prices with respect to such prepaid orders shall be at a reasonable discount to reflect the benefit of prepayment.

SEC. 7. FINANCIAL ASSURANCES.

(a) NOT NET COST TO GOVERNMENT.—The Secretary shall take such actions as may be necessary to ensure that minting and issuing coins under this Act will not result in any net cost to the Federal Government.

(b) PAYMENT FOR COINS.—A coin shall not be issued under this Act unless the Secretary has received—

(1) full payment for the coin;

(2) security satifactory to the Secretary to indemnify the United States for full payment; or

(3) a guarantee of full payment satisfactory to the Secretary from a depository institution whose deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration Board, or the Resolution Trust Corporation.

SEC. 8. USE OF SURCHARGES.

(a) DISPOSITION OF SURCHARGES.—Surcharges received from the sale of coins minted under this Act shall be deposited in the Korean War Veterans Memorial Fund in the United States Treasury.

(b) USE OF SURCHARGES.—

(1) CONSTRUCTION.—All surcharges collected shall be available to the Commission—

(A) to estalish and erect the Korean War Veterans Memorial in the Nation's capital to honor those who served;

(B) to make the donation required by section 8(b) of Public Law 99-652; and

(C) to make the deposit described in section 3(c) of Public Law 99-572.

Any surcharges in excess of the amounts needed for the purposes of this paragraph shall be used as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3).

(2) MAINTENANCE AND PERPETUAL CARE.—Excess funds above the funds required for paragraph (1) shall be available to provide maintenance and perpetual care for the memorial. Any additional excess funds shall be used to establish interpretive centers and to disseminate information.

(3) NATIONAL PARK SERVICE FUNDS..—Any remaining excess funds shall be donated to the National Park Service for maintenance of memorials under its jurisdiction and authorized by Congress during the 20th century relating to the commemoration of military conflicts in which the United States was involved.

(c) AUDIT.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall have the right to examine the books, records, documents, and other data of the Commission relating to the expenditure of amounts paid under subsection (b).

SEC. 9. GENERAL WAIVER OF PROCUREMENT REGULATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), no provision of law governing procurement of public contracts shall be applicable to the proocurement of goods and services necessary for carrying out the provisions of this Act.

(b) EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY.—Subsection (a) shall not relieve any person entering into a contract under the authority of this Act from complying with any law relating to equal employment opportunity.

SEC. 10. COINAGE PROFIT FUND.

(a) DEPOSITS.—All amounts received from the sale of coins issued under this Act shall be deposited in the coinage profit fund.

(b) PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall pay the amounts authorized under section 8 from the coinage profit fund.

(c) EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary shall charge the coinage profit fund with all expenditures under this Act.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1990

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Environment Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4323, regarding the Great Lakes, and that the Senate then proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4323) to amend the Federal Water Polution Control Act relating to water quality in the Great Lakes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3020

(Purpose: To provide a substitute for the bill)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I send a Levin-Lieberman amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] for Mr. LEVIN, for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. GLENN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. D'AMATO, and Mr. SIMON, proposes an amendment numbered 3020.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu therof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Great Lakes Critical Programs Act of 1990".

TITLE I—GREAT LAKES

GREAT LAKES ACTION SCHEDULES

SEC. 101. Section 118 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268) is amended by inserting immediately after subsection (c)(1) the following new paragraphs, and by renumbering the existing paragraphs accordingly:

"(2) GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY GUIDANCE.—

"(A) By June 30, 1991, the Administrator, after consultation with the Program Office, shall publish in the Federal Register for public notice and comment proposed water quality guidance for the Great Lakes System. Such guidance shall conform with the objectives and provisions of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, shall be no less restrictive than the provisions of this Act and national water quality criteria and guidance, shall specify numerical limits on pollutants in ambient Great Lakes waters to protect human health, aquatic life, and wildlife, and shall provide guidance to the Great Lakes States on minimum water quality standards, anti-degradation policies, and implementation procedures for the Great Lakes System.

"(B) By June 30, 1992, the Administrator, in consultation with the Program Office, shall publish in the Federal Register, pursuant to this section and the Administrator's authority under this chapter, final water quality guidance for the Great Lakes System.

"(C) Within two years after such Great Lakes guidance is published, the Great Lakes States shall adopt water quality standards, anti-degradation policies, and implementaiton procedures for waters within the Great Lakes System which are consistent with such guidance. If a Great Lakes State fails to adopt such standards, policies, and procedures, the Administrator shall promulgate them not later than the end of such two-year period. When reviewing any Great Lakes State's water quality plan, the agency shall consider the extent to which the State has complied with the Great Lakes guidance issued pursuant to this section.

"(3) REMEDIAL ACTION PLANS.—

"(A) For each area of concern for which the United States has agreed to draft a Remedial Action Plan, the Program Office shall ensure that the Great Lakes State in which such area of concern is located—

"(i) submits a Remedial Action Plan to the Program Office by June 30, 1991;

"(ii) submits such Remedial Action Plan to the International Joint Commission by January 1, 1992; and

"(iii) includes such Remedial Action Plans within the State's water quality plan by January 1, 1993.

"(B) For each area of concern for which Canada has agreed to draft a Remedial Action Plan, the Program Office shall, pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(C) of this section, work with Canada to assure the submission of such Remedial Action Plans to the International Joint Commission by June 30, 1991, and to finalize such Remedial Action Plans by January 1, 1993.

"(C) For any area of concern designated as such subsequent to the enactment of this Act, the Program Office shall (i) if the United States has agreed to draft the Remedial Action Plan, ensure that the Great Lakes State in which such area of concern is located submits such Plan to the Program Office within two years of the area's designation, submits it to the International Joint Commission no later than six months after submitting it to the Program Office, and includes such Plan in the State's water quality plan no later than one year after submitting it to the Commission; and (ii) if Canada has agreed to draft the Remedial Action Plan, work with Canada, pursuant to subparagraph (c)(1)(C) of this section, to ensure the submission of such Plan to the International Joint Commission within two years of the area's designation and the finalization of such Plan no later than eighteen months after submitting it to such Commission.

"(D) The Program Office shall compile formal comments on individual Remedial Action Plans made by the International Joint Commission pursuant to section 4(d) of Annex 2 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and, upon request by a member of the public, shall make such comments available for inspection and copying. The Program Office shall also make available, upon request, formal comments made by the Environmental Protection Agency on individual Remedial Action Plans.

"(4) LAKEWIDE MANAGEMENT PLANS.—The Administrator, in consultation with the Program Office shall—

"(A) by January 1, 1992, publish in the Federal Register a proposed Lakewide Management Plan for Lake Michigan and solicit public comments;

"(B) by January 1, 1993, submit a proposed Lakewide Mangement Plan for Lake Michigan to the International Joint Commission for review; and

"(C) by January 1, 1993, publish in the Federal Register a final Lakewide Management Plan for Lake Michigan and begin implementation.

Nothing in this subparagraph shall preclude the simultaneous development of Lakewide Management Plans for the other Great Lakes.

"(5) SPILLS OF OIL AND HAZARDOUS MATERIALS.—The Program Office, in consultation with the Coast Guard, shall identify areas within the Great Lakes which are likely to experience numerous or voluminous spills of oil or other hazardous materials from land based facilities, vessels, or other sources and, in consultation with the Great Lakes States, shall identify weaknesses in Federal and State programs and systems to prevent and respond to such spills. This information shall be included on at least a biennial basis in the report required by this section".

CONTAMINATED SEDIMENTS

SEC. 102. Section 118(c)(7) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(c)(3)), as renumbered by section 101 of this title, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(A)" following the title; and

(2) by adding the following new subsections:

"(B) The Program Office shall—

"(i) by December 31, 1990, complete chemical, physical, and biological assessments of the contaminated sediments at the locations selected for the study and demonstration projects;

"(ii) by December 31, 1990, announce the technologies that will be demonstrated at each location and the numerical standard of protection intended to be achieved at each location;

"(iii) by December 31, 1992, complete full or pilot scale demonstration projects on site at each location of promising technologies to remedy contaminated sediments; and

"(iv) by December 31, 1993, issue a final report to Congress on its findings.

"(C) The Administrator, after providing for public review and comment, shall publish information concerning the public health and environmental consequences of contaminants in Great Lakes sediment. Information published pursuant to this subparagraph shall include specific numerical limits to protect health, aquatic life, and wildlife from the bioaccumulation of toxins. The Administrator shall, at a minimum, publish information pursuant to this subparagraph within 2 years of the date of the enactment of this Title.".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 103. Section 118(a)(3) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(a)(3)) is amended by deleting "and" at the end of clause (D), by deleting the period at the end of clause (E), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(F) 'area of concern' means a geographic area located within the Great Lakes, in which beneficial uses are impaired and which has been officially designated as such under Annex 2 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement;

"(G) 'Great Lakes States' means the States of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin;

"(H) 'Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement' means the bilateral agreement, between the United States and Canada which was signed in 1978 and amended by the Protocol of 1987;

"(I) 'Lakewide Management Plan' means a written document which embodies a systematic and comprehensive ecosystem approach to restoring and protecting the beneficial uses of the open waters of each of the Great Lakes, in accordance with article VI and Annex 2 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement; and

"(J) 'Remedial Action Plan' means a written document which embodies a systematic and comprehensive ecosystem approach to restoring and protecting the beneficial uses of areas of concern, in accordance with article VI and Annex 2 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.".

GREAT LAKES CONFINED DISPOSAL FACILITIES

SEC. 104. At the end of section 118(c) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(c)) add the following new paragraph:

"(11) CONFINED DISPOSAL FACILITIES.—(A) The Administrator, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, shall develop and implement, within one year of the date of enactment of this paragraph, management plans for every Great Lakes confined disposal facility.

"(B) The plan shall provide for monitoring of such facilities, including—

"(i) water quality at the site and in the area of the site;

"(ii) sediment quality at the site and in the area of the site;

"(iii) the diversity, productivity, and stability of aquatic organisms at the site and in the area of the site; and

"(iv) such other conditions as the Administrator deems appropriate.

"(C) The plan shall identify the anticipated use and management of the site over the following twenty-year period including the expected termination of dumping at the site, the anticipated need for site management, including pollution control, following the termination of the use of the site.

"(D) The plan shall identify a schedule for review and revision of the plan which shall not be less frequent than five years after adoption of the plan and every five years thereafter.".

GREAT LAKES NATIONAL PROGRAM AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 105. (a) AUTHORIZATION.—Section 118(h) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(h)) is amended by deleting "1990, and 1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "and 1990, and $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1991".

(b) ALLOCATION.—Section 118(h) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1268(h)) is amended by adding after "30 percent" the following: "or $3,300,000, whichever is the lesser,".

HEALTH RESEARCH REPORT

SEC. 106. Subsection 118(e) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph—

"(3) HEALTH RESEARCH REPORT.—(A) Not later than September 30, 1994, the Program Office, in consultation with the Research Office, the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, and Great Lakes States shall submit to the Congress a report assessing the adverse effects of water pollutants in the Great Lakes System on the health of persons in Great Lakes States and the health of fish, shellfish, and wildlife in the Great Lakes System. In conducting research in support of this report, the Administrator may, where appropriate, provide for research to be conducted under cooperative agreements with Great Lakes States.

"(B) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator to carry out this section not to exceed $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

TITLE II—LONG ISLAND SOUND

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 201. This part may be cited as the "Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1990".

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL WATER POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

SEC. 202. Title I of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 119. LONG ISLAND SOUND.—(a) The Administrator shall continue the Management Conference of the Long Island Sound Study (hereinafter referred to as the 'Conference') as established pursuant to section 320 of this Act, and shall establish an office (hereinafter referred to as the 'Office') to be located on or near Long Island Sound.

"(b) ADMINISTRATION AND STAFFING OF OFFICE.—The Office shall be headed by a Director, who shall be detailed by the Administrator, following consultation with the Administrators of EPA regions I and II, from among the employees of the Agency who are in civil service. The Administrator shall delegate to the Director such authority and detail such additional staff as may be necessary to carry out the duties of the Director under this section.

"(c) DUTIES OF THE OFFICE.—The Office shall assist the Management Conference of the Long Island Sound Study in carrying out its goals. Specifically, the Office shall—

"(1) assist and support the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan for Long Island Sound developed pursuant to section 320 of this Act;

"(2) conduct or commission studies deemed necessary for strengthened implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan including, but not limited to—

"(A) population growth and the adequacy of wastewater treatment facilities,

"(B) the use of biological methods for nutrient removal in sewage treatment plants,

"(C) contaminated sediments, and dredging activities,

"(D) nonpoint source pollution abatement and land use activities in the Long Island Sound watershed,

"(E) wetland protection and restoration,

"(F) atmospheric deposition of acidic and other pollutant into Long Island Sound,

"(G) water quality requirements to sustain fish, shellfish, and wildlife populations, and the use of indicator species to assess environmental quality,

"(H) State water quality programs, for their adequacy pursuant to implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan, and

"(I) options for long-term financing of wastewater treatment projects and water pollution control programs.

"(3) coordinate the grant, research and planning programs authorized under this section;

"(4) coordinate activities and implementation responsibilities with other Federal agencies which have jurisdiction over Long Island Sound and with national and regional marine monitoring and research programs established pursuant to the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act;

"(5) provide administrative and technical support to the conference;

"(6) collect and make available to the public publications, and other forms of information the conference determines to be appropriate, relating to the environmental quality of Long Island Sound;

"(7) not more than two years after the date of the issuance of the final Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan for Long Island Sound under section 320 of this Act, and biennially thereafter, issue a report to the Congress which—

"(A) summarizes the progress made by the States in implementing the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan;

"(B) summarizes any modifications to the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan in the twelve-month period immediately preceding such report; and

"(C) incorporates specific recommendations concerning the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan; and

"(8) convene conferences and meetings for legislators from State governments and political subdivisions thereof for the purpose of making recommendations for coordinating legislative efforts to facilitate the environmental restoration of Long Island Sound and the implementation of the Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan.

"(d) GRANTS.—(1) The Administrator is authorized to make grants for projects and studies which will help implement the Long Island Sound Comprehensive Conservation and Management Plan. Special emphasis shall be given to implementation, research and planning, enforcement, and citizen involvement and education.

"(2) State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies, and other public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, and organizations held be eligible for grants pursuant to this subsection.

"(3) Citizen involvement and citizen education grants under this subsection shall not exceed 95 per centum of the costs of such work. All other grants under this subsections shall not exceed 50 per centum of the research, studies, or work. All grants shall be made on the condition that the non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources.

"(e) AUTHORIZATIONS.—(1) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the implementation of this section, other than subsection (d), such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1971 through 1996.

"(2) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the implementation of subsection (d) not to exceed $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1996.".

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS

SEC. 203. Amend subsection 116(g) of the Marine Protection Research and Sanctuaries Act (33 U.S.C. 1416(g)) by striking all after "shall comply with" and inserting in lieu thereof the following "the requirements of this title.".

TITLE III—LAKE CHAMPLAIN

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Lake Champlain Special Designation Act of 1990".

DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 302. Paragraph (2) of section 314(d) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1324(d)) is amended by inserting "Lake Champlain, New York and Vermont;" before "Lake Huston, Texas".

LAKE CHAMPLAIN MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

SEC. 303. Title I of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section—

"LAKE CHAMPLAIN MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

"SEC. 120. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a Lake Champlain Management Conference to develop a comprehensive pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan for Lake Champlain. The Administrator shall convene the management conference within ninety days of the date of enactment of this section.

"(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Members of the Management Conference shall be comprised of—

"(1) the Governors of the States of Vermont and New York;

"(2) each interested Federal agency, not to exceed a total of five members;

"(3) the Vermont and New York Chairpersons of the Vermont, New York, Quebec Citizens Advisory Committee for the Environmental Management of Lake Champlain;

"(4) four representatives of the State legislature of Vermont;

"(5) four representatives of the State legislature of New York;

"(6) six persons representing local governments having jurisdiction over any land or water within the Lake Champlain basin, as determined appropriate by the Governors; and

"(7) eight persons representing affected industries, nongovernmental organizations, public and private educational institutions, and the general public, as determined appropriate by the trigovernmental Citizens Advisory Committee for the Environmental Management of Lake Champlain, but not to be current members of the Citizens Advisory Committee.

"(c) TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—(1) The Management Conference shall, not later than one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of this section, appoint a Technical Advisory Committee.

"(2) Such Technical Advisory Committee shall consist of officials of: appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government; the State governments of New York and Vermont; and governments of political subdivisions of such States; and public and private research institutions.

"(d) RESEARCH PROGRAM.—(1) The Management Conference shall establish a multi-disciplinary environmental research program for Lake Champlain. Such research program shall be planned and conducted jointly with the Lake Champlain Research Consortium.

"(e) POLLUTION PREVENTION, CONTROL, AND RESTORATION PLAN.—(1) Not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this section, the Management Conference shall publish a pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Plan') for Lake Champlain.

"(2) The Plan developed pursuant to this section shall—

"(A) identify corrective actions and compliance schedules addressing point and nonpoint sources of pollution necessary to restore and maintain the chemical, physical, and biological integrity of water quality, a balanced, indigenous population of shellfish, fish and wildlife, recreational, and economic activities in and on the lake;

"(B) incorporate environmental management concepts and programs established in State and Federal plans and programs in effect at the time of the development of such plan;

"(C) clarify the duties of Federal and State agencies in pollution prevention and control activities, and to the extent allowable by law, suggest a timetable for adoption by the appropriate Federal and State agencies to accomplish such duties within a reasonable period of time;

"(D) describe the methods and schedules for funding of programs, activities, and projects identified in the Plan, including the use of Federal funds and other sources of funds; and

"(E) include a strategy for pollution prevention and control that includes the promotion of pollution prevention and management practices to reduce the amount of pollution generated in the Lake Champlain basin.

"(3) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Management Conference, shall provide for public review and comment on the draft Plan. At a minimum, the Management Conference shall conduct one public meeting to hear comments on the draft plan in the State of New York and one such meeting in the State of Vermont.

"(4) Not less than one hundred and twenty days after the publication of the Plan required pursuant to this section, the Administrator shall approve such plan if the plan meets the requirements of this section and the Governors of the States of New York and Vermont concur.

"(5) Upon approval of the plan, such plan shall be deemed to be an approved management program for the purposes of section 319(h) of this Act and such plan shall be deemed to be an approved comprehensive conservation and management plan pursuant to section 320 of this Act.

"(f) GRANT ASSISTANCE.—(1) The Administrator may, in consultation with the Management Conference, make grants to State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies, and public or nonprofit agencies, institutions, and organizations.

"(2) Grants under this subsection shall be made for assisting research, surveys, studies, and modeling and technical and supporting work necessary for the development of the Plan and for retaining expert consultants in support of litigation undertaken by the State of New York and the State of Vermont to compel cleanup or obtain cleanup damage costs from persons responsible for pollution of Lake Champlain.

"(3) The amount of grants to any person under this subsection for a fiscal year shall not exceed 75 per centum of the costs of such research, survey, study and work and shall be made available on the condition that non-Federal share of such costs are provided from non-Federal sources.

"(4) The Administrator may establish such requirements for the administration of grants as he determines to be appropriate.

"(g) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'Lake Champlain drainage basin' means all or part of Clinton, Franklin, Warren, Essex, and Washington counties in the State of New York and all or part of Franklin, Grand Isle, Chittenden, Addison, Rutland, Lamoille, Orange, Washington, Orleans, and Caledonia counties in Vermont, that contain all of the streams, rivers, lakes, and other bodies of water, including wetlands, that drain into Lake Champlain.

"(h) STATUTORY INTERPRETATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to affect the jurisdiction or powers of—

"(1) any department or agency of the Federal Government or any State government; or

"(2) any international organization or entity related to Lake Champlain created by treaty or memorandum to which the United States is a signatory.

"(i) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Environmental Protection Agency to carry out this section $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.

FEDERAL PROGRAM COORDINATION

SEC. 304. (a) DESIGNATION OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN AS A SPECIAL PROJECT AREA UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Lake Champlain basin, as defined under section 120(h) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, shall be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a special project area under the Agricultural Conservation Program established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590h(b)).

(2) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE REIMBURSEMENT.—To carry out the purposes of this subsection, the technical assistance reimbursement from the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service authorized under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, shall be increased from 5 per centum to 10 per centum.

(3) COMPREHENSIVE AGRICULTURAL MONITORING.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Management Conference and appropriate State and Federal agencies, shall develop a comprehensive agricultural monitoring and evaluation network for all major drainages within the Lake Champlain basin.

(4) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—In allocating funds under this subsection, the Secretary of Agriculture shall consult with the Management Conference established under section 120 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act and to the extent allowable by law, allocate funds to those agricultural enterprises located at sites that the Management Conference determines to be priority sites, on the basis of a concern for ensuring implementation of nonpoint source pollution controls throughout the Lake Champlain basin.

(b) COOPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.—For the purpose of enhancing and expanding basic data collection and monitoring in operation in the Lake Champlain basin, as defined under section 120 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the heads of water resources divisions of the New York and New England districts of the United States Geological Survey, shall—

(1) in cooperation with appropriate universities and private research institutions, and the appropriate officials of the appropriate departments and agencies of the States of New York and Vermont, develop an integrated geographic information system of the Lake Champlain basin;

(2) convert all partial recording sites in the Lake Champlain basin to continuous monitoring stations with full gauging capabilities and status; and

(3) establish such additional continuous monitoring station sites in the Lake Champlain basin as are necessary to carry out basic data collection and monitoring, as defined by the Secretary of the Interior, including groundwater mapping, and water quality and sediment data collection.

(c) COOPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.—

(1) RESOURCE CONSERVATION PROGRAM—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, in cooperation with the Lake Champlain Fish and Wildlife Management Cooperative and the Management Conference established pursuant to this subsection shall—

(A) establish and implement a fisheries resources restoration, development and conservation program, including dedicating a level of hatchery production within the Lake Champlain basin at or above the level that existed immediately preceding the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) conduct a wildlife species and habitat assessment survey in the Lake Champlain basin, including—

(i) a survey of Federal threatened and endangered species, listed or proposed for listing under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.), New York State and State of Vermont threatened and endangered species and other species of special concern, migratory nongame species of management concern, and national resources plan species;

(ii) a survey of wildlife habitats such as islands, wetlands, and riparian areas; and

(iii) a survey of migratory bird populations breeding, migrating and wintering within the Lake Champlain basin.

(2) To accomplish the purpose of paragraph (1), the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service is authorized to carry out activities related to—

(A) controlling sea lampreys and other non-indigenous aquatic animal nuisances;

(B) improving the health of fishery resources;

(C) conducting investigations about and assessing the status of fishery resources, and disseminating that information to all interested parties; and

(D) conducting and periodically updating a survey of the fishery resources and their habitats and food chains in the Lake Champlain basin.

(d) AUTHORIZATIONS.—(1) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Agriculture $2,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 to carry out subsection (a) of this section.

(2) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Interior $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 to carry out subsections (b) and (c) of this section.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am offering legislation today which will revitalize the Federal commitment to the Great Lakes. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation, entitled the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act.

In the 1960's and 1970's, the Great Lakes were known for their pollution problems. The Cuyahoga River was infamous as the river that caught fire, and Lake Erie was widely depicted as a dying lake. Amid public outcry, the United States and Canada signed the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement to revive the Lakes, and both countries embarked upon a tremendous antipollution effort. They have since experienced a number of successes, including an 80-percent reduction in phosphorous, the revival of Lake Erie, and other signs of environmental rejuvenation. But the Great Lakes are still a long way from health.

For the past 18 months, the Senate Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, which I chair, has held a series of hearings on Federal programs to implement the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and revive the Great Lakes. In hearings in Michigan, Wisconsin and Washington, chaired by myself and Senator KOHL and also attended by Senators GLENN and HEINZ, we heard from a large number of witnesses expert in Great Lakes matters. Several testified about a 1989 report by the Conservation Foundation and the Institute for Research on Public Policy warning of continuing pollution problems and describing the worrisome state of Great Lakes wildlife—eagles that reproduce poorly, cormorants with beak deformities, dwindling mink populations and schools of trout that can no longer survive without assistance. The International Joint Commission, a United States-Canadian body which oversees the Great Lakes, gave similar warnings about toxic pollution and unacceptable delays in pollution-fighting programs. State officials, and even EPA witnesses, admitted slow progress on long-promised cleanup efforts.

Because EPA is designated by the Clean Water Act as the lead agency to implement the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, we looked especially closely at its programs. We found, to our dismay, that EPA had repeatedly dropped the ball on major Great Lakes programs, Including commitments to encourage water quality standards for the Great Lakes in compliance with the Agreement; ensure the drafting of cleanup plans for designated areas of concern; ensure the development of lakewide plans to control critical pollutants; and conduct demonstration projects using new technologies to cleanup contaminated sediments.

We found, for example, that efforts to draft the "Remedial Action Plans" to clean up the Great Lakes' designated toxic hotspots have been underway since 1984 but, after 6 years, only 1 of the 42 plans is complete. We found that, despite a 1987 commitment to draft a Lake Michigan Plan, after 3 years, not a single word has been written. In short, we found EPA's Great Lakes programs to be stagnating—without momentum, without deadlines and without adequate resources.

The Great Lakes need more. To revitalize EPA's efforts, in September 1989, I introduced S. 1646, the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act, along with Senator KOHL and Senator GLENN. We were then joined by Senators SIMON, KASTEN, RIEGLE, DIXON and BOSCHWITZ.

The purpose of this bill was not to create new programs, but to make the existing Great Lakes programs effective. It proposes essentially three changes. It proposes spelling out key treaty commitments in our domestic law to help ensure that the United States lives up to its promises. It proposes statutory deadlines to put teeth into the key cleanup effort, and it proposes increasing Federal resources to make meaningful progress possible.

The proposed deadlines would affect these key Great Lakes programs:

The Great Lakes Initiative which seeks through a regional dialog to produce guidelines which will reduce disparities among the Great Lakes States' water quality standards;

The completion of State remedial action plans to cleanup the 42 designated toxic hotspots in the Great Lakes;

The development of a Federal Lakewide Management Plan to control critical pollutants in Lake Michigan, and

The performance of five demonstration projects to test promising technologies to cleanup contaminated sediments.

An authorization provision would raise the ceiling on Great Lakes programs from about $16 million to $23 million.

After introduction, S. 1646 was praised by the Greak Lakes environmental community. The Sierra Club called it "the most comprehensive Great Lakes protection legislation of the decade." Support for its provisions on statutory deadlines and increased resources was expressed by such organizations as the International Joint Commission, the National Wildlife Federation, Great Lakes United, the Conservation Foundation, and others.

The provisions in the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act—with some adjustments in the language and dates—were approved by the Senate Committee on Envrionment and Public Works in July and incorporated into a larger Coastal Protection Act as title IV. Because that larger bill is not ready for floor action, I am today offering, in an amendment to a House bill, the committee-approved language on the Great Lakes, with other sections from the Coastal Protection Act concerning Long Island Sound and Lake Champlain.

Due to my involvement in the drafting of the Great Lakes provisions and my subcommittee's review of Federal Great Lakes programs, I would like to take a moment here to explain how the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act [GLCPA] is intended to operate. The goal of the GLCPA is nothing more or less than the revitalization of Federal Great Lakes programs.

GREAT LAKES INITIATIVE.

The first set of deadlines in the GLCPA requires the development of Great Lakes water quality guidance. These provisions are intended to codify an ongoing effort known as the Great Lakes Initiative. This Initiative, begun by EPA's Great Lakes National Program Office in 1989, with the active involvement of all eight Great Lakes States, is one of the few bright spots in EPA's recent Great Lakes efforts.

The goal of the initiative is to reduce the disparities that currently exist among the water quality controls of the Great Lakes States. Imposing statutory deadlines on the initiative is intended to ensure that EPA produces the final product—a Great Lakes guidance document—in a reasonable period of time.

This guidance document is intended to move the eight Great Lakes States toward a more consistent, regionwide implementation of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The GLCPA requires the guidance to address the topics already under discussion in the region: minimum water quality standards for selected pollutants, antidegradation policies and implementation procedures. The guidance must specify recommended numerical limits for the selected pollutants to protect the health of aquatic life, wildlife and human beings in the Great Lakes System. These numerical limits are intended to function within the Great Lakes region in the same way that national water quality criteria do for the country, by providing a regulatory minimum that States must meet unless they have a specific justification for doing less. The Great Lakes numerical limits must be at least as stringent as the national criteria, and must be tougher if called for by the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

These Great Lakes numerical limits are needed, because the United States made specific commitments in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement to achieve certain levels of water quality throughout the Lakes. The United States thus committed the Great Lakes States to meeting not only our national water quality criteria, but also the binational water quality objectives specified in the agreement. The Great Lakes Initiative is a critical first step toward meeting that obligation and needs the status of domestic law to be effective.

REMEDIAL ACTION PLANS

The next set of deadlines concerns the development of Remedial Actions Plans or RAPs to cleanup the 42 desingated toxic hotspots in the Great Lakes. The RAP process has operated since 1984, under voluntary deadlines specified by the States charged with drafting the RAPS. After 6 years of work, only one RAP is complete. That's not good enough. That is why the GLCPA replaces the States' voluntary goals with mandatory deadlines.

The dealines chosen essentially give the States 2 more years to complete their RAP's. The final deadline requires the States to incorporate their RAP's into their annual water quality plans by January 1, 1993. Including a RAP in a State's annual water quality plan was chosen as the benchmark for a "complete" RAP, because these plans require EPA approval, they are the basic planning document for a State's water quality program, and they are subject to annual review and adjustment.

The GLCPA requires States to submit draft RAP's to the IJC for review in order to comply with commitments made in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Should the IJC fail to comment on a draft RAP within the 6-month period specified in the bill, States must nevertheless meet the next deadline of obtaining EPA approval to include the RAP in the State's water quality plan. The 6-month period is provided to give the IJC a reasonable amount of time for review, but the GLCPA does not want the lack of timely IJC comments to delay the RAP process. Should IJC comments be made after a RAP has been included in a State plan, the State can and should make the suggested changes. Our hope, however, is that the IJC comments will be made within the six-month period set out in the legislation.

The final deadline for completing the RAP's, January 1, 1993, was chosen to insure that all States have their RAPs' in place prior to EPA's triennial review of their water quality programs.

Some States have asked what will happen if they miss the deadlines for the RAP's. The GLCPA does not currently specify a penalty for missing that—or any other—deadline. The hope is that the statutory deadlines will, in themselves, encourage action. If not—if these statutory deadlines are ignored—penalties or other incentives could be legislated at a later time.

LAKE MICHIGAN PLAN

The GLCPA Imposes deadlines on EPA to develop a lakewide management plan to control critical pollutants in Lake Michigan. The United States committed itself to drafting this plan in the 1987 protocol to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, but has yet to do so. The GLCPA is intended to force action on this important promise.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

The GLCPA also imposes deadlines on achieving milestones in an existing program to conduct onsite demonstrations at five Great Lakes locations of technologies to clean up contaminated sediments at the sites. This demonstration program was established in the 1987 amendments to the Clean Water Act, but almost no progress was made for two years. The last year has seen some progress, but statutory deadlines are needed to ensure action. The GLCPA thus establishes a timetable for EPA to complete the site assessments, announce the technologies to be tested at the sites, conduct the actual demonstrations, and issue a final report. The Army Corps of Engineers is active in this effort and has announced that, as part of the report, it intends to provide guidance for full-scale technology demonstrations and cleanup operations at the tested sites. This is exactly what should happen.

GREAT LAKES SPILLS

Besides setting deadlines on existing programs, the GLCPA sets up on new task fo" EPA's Great Lakes office, based upon a subcommittee hearing on the threat of Great Lakes spills. We learned in that September 1989 hearing that the Great Lakes experience hundreds of spills of oil and toxic chemicals each year, yet have serious inadequacies in their spill response and prevention programs. In September of this year, a tanker named the Jupiter carrying over 1 million gallons of gasoline caught fire and threatened to release its cargo into the Saginaw River, which flows into Lake Huron. An environmental disaster was narrowly averted, but the threat posed by Great Lakes spills became clearer than ever.

To address this threat, the GLCPA directs EPA, in consultation with the Coast Guard, to identify areas within the Great Lakes which are likely to experience spills and to identify weaknesses in Federal and State programs to prevent and respond to such spills. In implementing the requirement to identify high-risk spill areas, EPA should include a thorough analysis of the Great Lakes spill data released by the Coast Guard in April 1990, on the occurrences, volumes and natures of these spills. In implementing the requirement to identify weaknesses in Great Lakes spill programs, EPA should pay special attention to its Spill Prevention, Control and Countermeasurers [SPCC] Program which monitors the approximately 50,000 oil storage facilities on Great Lakes shorelines. These land-based facilities appear to be responsible for more than 75 percent of the Great Lakes spills and 100 percent of the major spills. Given testimony describing the SPCC Program as a cost-effective means of controlling these spills, it is probably the most important spill prevention program in the Great Lakes region.

INCREASED AUTHORIZATION

The GLCPA increases the authorization for Great Lakes programs from about $16 million to $25 million. This increased authorization is needed to permit EPA to accelerate its Great Lakes programs and meet the deadlines established in the legislation. EPA acknowledged the need for an increased authorization for Great Lakes programs in a letter dated August 6, 1990.

DEFINITIONS

The GLCPA adds to the Clean Water Act several definitions of terms used in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, such as "Remedial Action Plans" and "Lakewide Management Plans." It uses language similar to the language used in the agreement so that the terms will have the same meaning in U.S. domestic law as they do in the international agreement.

SEDIMENT STANDARDS

In addition to the provisions setting deadlines and adding resources, during committee markup of the Coastal Protection Act, Senator METZENBAUM added to the GLCPA two other important provisions. The first requires EPA to publish information on the health and environmental consequences of contaminated sediments in the Great Lakes, including specifying recommended numerical limits on sediment pollutant concentrations to protect human health, aquatic life and wildlife from the bioaccumulation of toxins.

Contaminated sediments are the single biggest remediation problem in the Great Lakes, affecting 41 of the 42 toxic hotspots. Information spelling out the allowable amounts of pollutants in such sediments is desperately needed by Great Lakes communities trying to identify which of their sediments are safe and which need to be cleaned up. The GLCPA requires EPA to publish the numerical limits within 2 years of the enactment of this legislation to enable communities to rely upon them when implementing the contaminated sediment aspects of their remedial action plans, also due for completion in 2 years.

The numerical limits required by the GLCPA should be designed not only to allow identification of contaminated sediments in the Great Lakes, but also to facilitate the development of measures to remediate and prevent this contamination, including measures in remedial action plans, lakewide management plans and NPDES permits. The United States committed itself in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement to developing limits on sediment pollutants in the Great Lakes—in order to assist in the remediation of the lakes' contaminated sediments—and the information produced under this section should be designed to work in tandem with the other antipollution efforts underway in the region.

Because the information on Great Lakes sediment limits will play a role in protecting human health and the environment and in guiding communities on the remediation of contaminated sediments, EPA is urged to produce limits which are scientifically credible as well as practical for communities to use and understand.

CONFINED DISPOSAL FACILITIES

A second measure added by Senator METZENBAUM to the GLCPA requires EPA, in consultation with the Army Corps of Engineers, to develop 20-year management plans for the facilities used to contain contaminated sediments dredged from the Great Lakes. This measure is long overdue. It is my hope that, in developing these plans, EPA will consult extensively with the States hosting the facilities. The shared goal should be to minimize environmental problems due to the operation and maintenance of these sites.

Senator METZENBAUM is a fast friend of the Great Lakes, and I commend him for his work on these and other Great Lakes provisions. I am delighted that he has joined the Environment and Public Works Committee and look forward to working with him on any more Great Lakes efforts.

HUMAN HEALTH STUDY

The final Great Lakes provision in the GLCPA requires EPA to submit a report to Congress on adverse health affects caused by pollutants in Great Lakes waters. This report is to be prepared in consultation with EPA's Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and the Great Lakes States based upon a 3-year research effort.

The goal here is to produce one or more research projects focussing on the links between water pollutants and the health of fish, wildlife and people. There is a dearth of research on the precise health effects of such pollutants, and we need to fill that gap.

The idea for this amendment came from the State of Michigan which cited both the lack of research and the need to follow up on a recent Great Lakes study examining a possible relationship between fish toxins and developmental problems in children whose mothers consumed large amounts of Lake Michigan fish. This research was jointly conducted by the School of Public Health in the University of Michigan, the Environmental Toxicological Institute in Michigan State University and the School of Medicine in Wayne State University. Its preliminary findings are chilling and call out for additional research.

This study was not in the Great Lakes provisions approved by the committee in July, but it was presented to Committee members last month and has been cleared by them.

OTHER PROVISIONS

In addition to the GLCPA, the amendment before us contains provisions which will benefit Long Island Sound and Lake Champlain. In addition, Senator MOYNIHAN will offer a separate amendment with respect to Lake Onondaga. The sponsors of these measures will be describing each of them in a moment. I will just say that they, too, seek to increase protections for a body of water important to this country.

The legislation I have just described is contained in an amendment to H.R. 4323, the House companion bill to protect the Great Lakes. H.R. 4323 was introduced by Congressman NOWAK several months after I introduced S. 1646, but because the House was quicker to move its bill than the Senate, we are going to use Mr. NOWAK's bill as our vehicle today. I want to express my appreciation to Mr. NOWAK for introducing and moving his bill in the House, so we have a fighting chance of enacting this legislation into law during this session of Congress.

I also want to express my appreciation to the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works—and in particular to Senator MITCHELL—for including in their work this year consideration of the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act. With all the work that the committee has done this year on clean air, oil spills and other environmental issues, I commend them for finding the time to address Great Lakes concerns. I also want to thank the Senate Great Lakes task force and its chair Senator GLENN for their help with the Great Lakes legislation. The hard work and enthusiasm of the task force's Allegra Cangelosi was key in getting the Great Lakes bill to this point. Senator KOHL was another leader in this effort, and I want to thank him and his staff for their commitment to the Great Lakes, not only in this legislation, but in our hearings and other efforts. Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator JEFFORDS and others also helped us, and I thank them as well.

In conclusion, the legislation before you provides needed measures to protect one of the United States' greatest national treasures, the Great Lakes. I urge all of us who want to protect American waterways to join us in voting for Senate passage of this important environmental legislation.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am proud to support passage of H.R. 4323, the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act of 1990. This legislation will ensure the accelerated cleanup of the Great Lakes. It builds on the existing Great Lakes Agreement by improving the organization of the cleanup and by mandating accountability.

Mr. President, these are also the objectives of the Long Island Sound provisions of the amendment. What now appears as title II of the Levin amendment was passed unanimously by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee as part of S. 1178, the Coastal Protection Act of 1990. Prior to its inclusion in S. 1178, this provision was introduced by me and by Senators DODD, MOYNIHAN, and D'AMATO as S. 1722, The Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989. The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee held a hearing on S. 1722 on October 2, 1989.

Since the hearing, at which S. 1722 received the enthusiastic support of local and national environmental and citizens groups and the support of both the States of New York and Connecticut, the management conference of the National Estuaries Program's Long Island Sound study has endorsed the objective of this bill: to establish a Long Island Sound Program Office within the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency for the purposes of coordinating Federal responsibilities to the cleanup of Long Island Sound.

The Long Island Sound Study has been one of the most successful of management conferences convened by the National Estuaries Program. Its 5-year study is drawing to a close, and next year we will be in receipt of its comprehensive conservation and management plan for restoring the sound to health. Under present law, the Federal Government would, at that point, be exempted from any futher responsibility to the study it had both initiated and led. I think that is wrong. And I am happy to say that the U.S. EPA Administrators of regions I and II also think that is wrong. They voted, along with the representatives of the States of Connecticut and New York, to support continuing the management conference and establishing an office to coordinate Federal responsibilities after the 1991 deadline for completion.

The Long Island Sound Program Office will be a particularly important addition. Having a central office from which to coordinate clean up activities builds on the successful cooperative effort that has existed up to this point. It will also provide accountability. And I believe it is time that someone or some group of people within the Federal Government think of the health of this great estuary as their full-time job.

It is that important. Nearly 10 percent of the population of the United States lives within 50 miles of Long Island Sound. Its waters are subject to the jurisdiction of nearly 150 separate local, State, regional, and Federal agencies and entities. Long Island Sound supports uses both necessary and diverse: Its shoreline falls along the great east coast flyway for migratory birds in addition to supporting a major interstate highway; 200,000 boaters traverse the sound yearly, and 44 sewage treatment plants dump into it. This legislation to protect Long Island Sound is the end result of one of the most powerful grassroots efforts I have seen in Connecticut history, an effort born of the hope engendered by the Long Island Sound study that it's not to late to save our sound, and a drive engendered by the preliminary results of the study which serve to warn us that while it may not be too late, it is neither a minute too soon.

Mr. President, it is my intention that the Long Island Sound Program Office serve to build on the success of the Long Island Sound Management Conference and that it draw on the talents of Federal agencies not already actively involved to participate in this condition. I am hopeful that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and other appropriate Federal agencies will see fit to assign to this office and to the protection of Long Island Sound the necessary personnel to accomplish this.

We have come this far toward restoring Long Island Sound because of the depth and breadth of support and commitment to its health. But we cannot afford to let-up now. When the Long Island Sound Study releases its comprehensive conservation and management plan, the really hard work will begin. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4323 with its Long Island Sound provisions to ensure that that work be well-organized, that those responsible be held accountable for progress, that the public be included in the process, and that the Federal Government not now back out of its honorable and necessary commitment to Long Island Sound.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, having spent most of my life near the shores of Lake Michigan, I have long appreciated the importance of the Great Lakes to our region of the country. The Great Lakes are largely responsible for the early settlement of Wisconsin and our neighboring States in the Upper Midwest. Over the years, the lakes have provided us with unique opportunities for transportation, commerce, recreation, scenic beauty, and in general, a superb quality of life.

Unfortunately, for more than two centuries, we took the Great Lakes for granted. We took from them endlessly, without giving anything back in return. And the Nation has paid—and is still paying—a price for that carelessness. The Great Lakes have suffered enormously as a result of our shortsighted actions. By the early 1970's, the lakes looked and smelled polluted, fish, and wildlife were dying off, and one of the lakes was even pronounced dead.

Fortunately, that crisis provoked a quick and effective response. Over the past two decades, we have made great progress in ridding the Great Lakes of the conventional pollutants which choked the lakes and killed the fish. By the early 1980's, the lakes looked cleaner, and the fish populations were rebounding.

But before we could congratulate ourselves on that achievement, new scientific findings gave new cause for concern. Fish were being found with strange tumors. Birds were found with deformed bills, or eggs that never hatched. Closer examination revealed that body tissue samples from fish, birds, and other wildlife commonly carry heavy burdens of toxic chemicals and heavy metals—PCB's, DDT, lead, cadmium, and mercury among others. Scientists believe that these toxins are responsible for the deformities, reproductive failures, and other developmental abnormalities evident among fish and wildlife in the Great Lakes region.

It was discovered that through a process called bioaccumulation, persistent toxics in the Great Lakes accumulate at increasingly greater concentrations in fish, birds, and animals up through the food chain. Through this process, the fish and wildlife living in and around the Great Lakes are much more toxic than the water itself. Water which may be safe for drinking yields fish which are unsafe for human consumption. The birds that eat those fish may show even higher levels of toxicity. And ultimately, the people living near the Great Lakes, who are part of this ecosystem, may be at risk.

Mr. President, these are the symptoms of an ecosystem in trouble. These are signs that our beautiful Great Lakes—and the fish and wildlife which depend of the lakes—are being slowly and systematically poisoned. But unlike a mystery novel, where the culprit remains unknown until the very end, we know where the poisons are coming from, and we know how to stop them. We know how to solve this crime against nature. But so far, we haven't done it.

For instance, we know that the toxics in the Great Lakes come from many sources. It is likely that over half the toxins arrive via the air, where they are carried sometimes for hundreds of miles before being deposited in the lakes. Some of the toxics are the result of direct discharges, from industrial and municipal sources. Some chemicals reach the Great Lakes through urban and agricultural runoff—the so-called nonpoint sources. Others come from overflowing sewage systems, tanker spills, and leaking storage tanks in shoreline areas.

So why have we not done anything? I chaired a series of hearings throughout Wisconsin last year, to find out why we haven't stopped this steady flow of toxics into the Great Lakes. And I attended several hearings here in Washington, chaired by Senator LEVIN, to learn more about the problem and the solutions. We've heard from a vast array of experts over the past 2 years. What we found were lots of good intentions, and even an international treaty with very admirable goals, but little real action.

In the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, signed by the United States and Canada in 1972, and updated in 1978 and 1987, the two countries pledged to undertake specific actions aimed at cleaning up the toxics already in the Great Lakes, and stopping the continued flow of toxics into the lakes. In the treaty, we established goals aimed at restoring and protecting all beneficial uses of Great Lakes waters, making the waters safe for swimming, fishing, and drinking. We agreed that "the discharge of any or all persistent toxic substances (shall) be virtually eliminated."

To reach that goal, the United States and Canada pledged to develop local cleanup plans, known as remedial action plans [RAP's], for 42 areas of concern—harbors and river mouths along the Great Lakes shoreline which are severely contaminated with toxics. In almost every case, the bottom sediments of these toxic hot spots are themselves a major source of contamination to the water.

The two nations also pledged to develop Lakewide Management Plans—comprehensive management documents for each lake—to protect the lakes from all negative impacts. We pledged to regulate water quality consistently throughout the Great Lakes Basin. And we pledged to protect the Great Lakes from spills of oil and other hazardous materials.

That all sounds great, until you realize that very little has actually happened. Those goals exist on paper, and on paper only. The Clean Water Act directs the Environmental Protection Agency to implement the U.S. commitments under the agreement, but the agency has made very little headway toward meeting those commitments.

To date, only one remedial action plan has been completed by the United States—the one for Green Bay. I am proud that the first plan happens to be in Wisconsin, and that the community is now trying to implement its ambitious cleanup plan. But the fact that the United States has completed only one RAP is a national disgrace. The fact that we have not developed a single lakewide management plan is disappointing. The fact that none of the other goals in the agreement have been met is disheartening to the millions of Americans who live and raise their children near the Great Lakes, get their drinking water from the lakes, and eat the fish caught in the lakes.

In order to translate the goals of the agreement into concrete actions, I worked with Senators LEVIN and GLENN to develop legislation, S. 1646, which we introduced last year. That legislation is the basis for the measure which we are passing today on the floor of the Senate. The bill sets statutory deadlines to insure that the goals of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement will be met by the United States in a timely manner. It insures that shoreline communities, like Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Marinette, and Superior in Wisconsin, will get the help they need from the EPA to develop specific cleanup plans for their contaminated harbors and tributary rivers.

The bill also insures that the States in the Great Lakes basin will share an equal burden in the Great Lakes cleanup, by requiring that the EPA develop uniform water quality guidance for the States to use when they develop their water quality rules. And the bill requires that the United States cooperate with the Canadian Government to insure that our northern neighbors make similar progress toward implementing the agreement.

The bill also requires that the EPA develop scientific criteria for use by States in assessing the toxicity of shoreline sediments, and undertake demonstration projects to develop environmentally sound ways in which contaminated sediments can be stabilized or removed.

Another provision of our bill requires the EPA and the Coast Guard to identify weaknesses in programs designed to protect the Great Lakes from chemical and oilspills, so that those weaknesses can be remedied. The bill also requires that the Army Corps of Engineers develop management plans for the confined disposal facilities which are used to contain dredged lake-bottom materials, to find and prevent leaks of toxic-laden sediments.

Finally, the bill contains two other provisions which I believe are very important to the people living near the Great Lakes. The first provision requires the EPA to submit to Congress a report assessing the human health effects of toxic contamination in the Great Lakes. We need to develop a better scientific understanding of the risks to human health and safety. The second provision insures that Federal grants, as well as expertise and assistance, will be available to help the States and local communities carry out their responsibilities under the water quality agreement. While it is commendable that the agreement assigns much of the cleanup responsibility to States and localities, we cannot reasonably expect them to meet their mandates without more help from the Federal Government. After all, the agreement represents a national commitment, and it is only fair that the Federal Government stand behind that commitment.

In closing, passage of this legislation represents the culmination of 2 years of effort on the part of many people. For me, it is the fulfillment of a goal which I set for myself when I first came to the Senate. But I could not conclude without recognizing the dedication and commitment which my distinguished colleague, Senator LEVIN, gave to this effort. Senator LEVIN's personal commitment and hard work have made this bill a reality. In addition, I could not fail to mention Senator GLENN's significant contribution to this measure.

And I would be remiss if I did not recognize the hard work that went into this effort on the part of many people in the State of Wisconsin. This measure reflects the input of a great many individuals in the environmental community, state agencies, scientific community, and the business community in my State.

I believe that this bill will make a real difference in the environmental quality of the Great Lakes. We owe it to ourselves and future generations to enact this legislation. And we owe it to the fish and wildlife who depend on us to protect their environment. This isn't the end of our work, by any means. Much more remains to be done. But I am pleased that the Senate is taking this important step forward today.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my fellow Senators to vote affirmatively on H.R. 4323, as amended with the Senate bill S. 2244, the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act of 1990. This bill will accomplish a very important objective within the Great Lakes region. It will codify in domestic law certain responsibilities to which the United States has committed itself in an international environmental agreement with Canada. The agreement, called the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, was initially signed by the two nations almost 20 years ago to address the primary problem of nutrient pollution in the Great Lakes. Lake Erie benefited dramatically by the programs set forth under this initial agreement. The treaty was more recently revised and amended to abate and clean up the heavy toxic pollution of some parts of the Great Lakes. Unfortunately, at our current rate of progress under the toxics portion of the agreement, we may never see the same dramatic results.

I would like to commend Senators LEVIN and KOHL, the authors of the bill, for bringing this fact to the attention of Congress. Their Oversight on Government Management Subcommittee hearings to research the bill gave us a chance to really look at implementation of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement programs directed at toxic pollution. They found that our efforts under the agreement were not much to boast about.

The bill before us will help us to begin to gain ground in fighting toxic pollution in the Great Lakes. The bill sets reasonable goals for completing our responsibilities in the remedial action planning process, the development of lakewide management plans, and the completion of demonstration projects on contaminated sediments in the region. In addition, the bill provides for research into health impacts of toxic pollution on residents of the Great Lakes basin, and better prevention of onshore hazardous materials spills, among other provisions.

The Great Lakes Critical Programs Act will help to energize the Environmental Protection Agency, to better focus its resources, and allow it to more effectively assist State and local participants in preventing and managing toxic contamination of the Great Lakes. I believe that once we get serious about Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement programs directed at toxic pollution, we will begin to see the badly needed results. This bill will help us get serious. I urge its passage by the Senate.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, last October, I spoke to a concerned group of Vermonters and New Yorkers about the environmental health of Lake Champlain. These citizens gathered at the Lake Champlain Symposium because they are worried that one of the region's greatest natural treasures is in trouble and needs quick attention.

At that conference I promised to work with my colleagues from Vermont and New York to write and pass model pollution prevention and cleanup legislation to help Lake Champlain. That promise resulted, on February 6, 1990, in my joining with Senators JEFFORDS, D'AMATO, and MOYNIHAN to introduce the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act.

Today, this important conservation bill passed the Senate. After months of hard work and through the leadership of not only my Vermont and New York colleagues but also Senators MITCHELL and CHAFEE, we are one step closer to reaching our goal.

I am particularly thankful to Senator LEVIN for his assistance in speeding the passage of the Lake Champlain

Special Designation Act by combining it with his Great Lakes Critical Programs Act. His tireless efforts to improve and protect the Great Lakes and their adjacent waterways deserve our applause.

Lake Champlain is truly one of the Nation's great lakes. It provides drinking water for almost 300,000 people. It provides varied recreational opportunities, and economic benefits to the towns and businesses along its shores.

Yet, Lake Champlain is struggling with many challenges including overdevelopment, profligate recreational use, and point and nonpoint source pollution. These problems are not immediately noticeable, like an oilspill or massive fish kill. Rather, they take place over years, slowly choking the lake to a point where more resources and effort are needed just to keep the lake from deteriorating further.

This act that passed today authorizes specific activities for the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of the Interior. These agencies will work together with State government, local communities, academic institutions, and public interest groups in pollution research, prevention, management, and control.

In its present form, the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act, is incorporated into the same legislative package with not only the Great Lakes, but also with the Chesapeake Bay and Long Island Sound. This approach is entirely appropriate. These are all large, highly significant natural resources. The waters of all of them have been marred by pollution and wastes. Most important, all of them, through timely local, State, and national intervention, are on their way back to better ecological health.

Senator JEFFORDS, who has worked so hard to assure protection of Lake Champlain, has a few words on the Environmental Protection Agency's role in implementing this act. But before he begins I would like to take a few moments to expand on provisions in the Committee on Environment and Public Works' report on this bill, regarding the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior.

The Lake Champlain Special Designation Act designates the lake as a special project area under the Agriculture Conservation Program. While we are pleased by the committee's work to provide special attention to the basin as a whole, we would like to be sure that current projects conducted by the Department of Agriculture which have proven to be successful in reducing phosphorus and nonpoint source pollution are continued.

In order to expand monitoring efforts within the basin, we believe the Secretary of Agriculture should develop a comprehensive monitoring and evaluation network for all major drainage within the basin. Whenever practical, monitoring and associated research shall be developed and conducted jointly with existing efforts in the basin.

The Lake Champlain Special Designation Act also provides for Department of the Interior programs. Although the U.S. Geological Survey and Fish and Wildlife Service have limited new authorities, we believe a much greater effort is needed under existing law.

The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the heads of the water resources divisions, should develop an integrated geographic information system [GIS] for the basin. Whenever practical, monitoring and associated research should be developed and conducted jointly with extension efforts within the basin.

Lake Champlain played an essential role in the War of Independence and then in the War of 1812. The lake and its basin hold important regional and national significance. Within this historical archeological context, the Department of the Interior plays an important role in protecting cultural resources. The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the National Park Service, is encouraged to consult with the management conference in carrying out historic preservation and natural landmark programs within the basin. Of special interest is the survey and inventory of lakeshore and underwater historical and archeological sites.

In order to improve and maintain the health of wildlife and fishery resources within the basin, the Fish and Wildlife Service should expand its efforts there. Special attention should be given to threatened and endangered species and their habitats, and to migratory species. Recognizing that aquatic nuisance species are causing great damage to the fishery resources in the basin, the Secretary of the Interior is given authority to conduct lamprey control activities, including the application of lampricides in the basin, after completion of an environmental impact statement. The Secretary should also use, as appropriate, equipment purchased with funds provided through the Great Lakes equipment purchased with funds provided through the Great Lakes Fishery Commission.

We also note that appropriated funds for the Department of the Interior should be judiciously distributed between the Fish and Wildlife Service and Geological Survey based on their annual needs and the priorities of the management conference.

Mr. President, Senator JEFFORDS and I will be working to ensure that the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act remains in this bill through its upcoming consideration by the House. The fate of the lake hangs in the balance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are their amendments to the substitute.

AMENDMENT NO. 3021 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3020

(Purpose: To create a management conference for the restoration of Onondaga Lake)

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MOYNIHAN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], for Mr. MOYNIHAN, proposes an amendment numbered 3021 to amendment No. 3020.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following:

(a) The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Governor of the State of New York, acting jointly, shall convene a management conference for the restoration, conservation, and management of Onondaga Lake. The purpose of this management conference shall include but not be limited to—

(1) the development, within a two year period following the date of the enactment of this Act, of a comprehensive restoration, conservation, and management plan for Onondaga Lake that recommends priority corrective actions and compliance schedules for the cleanup of such Lake; and

(2) the coordination of the implementation of such plan by the State of New York, the United States Army Corps of Engineers, the Environmental Protection Agency and all local agencies, governments, and other groups participating in such management conference.

(b)(1) The members of the management conference convened pursuant to subsection (a) shall include, at a minimum, the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Governor of the State of New York, and representatives of—

(A) the Attorney General of the State of New York;

(B) Onondaga County, New York; and

(C) The City of Syracuse, New York.

(2) Any member of the management conference may designate a representative to attend meetings of the management conference and otherwise represent such member on the management conference.

(3) The management conference shall have ex officio members which shall include, at a minimum—

(A) the United States Senators from the State of New York; and

(B) the member(s) of the United States House of Representatives within whose congressional district(s) lies Onondaga Lake.

(4) The management conference shall have standing committees which shall include, at a minimum—

(A) a Citizens Advisory Committee; and

(B) a Technical Review Committee.

(c)(1) Not later than 120 days after the completion of the plan developed pursuant to subsection (a), and after providing for public review and comment, the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall approve such plan if such plan meets the requirements of this section, and if the Governor of the State of New York concurs in such approval.

(2) Upon approval of the plan under this subsection, such plan shall be implemented.

(d)(1) The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency are authorized to make grants to the State of New York to perform activities authorized under this section or to contract for such performance, provided that such grants shall not exceed 70 percent of the costs of such activities and that the non-federal share of such costs are provided from non-federal sources. Administrative services for the development and implementation of the plan approved pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided by a not-for-profit corporation established for the purpose of assisting with the planning and coordination of the clean up of Onondaga Lake.

(2) To carry out this section, the Governor of the State of New York may, using funds provided pursuant to paragraph (1), make grants for—

(A) research, surveys, administrative services and studies approved by the management conference as necessary for the development of the plan under this section;

(B) other activities including administrative services that are approved by the management conference and are necessary to implement the plan approved by the management conference pursuant to subsection (a); and

(C) gathering data and retaining expert consultants in support of litigation undertaken by the State of New York to compel clean up or obtain clean up and damage costs from parties responsible for the pollution of Onondaga Lake, including administrative services.

(3) In-kind payments shall qualify for the purpose of meeting the total non-federal matching requirements of this subsection.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

(f) Grants made under this section are not intended to relieve any person who would otherwise be liable under federal or State law for damages, response costs, natural resource damages, restitution, equitable relief or any other relief, from liability for such relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3021) was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended.

The amendment (No. 3020), as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is considered read a third time and passed.

So the bill (H.R. 4323), as amended, was passed.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

USE OF A CERTAIN PARCEL OF LAND FOR A CHILD CARE CENTER

Mr. FORD. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 969, H.R. 3888, a bill to allow a certain parcel of land in Rockingham County, VA, to be used for a child care center.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3888) to allow a certain parcel of land in Rockingham County, Virginia, to be used for a child care center.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no amendment to be proposed, without objection, the bill is considered read a third time and passed.

So the bill (H.R. 3888) was passed.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INCORPORATION OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITY AMENDMENT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 5749 regarding American University now at the desk.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

BEL AIR VOLUNTEER FIRE CO. CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, my fellow coleagues, I rise today so that I may recognize the Bel Air Volunteer Fire Co. which celebrates its 100th anniversary on September 15 this year. I had the honor and privilege of attending the centennial celebrations which marked an important week in the history of the fire company and the town of Bel Air.

Established in 1890, the Bel Air Volunteer Fire Co. has served the town of Bel Air and surrounding communities with a commitment to the needs of their fellow man. I am truly touched by the sense of pride and responsibility toward the community that is exhibited by the men and women who volunteer their time and energies to the fire company. Through protecting life and property they have given of themselves so that others may benefit.

Given the dangers and demands of firefighting, one would think that many might shy away from such work. Yet one cannot help but be impressed by the spirited and professional attitude with which these individuals approach their work. Stories of firefighters being hit with falling walls and ceilings, holes in floors, sweltering summer heat complemented by 80 pounds of equipment and fire coats so covered in ice that they could not be removed without first chipping away the ice has not discouraged the willingness of these special men and women.

The town of Bel Air as well as the entire Nation has changed radically since 1890. Although Bel Air primarily is surrounded by rural countryside, what was once a quite sleepy little town has experienced a recent surge in population and development that has placed new demands on the fire company. In addition, dramatic advances in technology have meant that firefighters also must keep pace with the increasingly technological society in which we live.

Life-saving equipment at the scene of an accident at one time may have been a crow bar and sledge hammer. Today, they are replaced by powerful cutting and spreading tools that quickly can extract an injured person from a car, yet demand a skilled and knowledgeable operator. I always am impressed by the amount of equipment and techniques which emergency personnel must master and the life or death situations under which they must operate. We indeed owe a great debt to these men and women who under the most stressful and dangerous situations perform heroic tasks on a daily basis.

To enter a burning dwelling is something which few of us can say we ever have experienced nor hope to. However, these individuals stand at the ready every hour of every day to be called upon should they be needed. We are truly blessed in this Nation to have the skill and knowledge of countless volunteer fire companies which provide emergency services to our communities.

Having the opportunity to join in the centennial celebration was an honor for me. I cannot stress enough the selfless and giving attitude of these fine men and women. I sincerely enjoy their comradeship and outstanding devotion to their work. Their work and contribution to our community, State, and country deserves the utmost recognition and is truly commendable. Through giving of themselves, they not only have worked for the betterment of their fellow man and the town of Bel Air, but they also have made this a better Nation as well. The members of the Bel Air Volunteer Fire Co. recognize the profound affect their work has on the community and derive a distinctive satisfaction from giving to society.

Although I wish not to recognize one particular person, for the true focus of my salute is to the company on its 100th anniversary, I do feel compelled to use for the purpose of example the name of a senior member, Millard Purcell. Mr. Purcell personifies the attitude and commitment shared by all the members. A former chief, Mr. Purcell; has served the company for half a century. At age 75, he still serves the company rather than retiring and, again does so with the unmatched commitment and dedication shared by all the members.

I ask how many individuals do you know who demonstrate such remarkable characteristics? How many individuals do you know who opt for continued work and service rather than retiring? As we are all aware, it is far better to give than receive. The members of the Bel Air Volunter Fire Co. serve as shining examples of this principle for I contend that such loyalty and affection for one's work only can come from the heartfelt satisfaction of helping someone in his/her time of need.

Mr. Speaker, fellow colleagues, it is with a deep respect and admiration for the work of the Bel Air Volunteer Fire Co. that I extend congratulations on its 100th anniversary. We are forever in debt to volunteer fire companies across our great Nation. Their hard work never shall go unnoticed. May God bless them and protect them in all that they do.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE HENRY J. BRODERICK UPON HIS RETIREMENT AFTER 20 YEARS AS A MARIN SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and ask my colleagues to join me in honoring a fine jurist on the occasion of his retirement.

Henry J. Broderick, is retiring after 20 years of distinguished service as a superior court judge in Marin County. Since Judge Broderick's appointment in 1970, he has enjoyed a well-earned reputation for toughness, fairness, and intellectual rigor.

The hundreds of individuals who have appeared before Judge Broderick seeking justice over the past two decades have had good reason to be impressed by his dedication to the highest principles of his profession. Hundreds of attorneys have had the privilege of appearing before a jurist who adhered to the most demanding standards of preparedness and professionalism.

I wish Judge Broderick the best in his retirement, and I add my voice to the chorus of congratulations.

GOOD LUCK TO DR. NANCY SPAETH

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Nancy Spaeth, the principal of Castro Valley High School in California's Ninth Congressional District. Dr. Spaeth is leaving the Castro Valley Unified School District after 10 years of dedicated service to take a new position as associate superintendent for curriculum and instruction with the Berkeley School District.

Dr. Spaeth began her career with the Castro Valley Unified School District in 1980 and became principal of Castro Valley High School in 1982. Under her leadership, Castro Valley High School became only one of 22 schools nationwide to be selected twice by the U.S. Department of Education as a national exemplary school, once in 1985 and again in 1989. Castro Valley High was also designated as a California Distinguished School in 1988.

Dr. Spaeth has been an outstanding principal. She has worked to involve the community in the life of the school and has made use of community resources for students. She has also worked to improve the educational program through teacher evaluation and an emphasis on cooperative learning, critical thinking, and problem solving. Her administrative style of seeking input and sharing decisionmaking has contributed to a positive student climate.

This year, Dr. Spaeth was selected as California's Outstanding Principal through the In Honor of Excellence Program which is sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals. She was also the recipient of the Castro Valley School District's Larry J. Goodman Education Service Award for the 1985–86 school year. She has also been active in the Association of California School Administrators by helping plan regional conferences and participating as a panelist at forums of this organization. In 1986, she was the Castro Valley Unified School District Administrators' Association's nominee for the ACSA's Administrator of the Year Award.

Mr. Speaker, although Dr. Spaeth will be sorely missed, I wish her much happiness and success in her new position. Our loss is the Berkeley School District's gain.

W. SHERMAN DOEBLER RECEIVES PSACC MEMBER OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention today the work of Union County Commissioner W. Sherman Doebler as he has been named PSACC Member of the Year by the Pennsylvania State Association of County Commissioners.

Commissioner Doebler received this award for his outstanding leadership and active involvement in the Union County government, and for his superior role in local and regional development activities.

Doebler is serving his fourth term as a Union County Commissioner; he was first elected in 1976. Since then, he has held the position of chairman for 12 of his 14 years in office. In this capacity, Doebler was instrumental toward the installation of the first electronic voting system used in Pennsylvania. Another first for Union County under Doebler's leadership as commissioner was the implementation of the regional emergency communications system.

Doebler has committed much of his time to various programs and activities for the State association. He has worked on the committee for the Pennsylvania Environmental Insurance Pool for over 3 years in an effort to provide extensive environmental liability insurance coverage for counties. He has also served on the Pennsylvania Counties Risk Pool Board of Directors for nearly 4 years. This agency will enable Union County residents to see a significant 4 percent reduction in insurance costs, while maintaining the broad range of insurance coverage available to them.

PSACC's award means that Doebler's constant dedication and service has benefited residents of Union County, as well as outlying areas. They are being offered outstanding services through Commissioner Doebler's quick response and appropriate guidance to problems they may encounter.

Doebler's commitment to the community proves his devotion to them, and inevitably proves he is well-deserving of this honor.

CONGRATULATING THE DOWNTOWN ROTARY CLUB ON THEIR 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BILL SARPALIUS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. SARPAULIUS. Mr. Speaker, the Downtown Rotary Club of Wichita Falls is celebrating their 75th anniversary on October 18, 1990. The Wichita Falls Rotary Club started in 1915 as an intregal part of Rotary International which benefits people worldwide through a number of service projects. The Rotary's motto—Service Above Self—is an example for all people of every nation to follow. The Wichita Falls Rotary's commitment to service. The Rotary Club members first went to bat for the boys is as strong as ever. Since its humble beginnings in the old city hall on Ohio Street, the Wichita Falls Boys Clubs now boast five club buildings and serves over 4,000 boys each year. Much of the success of the boys clubs can be contributed to the commitment of rotary members.

In 1959 the Rotary Club helped sponsor a family that fled Hungary. Andy Chagoly, now a dentist in Wichita Falls, said if it were not for the Rotary Club, he would not be here now. He and his family escaped from Hungary on Christmas Day 1956 and the Rotary Club paid their way to the United States.

Also in 1959, the late Lt. Col. Floyd Taylor convinced fellow Rotarians here to "adopt" a squadron of airmen. Today, almost every community which boasts of a military base has a squadron adoption program, an effort that had its beginnings in Wichita Falls. In three decades since the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls followed the urgings of one of its past presidents and adopted the first squadron at Sheppard Air Force Base, the program has become one of the best tools available for good relations between military installations and host communities.

Without the financial help of the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls, hundreds of local students would find paying for college a little bit more difficult. Each year, the Rotary Club provides financial aid to Midwestern State University students in the form of internships, scholarships, and short-term low interest loans. Local high school students receive awards for annual speech and essay contests.

The Rotary Club's current endeavor is the flag project. For a nominal fee the Rotary Club will place an American flag in a person's front yard on six designated U.S. holidays. This fine example of patriotism is expected to be seen on 1,000 lawns in Wichita Falls thanks to the efforts of the Downtown Rotary Club.

Not only is the club's interest of a community perspective, the Downtown Rotary Club has a record of international service. By 1996, Rotarians hope to immunize every child in the world for polio and other diseases that threaten our youth. The Wichita Falls club has pledged $21,000 over the next 3 years to assist in this disease fighting program.

Mr. Speaker, the accomplishments of the Wichita Falls Downtown Rotary Club are too numerous for me to mention today. Their involvement in community, county, State, National, and international endeavors is example of their motto—service above self. However, the most essential element to the success of the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls is its membership. Their spirit of enthusiasm is evident in their work. With approximately 200 members, the Downtown Rotary Club serves Wichita Falls as the largest civic club. Their membership is respected—not only for each member's personal involvement in service projects—but for the club's attitude of team accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker I ask my fellow Members to join me today in congratulating the Downtown Rotary Club of Wichita Falls on their 75th anniversary. We commend them for a job well done and wish them well as they continue to better our world by—service above self.

LSC/GAO REPORT

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues the findings of a recent GAO study of Federal Legal Services attorneys' handling of migrant farmworker disputes with agricultural producers. The report clearly shows a lack of accountability for the expenditure of Federal tax dollars. This is entirely unacceptable for a program in which $320 million was appropriated last year, a program that has not been authorized for over 10 years.

Of the eight questions we asked, GAO was unable to answer, even partially, well over half. Why? Because records were incomplete and Legal Services grantees would not allow GAO access to the program records. Here is an example of what GAO was up against—quoting from the report:

> Because we did not have access to account records, we were unable to verify that the grantees had properly implemented these procedures or that the procedures provided adequate controls over the accounts, * * *.

This is not a way to "run a railroad," much less a $320 million Government-sponsored program. Representative MCCOLLUM and I plan to offer an amendment to the Commerce/Justice/State appropriations conference report which will address the problems identified in the GAO report, make Legal Services accountable to the American people and help it to provide the much-needed services Congress intended it to provide.

ED AND DOROTHY BELTZ CELEBRATE 60TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay a special tribute to my good friends Dorothy and Ed Beltz of Ellwood City, PA, who are celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary on October 30, 1990.

Dorothy and Ed are no ordinary couple. They met each other and have lived and worked in the western Pennsylvania area of New Castle, PA all of their lives. Their lives have been full as they have actively participated in the endeavors of their children, Bonnie, Bill, Charlotte, Harold, and David. These 5 have given in return, 11 grandchildren, and those grandchildren have enhanced Dorothy and Ed's lives by giving them 12 great grandchildren.

This couple has worked long and hard to support and encourage each member of their family circle to survive the joys and sorrows of life. At a time when they should have been enjoying retirement from their business enterprises—restaurant ownership, schoolbus contracting, and management of school food service—they have assisted in the rehabilitation of their beloved daughter-in-law who has courageously learned to live with paralysis as a result of a stroke, and they have instilled strength and faith to three of their lovely grandchildren who are afflicted with juvenile diabetes.

No adversity has been too great for them as they have survived the losses of their eldest and youngest sons. All of the challenges of their lives have simply made them stronger and more faithful to their ultimate goal of doing good for others.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity on the floor of this House of Representatives to offer my heartiest congratulations to two very fine people who have weathered all the adversities of life with an enthusiasm which cannot be diminished. They continue at their ages—Ed has just recently celebrated his 80th birthday and Dorothy her 76th—to serve their church as officers, they enjoy traveling, square dancing, golfing, Masonic organizational activities and continue to work tirelessly to bring happiness and comfort to their family and friends who need their attention and support.

I ask the Members of the U.S. House of Representatives to join with me in extending congratulations and best wishes to Dorothy and Ed on their 60th wedding anniversary. May this lovely couple enjoy life to its fullest and every day of the future and may all the good deeds they have done for others be returned to them fourfold.

THE DEFICIT REDUCTION PACKAGE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, October 10, 1990, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE DEFICIT REDUCTION PACKAGE

After months of difficult and sometimes bitter deficit reduction negotiations between the President and Congressional leaders, the House last week considered, but rejected, the negotiated package. The largest deficit reduction package ever, it called for cutting the deficit $40 billion in 1991 and $500 billion over a five-year period. It had two dollars in spending cuts for every dollar of tax increases. While far from my ideal package, I felt it was a positive step to help us get our fiscal house in order.

THE NEED FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

The federal budget deficit is our most pressing economic problem; it must come down. With the economy on the brink of recession, deficit reduction is urgently needed to allow lower interest rates to restore health to the economy. For the longer term, deficit reduction is the only sure and proven way for the federal government to increase national savings and thereby strengthen investment and productivity.

The deficit has kept us from addressing important domestic needs, and has led to budgetary games that cost us dearly in terms of public trust. Failure to solve the deficit problem would lead to a lower standard of living in the long run and reduced American influence in the world. No one can believe that this country should allow $300-billion deficits to continue.

The package went after obvious targets. On the spending side, it recognized that the Soviet threat has lessened and that Medicare costs—expected to double over the next five years—should be restrained. Although the excise tax increases were controversial, higher prices for cigarettes and alcohol may discourage younger Americans from smoking and drinking, and the gasoline tax would reduce our consumption of foreign oil. The package removed Social Security from the budget and avoided any cost-of-living-adjustment freezes or taxes on Social Security benefits.

REASONS FOR THE PACKAGE

Although I disagreed with many aspects of the package, I voted for it for several reasons. First, and most importantly, the alternative is fiscal chaos. Failure to pass a package would mean the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law would trigger large across-the-board spending cuts, shutting down many parts of government and curtailing all kinds of essential services, from meat inspection to mail delivery to air traffic control. While the package would have reduced the 1991 deficit by $40 billion, the Gramm-Rudman cuts would wring out more than $100 billion. Cuts that large would be disastrous, almost certainly pushing into recession an economy already weakened by the shock of increased oil prices and problems in the financial system.

Second, on the whole it was a credible deficit reduction effort. Over the past decade, we have lost the public trust as budget plan after budget plan proved to be a charade. With a few exceptions, this package relied on concrete steps taken now, not accounting gimmicks or vague plans for the future. The package contained new enforcement mechanisms to ensure that most of the savings would materialize and grow into the coming years.

Third, the package would have allowed a drop in interest rates which would help bolster economic growth in the economy. The Federal Reserve Chairman has said that he will move to reduce interest rates if a credible budget package is enacted. That will help to offset some of the effects of tax increases and spending cuts; in particular, homeowners with adjustable rate mortgages and those buying homes will benefit. It will also increase business investment and productivity, and lengthen our nation's current short-term planning horizon.

Fourth, the size and the timing of the projected deficit reduction was about right. The package had a little of this and a little of that—a mix of excise taxes, user fees, limits on income tax deductibility, and cuts in defense spending and entitlements. I felt that the $40-billion reduction target for next year was reasonable. Any less and the budget deal would lack credibility; any more and it might slow an already sluggish economy. Because the deficit reduction in the package was real, the savings would grow, taking a larger bite out of the deficit in future years.

DRAWBACKS OF THE PACKAGE

The package was certainly not my ideal budget plan. Too much of the burden would be shouldered by the middle class, in excise taxes and user fees. The Medicare cuts were deeper than I would prefer, and could be a burden on low- and middle-income persons. The package would have increased somewhat the tax burden on the wealthy—through limiting their itemized deductions, taxing their luxury items, and raising the cap of their Medicare payroll taxes. Yet the overall result of the package was that moderate-income taxpayers would be hit harder than the most well off. My preference would be to place more of the burden on those most able to bear it.

Although the deficit cuts in the package were real, the long-run economic assumptions underlying the package were still too optimistic. That meant the underlying deficit was much larger than indicated; so the result would be higher deficits than predicted and additional deficit reduction needed down the road.

LIMITED OPTIONS

Despite its drawbacks, the package was a long-overdue shift toward responsible fiscal policy. For years we have been stalemated because each Member wanted a lower deficit and had his own unique program to achieve it. But when the House took up the package, it was not a question of this one or some personal preference; no other feasible alternative was available. I felt that a "no" vote on this package could mean that the economy falters, the federal government stops, the markets fall, the deficit explodes, and the economy slips out of control.

It is easy to pick apart this package. The package was a result of divided government and a reflection of the election results. With neither party totally in charge of the government, neither got entirely what it wanted.

The package was better than no package and better than any feasible alternative. Yet the package had no study, no hearings, and was drafted by a handful of officials. That is not the way to govern.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CONTINUES TO LIVE UP TO VISION OF CECIL H. PARKER

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, Cecil H. Parker was a pioneer in the field of education. Through her passion, her patience, and her faith, she instilled a sense of pride and sparked a sense of curiosity in her students. She has been a role model for educators and students for many years.

Seven years ago, the Nathan Hale Elementary School in Mount Vernon, NY, was renamed and rededicated as the Cecil H. Parker Elementary School in her honor. She had taught there for almost 30 years. At the same time, Cecil H. Parker/Nathan Hale Elementary School graduates are selected to receive scholarships to continue their education. This scholarship program makes a higher education affordable to young people who would without this help not have been able to afford to go beyond high school.

Mr. Speaker, in Ms. Parker's vision, the teachers were the gardeners and the students the garden. In her vision, our schools would produce harvests of responsible, committed citizens. I wish to congratulate all of the Cecil H. Parker Elementary School family for their success in continuing Ms. Parker's tradition of educational excellence. Her legacy will be embodied in the accomplishments of those who are educated at this special institution. What she has done for education will long live as a tribute to the remarkable dedication of Ms. Cecil H. Parker.

PALESTINIAN-ISRAELI HOSTILITY MAKE HEADLINES

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, the Temple Mount confrontation in Jerusalem has brought Palestinian-Israeli hostility back into the headlines and has pushed Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait off the front pages, just as Saddam would want. It's clear to me that the Palestinian rock throwers deliberately provoked the incident to help Saddam Hussein link his invasion of Kuwait to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Barrels of stones were later found, indicating that the rock throwing incidents were apparently planned in advance.

Unfortunately, as usual, the international community has taken the bait. The United Nations Security Council passed a resolution condemning the Israeli security forces' handling of the situation, and not mentioning one word about the fact that peaceful Jewish worshippers at the Western Wall were initially bombarded with stones. Apparently no thought was given to possible Palestinian motivation for fomenting such a confrontation. Shamefully, the United States sponsored the resolution. It is apparent that President Bush is desperately trying to protect his alliances with the Arabs in Operation Desert Shield and he's using Israel as a sacrificial lamb.

While I deeply deplore the Palestinian deaths in Jerusalem, it must be understood that the stone throwers were the ones who provoked the incident. The PLO has endorsed Saddam Hussein and his power hungry designs, and the riot in Jerusalem was simply a calculated Palestinian move to advance Saddam's agenda. It is shameful and disgraceful that the President and the Secretary of State have made one-sided comments condemning Israel while turning a deaf ear to Palestinian provocation and calculation.

A SPEECH BY SECRETARY JACK KEMP

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, given the many arguments that have been made on the various budget proposals before Congress, I'd like to add one more.

In his recent address to the Aspen Institute, Housing and Urban Affairs Secretary Jack Kemp made a good point that we should not be tied to addressing persistent economic problems with the same old, failed solutions.

Following are the Secretary's remarks which I hope will be reviewed by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

SPEECH BY SECRETARY JACK KEMP

Thank you for that warm introduction. It's an honor to be part of such an outstanding program, focusing on the domestic and international challenges facing America today.

What an exciting time it is to be alive. President Bush has called it the Revolution of 1989, but perhaps it's just the Revolution of 1776 not yet brought to its ultimate completion.

But as in all revolutionary eras, Charles Dickens' statement still applies: it can be the best of times and the worst of times simultaneously. It is best of times to witness the triumph of liberal domestic values—small "l," small "d"—capturing the global zeitgeist. It is the worst of times when we see poverty, despair, homelessness, and hopelessness cripple the lives of too many people and far too many children living in America's inner cities.

Clearly we can't help the poor if the country itself becomes poorer. So for a few moments, I'd like to discuss the war against poverty in the context of the great debate now taking place on Capitol Hill over tax and budget policies.

One of the most hotly contested issues today involves the current budget talks between the White House and Congress. I believe that President Bush demonstrated great leadership in advocating a cut in the capital gains tax to 15% during the presidential election two years ago, and again in his State of the Union Address.

Clearly there are deep differences and divisions between Republicans and Democrats about the direction our national economic policy should take, and bitter debate over the vexing issue of the budget. I really believe President Bush deserves credit for being willing to consider every issue as a subject for negotiation and compromise in his relations with the Democratic Leadership in Congress, including putting the issue of taxes on the table. He has walked the last mile in his effort to come to some bipartisan agreement, and in fact has taken a lot of heat from people on both sides of the aisle.

It's no secret that our economy is facing a slowdown, and unemployment is on the rise. As President Bush's Secretary of HUD, I express the concerns of millions of low income Americans struggling to make a living and keep homes together in the inner cities of this country. We owe it to the poor to do everything in our power to maintain, and indeed, restore the growth momentum which has created over 21 million jobs during the past eight years and launched over 4 million new small businesses.

The good shepherd reminds us all that those who are blessed have an obligation to be a blessing to those left out or left behind.

It is the poorest of our citizens who suffer the most from the consequences of bad economic policies. They are the first to lose their jobs and homes, and the first to suffer from a credit crunch. Indeed, their problems are the most severe and distressing.

In the interests of both promoting economic growth and reaching a budget agreement that truly reduces the deficit, I would offer the suggestion that Congress consider the plan offered by the President: reducing the effective rate on capital gains taxes to 15% plus indexing, then in return, as the Democrats demand, raising the top marginal rate to 31% to put an end to the complaints of so-called "unfairness."

The American economy is sliding into a recession that may be long and deep if Congress does not soon agree to the growth initiative President Bush has endorsed. In the interests of furthering that effort, I would further urge Congress to consider suspending attempts to secure a five-year budget agreement and concentrate its energies toward securing a one-year budget agreement that limits or even freezes spending and cuts taxes, not raises them.

The ambitious effort to cut $500 billion in a five-year agreement began when the economy was stronger and there was no foreign policy challenge as we face in the Middle East today. In my view, it's not logical to adopt sharp tax increases in the face of such an uncertain future. The poorest and the weakest in our society are sure to be hurt the most, as they would be in any economic downturn.

This compromise would give the Democrats in Congress one last chance to prove that they are sincere when they say they are willing to help the President find a solution to this country's need for growth and budgetary stability. If the Democratic Leadership now rejects this fair and generous offer from the President, they will have shown their intent is not to help, but to obstruct.

Cutting the capital gains tax will unlock billions of dollars now tied up in existing assets, while indexing for inflation would reduce the confiscatory effective tax rates that can easily reach 75% on long-term assets, according to economist David Goldman. Those dollars will provide access to the seed capital which is the number one need of entrepreneurs seeking to start or expand an enterprise and put people to work.

Even economist Allen Sinai—never a strong proponent of tax cuts—has concluded that cutting the capital gains tax would raise federal revenue by $30—$40 billion between 1990 and 1995, increase GNP by almost 3% or over $150 billion, create 2.5 million new jobs, and boost business capital spending by 1.3%.

Contrary to the Democrats' hysterical claims, cutting the capital gains tax is not a boondoggle for the rich, but an incentive for small businessmen and women—especially in our inner cities and among minority entrepreneurs—who want the opportunity to become rich. Between 1977 and 1982, when the Steiger Amendment cut the capital gains tax from 49% to 28%, the number of black-owned businesses exploded by nearly 50%—one of the largest gains on record. We need to at least double the number of minority-owned businesses in the next few years, and it can't be done under the current capital gains tax laws.

Resorting to the politics of envy and class warfare—now masquerading as the so-called "fairness" issue—is an old trick which the Democrats mothballed during the 1980s, but have recently dusted off for the ongoing budget debate.

The premise here is that the Reagan-Bush tax cuts gave the wealthy a free ride in the 80s by shifting the burden onto middle and lower income families, and that there is growing resentment among these voters which can be exploited to the Democrats' political advantage. They are wrong on both counts.

According to recent IRS statistics, between 1981 and 1987, the tax burden on the top 1% of taxpayers shot up by nearly 40%; the top 5% pay a 23% greater share; and the top 10% of income earners saw their share jump by over 15%. Meanwhile, the lower half of income earners say their total tax burden fall by about 19%, measured as a share all taxes paid. (Source: syndicated columnist Warren Brookes, Washington Times, 10/12/90.)

And after visiting hundreds of distressed communities in cities across the Nation, I believe I am as qualified as any poll to discuss the mood of low income Americans. Let me tell you something, the new pseudo-populism being peddled by the Democrats won't sell in the inner city. Poor people don't want to revisit the failed zero-sum income redistribution policies, in fact, it is demeaning for Democrats to suggest that poor people believe that the only way they can get ahead is by tearing down the rich.

Low income families across America want the same thing we all want—to get a good job, to own a home, to start a business. They want the opportunity to pursue their hopes and dreams unencumbered by government tax and regulatory barriers; and the opportunity to escape the poverty trap perpetuated by the liberal-left policies of the last twenty-five years that reward welfare more than work and consumption more than saving.

But what I've found during my visits to inner city ghettoes and barrios is that our country is divided into two economies. Our mainstream economy is democratic capitalist, based on private property, and rewards entrepreneurship, saving, and investment.

But this inner city second economy is directly the opposite: it is government-directed, based on government ownership of property, and punishes entrepreneurship, risk-taking, saving, and investment. It is similar in many ways to Third World socialist economies, the kind which are being replaced by the entrepreneurial capitalist spirit so alive in Eastern Europe today, and even in Moscow.

President Bush has asked me to help eliminate this socialist second economy so that every American—especially the poor—can participate in the free enterprise system. We want everyone to have the chance to make the most of their God-given talents and abilities. Here are a few of the ideas that President Bush and I have proposed to launch a new free enterprise war on poverty.

First, we need the authority to designate distresses inner cities and rural communities as Enterprise Zones, with dramatic incentives to invite capital to invest in new entrepreneurial ventures that will create real private sector jobs. The most powerful incentive would be eliminating the capital gains tax in Enterprise Zones, both to attract more seed capital and to strengthen the link between effort and reward for entrepreneurs and risk-takers.

Second, we need to expand resident management in public housing, homeownership opportunities, and private property. Empowering low income residents with greater control over their neighborhoods and the opportunity to someday own their own home provides powerful incentives for families living in America's public housing communities.

The noted Washington Post columnist William Raspberry recently wrote (quote) "* * * when assets are present, people begin to think in terms of the asset. If a young mother owns her own home, she begins to pay attention to real estate values, property taxes, the cost of maintenance and so forth * * * it is the assets themselves that create this effect, as opposed to just educaional programs or exhortations toward better values."

Whether you call it resident ownership, urban homesteading, or putting assets into peoples' hands, the results are truly dramatic in altering rewards, changing behavior, and lowering poverty levels.

Third, we should increase and expand the availability of housing vouchers. Low income people should have greater choice and more freedom about where to live, and better access to affordable housing. They should be treated as independent consumers instead of perpetually dependent welfare recipients.

Fourth, tax reform is needed now to help remove more low income families from the tax rolls and dramatically increase the after-tax income of welfare mothers and jobless fathers who want to work. In 1948, a median-income family of four paid almost no income taxes, and only $30 a year in direct Social Security taxes. This year, the same family's tax burden would be over $6,000. To be as sensitive to families today as in 1948, the tax code would have to allow a personal exemption of at least $6,000 for children under 16.

Fifth, it is essential to expand the earned income tax credit and pass President Bush's Child Care tax credit to roll back the huge tax burden on low income families and unemployed parents.

Sixth, for homeless people, the Administration's new Shelter Plus Care plan will expand community-based mental health facilities, drug abuse treatment, job training, and day care. Shelter and support services are the key to helping homeless Americans re-enter the mainstream economy.

Seventh, to enhance education and opportunity, we should expand true choice and competition through magnet schools, education vouchers, tuition tax credits, and policies for choice in education like those being championed by State Representative Polly Williams in Wisconsin and Council Member Keith Butler in Detroit.

Eighth, Congress should pass President Bush's HOPE legislation (Homeownership and Opportunity for People Everywhere) which includes programs to allow families to use IRA's to help purchase their first home; an expanded low income housing tax credit; and a new initiative called Operation Bootstrap which links housing vouchers to strategies such as job training to help people become self-sufficient.

A budget agreement that includes a meaningful cut in the capital gains tax is the only way to keep the economy growing. President Bush's plan to cut the capital gains tax to 15% and index gains for inflation will stimulate economic growth by encouraging entrepreneurship and job creation.

It's time for the Democrats in Congress to put aside narrow and partisan political envy and help our economy grow for all Americans. The longer they hold the health of our economy hostage for political purposes, the larger the deficit will grow, and, the harder it will be to get our Nation moving again. I think it's time for 15/31 or fight.

A TRIBUTE TO LEROY REITZ

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a great American and public servant from my district, LeRoy Reitz, who is retiring next month as the circuit clerk of Monroe County, IL.

LeRoy has dedicated his life to serving the public with dedication, compassion, and excellence. He has worked in city, county, State, and Federal government during his long and distinguished career. In addition, LeRoy heard the call of his country and took up arms to defend her during World War II as a U.S. Marine, serving 38 months to defend his country and the freedom for which she stands.

As LeRoy prepares to turn over the circuit clerk's duties at the end of November, I think it's important to let everyone know what a fine person Monroe County is losing. Since he's been in the courthouse for the last 30 years I'm sure that fact is well known, but you just don't find people the quality of LeRoy Reitz every day.

As Circuit Clerk LeRoy has watched the comings and goings of the people in Monroe County from a unique perspective. The county has grown in population to over 21,000 now, and the caseload in the courthouse has expanded with all kinds of judicial business, large and small.

LeRoy has used one guiding principle during his time as clerk, and that is to treat each and every person with respect and dignity. Going to the courthouse or into a courtroom can be a very trying experience, but LeRoy has always worked to make people feel comfortable.

During his service LeRoy has kept his record as white as a sheet as he says, knowing how important it is for people to have faith and trust in their public officials.

When he retires LeRoy and his wife of 44 years, Jeanette, will do some traveling and visit family, and I know we can count on LeRoy to stay active in the Democratic Party. He's been a loyal and valued member of my party for a long time, and I know we can depend on him in the future.

In closing let me simply express my appreciation to LeRoy Reitz for all he has done for me and for his friends and neighbors in southern Illinois. His retirement is well deserved, and here's wishing him nothing but the best for years to come.

THE FUTURE OF AMERICAN POLICY IN THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, on August 2, Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein's army launched a well-planned military attack on its small neighbor, Kuwait. Within a matter of hours, Iraq had overrun and occupied Kuwait, and Iraqi forces began to mass on Kuwait's border with Saudi Arabia. Today Saddam Hussein continues to occupy Kuwait, to torture and kill Kuwaiti children, women and men and to hold as many as 850 American men and hundreds of other foreign men hostage. A reported 370,000 Iraqi soldiers remain stationed in Kuwait and southern Iraq, threatening Saudi Arabia with one of the largest standing armies in the world.

Responding to Iraq's threatening buildup along the Saudi Arabian border and to Saudi Arabia's urgent request for assistance in the face of this proximate threat, President Bush authorized the deployment of as many as 200,000 American military personnel to Saudi Arabia and the waters surrounding the Arabian Peninsula.

Military forces from 26 other nations, numbering over 100,000, have joined in the protection of Saudi Arabia and the enforcement of the United Nations-imposed economic land, sea and air blockade of Iraq. The United Nations Security Council has approved the blockade and has voted unanimously to allow military action in the enforcement of the blockade. I am very encouraged by the comity and coordination in the Security Council's deliberations on the crisis thus far. I would note in particular that the United States and the Soviet Union have cooperated in the Council's actions to an unprecedented degree, and the support of the Arab States and our allies has been most heartening. The United Nations is functioning well in this crisis as the forum in which Iraq's aggression must be addressed and, ultimately, settled, and as the unquestioned international guarantor of collective action in the event enforcement of its will is necessary.

I believe that this unified response was necessary to send Saddam Hussein the unmistakable message that his invasion of Kuwait was intolerable and that further aggression against Saudi Arabia is unacceptable to the world community. Saddam Hussein, having deliberately and successfully used the world's fifth-largest army and over 5,000 tanks to conquer Kuwait, only hesitated in his aggression when confronted by a strong and unified military force in Saudi Arabia.

Let us be very clear about the purpose of the U.S. deployment, however. American men and women are stationed in and around Saudi Arabia to deter an Iraqi attack on Saudi Arabia and to aid the enforcement of the United Nations-imposed economic sanctions against Iraq. Our Armed Forces are not in the region to attack Iraq, nor to provoke Iraq into attacking Saudi Arabia. It is not the will of the American people, nor is it the view of this Congressman, that American soldiers and sailors should engage Iraq's Armed Forces in war.

Sadly, some so-called experts in the administration say otherwise. In recent weeks, Mr. Speaker, we have heard increasingly confident and equally disturbing talk in our Nation's Capital about the inevitability of war with Iraq, the necessity of striking quickly in a window of opportunity. I find such comments greatly disturbing. Our men and women are not in the Middle East to die in a vain attempt to wrest Saddam Hussein for power. I want the President to hear, to see, to know that a war with Iraq will not be short, it will not be painless, and it will not have the support of America unless we are attacked deliberately and without provocation. To believe otherwise at this juncture is to engage in the kind of vainglory that cost thousands of young men's lives only 20 years ago. How quickly some forget. I hope that the President learned that tragic lesson when he was a Congressman during the Vietnam war. He must not forget it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to help the President avoid that mistake. Building on our actions to date, I would propose that the President take the following actions: first, undertake urgent diplomatic efforts to place all foreign and Saudi Armed Forces in the region under the command and the flag of the United Nations; second, consult with the congressional leadership and the leaders of the Foreign Affairs, Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees at every stage in the evolution of the situation and particularly during any decision-making process related to the commitment of troops to any form of hostilities; third, continue to seek a peaceful resolution of the situation; fourth, expedite the development of a national energy policy that encourages the development of alternative fuels and energy conservation; and fifth, continue to press our wealthy allies to contribute their fair share of the cost of the collective mobilization to the region.

UNITED NATIONS FORCE

Only under the aegis of the United Nations can the world and the Arab nations successfully enforce the blockade and force Iraq to abandon occupied Kuwait. Continued worldwide unanimity and cooperation are essential; the U.N. umbrella over military forces is critical to our durability in the face of time and, we must admit, likely political fissures.

ROLE OF THE CONGRESS

What is the role of Congress in this, the gravest crisis we have faced in over 20 years? Congress cannot sit idly by while the President acts freely to commit American military personnel to dangerous lands. We are rightly empowered by the Constitution and by the continuing mandate of the American people with the responsibility to weigh the decision to risk the lives of American soliders. I take that responsibility very seriously, and I know that most of my colleagues share that burden.

Mr. Speaker, I have cosigned a letter to you urging that you include in the provisions of the Resolution of Adjournment for the 101st Congress a clause that will allow you to reconvene the House of Representatives in the event that United States forces become involved in hostilities in the Persian Gulf region. Should the President propose to commit troops to hostilities in the Middle East, the Congress must be a part of that decision. The American people, the American system, the very vitality of our republic demand this at least.

SEEK A PEACEFUL RESOLUTION

I have also cosigned a joint House letter to the President, along with 32 of my colleagues, setting forth several very important tenents of a well-ground and legitimate policy in the gulf. The letter, originated by my good friend and distinguished colleague, Mr. DELLUMS, urges the President to seek a peaceful resolution of the crisis through negotiations. The letter also makes it abundantly clear to the President that Congress must be consulted—not informed, but consulted—before any decision to use force in the region is reached.

We must all now unify to urge that every effort be made to release all Americans in Iraq and Kuwait, that the legitimate Government of Kuwait be restored, and that the withdrawal of American forces be enabled at the earliest opportunity. To that end, I strongly support the initiative of U.N. President Javier Perez de Cuellar to explore mediation among Arab leaders and a resolution of the situation. The hope is that United Nation actions in combination with the enforced economic blockade of Iraq will force Saddam Hussein to realize the folly of his hostage-taking, his invasion and brutal occupation of Kuwait and his threatening posture toward Saudi Arabia.

DEVELOP AND NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

If the American people are to support this action, it is also critical that the President confront the Middle East crisis on a second front: our own economy. The second front should focus on reducing our dependence on oil from the Middle East. I have called upon President Bush to rededicate the Nation to a broad energy policy that encourage the development of alternative fuels and energy conservation. In my appeal to the President, I urge him to direct the Department of Energy to expedite the completion of its national energy strategy and present that proposal to the Congress for consideration the end of this session.

I will be introducing legislation to accomplish the same goals. The proposal should revive many of the energy development and conservation programs implemented during the Carter administration, most of which were allowed to lapse or were underfunded during the 1980's. Any forthcoming budget agreement should also address the urgent need for changes in energy policy.

The tragedy in this respect is that we forgot the lessons of the last energy crisis. An initiative now to relearn and reapply those lessons may be just as important in the long run as our military deployment in Saudi Arabia. The urgent enactment of a national energy policy would be very effective not only in bolstering the United States' energy supplies and in maintaining sanctions against Iraq, but also in developing a balanced stewardship of our resources for the future, encouraging a balancing of energy development with conservation.

Our national security is threatened not only by the military aggression of Iraq, but by our own national reliance upon oil from the Middle East. That dependence holds us hostage to any Middle East tyranny, undermines our national economy, and robs purchasing power from every American family. The United States must treat energy as a national security interest equal in importance to its military capabilities. We can no longer subject our economy to the strong inflationary pressures of oil price rises, and must not allow our national economic security interests to be held hostage by the Saddam Husseins of the world.

SHARE THE BURDEN

Finally, Mr. Speaker, believing that America cannot shoulder this burden alone, I have joined my colleagues in the Congress in calling on the President to elicit greater material and financial support from our allies to defray the costs of the United States mobilization. Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom, France, Italy and other comparatively wealthy allies and friendly nations share the United States' strong interest in stability in the Middle East. Indeed, Japan and Germany are far more dependent upon oil from the Persian Gulf, and the stability of the region, than is the United States. Let us ensure that the burden of this effort falls in proportion to the needs and abilities of each participating nation.

Mr. Speaker, at every critical juncture in its history, America has risen to the challenge when the voice of its citizenry has spoken loudly and clearly. I call upon the President and Congress to take heed of our friends' and neighbors' counsel; I call upon our President not to arrogate to himself the right to place American lives at risk, and I would urge our own congressional leadership to exercise our rightful, constitutional authority to share in that awesome responsibility.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a giant of the labor movement, John F. "Jack" Henning. For over 50 years Jack has played a pivotal and unique role in the development and protection of labor in San Francisco, in California, and indeed the Nation.

Jack was born on November 22, 1915. Since 1949, he has been a member of the California Labor Federation, AFL-CIO. This long and illustrious career with the California Labor Federation was interrupted only by public service at the highest levels. From 1959 to 1962, under Gov. Pat Brown, he served as the director of the California State Department of Industrial Relations. Under the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, Jack rose to national prominence through his position as Under Secretary for the U.S. Department of Labor. In 1967 to 1969, Jack served as the U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand.

In 1970, Jack returned to California and was elected as executive secretary-treasurer for the California Labor Federation, a position he has held to this day. Jack's commitment to public service continued unabated, however, through service on numerous boards and commissions in San Francisco and California, including serving as a regent for the prestigious University of California system from 1977 to 1989.

On October 19, 1990, Jack will be honored with the "People's Award" for excellence in public service. Sponsored by Old St. Mary's Housing Committee, the "People's Award" is dedicated to recognizing those individuals from the community who seek to serve the public good with integrity and principles.

Mr. Speaker, Jack Henning's leadership, hard work, and compassion have earned him the respect and love of those who know him well, not only in labor, housing, and education but in all areas of public service.

EXCESS DEFENSE EQUIPMENT PROVIDED UNDER THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL AMENDMENT

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, on June 19, 1990, I submitted an extension of remarks for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (p. E2017) detailing the value of excess defense equipment provided under the Southern region amendment. The source of this information was the Defense Security Assistance Agency [DSAA]. Soon after its publication, I was contacted by DSAA and informed that the figures were inaccurate. On October 12, 1990, I received a correction from DSAA.

I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to this correction of the record by DSAA.

The last paragraph of the letter from DSAA mentions the enclosure of notification letters, which are retained in the files of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The text of the letter from DSAA follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Committee on Foreign Affairs, Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: With regard to your extension of remarks, entitled "Excess Defense Equipment Provided Under the Southern Regional Amendment," in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Tuesday, June 19, 1990, pg. E2017, we believe a figure cited in the remarks to be incorrect.

The figure in question is the dollar amount in the following sentence: "In fiscal year 1990, $3.447 billion in excess equipment was offered to eligible countries." According to our calculation of the acquisition value of excess defense articles (EDA) offered to Southern Region Amendment (SRA) countries during FY 90 at the time this information was printed in the RECORD, we obtain a figure of $388,287,166. Clearly, there is a considerable difference between the two. We are concerned that the perception that such a large amount of exess defense equipment was offered for transfer in a single year might be viewed in a negative light, particularly at a time of defense cutback.

We have attempted to reconstruct the figure cited, but have been unsuccessful in duplicating it. The highest figure that we have calculated for all excess defense equipment offered in FY 90 at the time your remarks were made in $409,448,955. This figure includes the aforementioned amount offered to SRA countries—$388,287,166. In addition, $21,161,789 in EDA was offered to drug countries under the International Narcotics Control Act (INCA) this year. These figures represent the original acquisition values of the equipment offered. The depreciated value, which more accurately reflects the value of the equipment at the time it is offered for transfer, is much lower, totaling $202,239,988 for the EDA offered to Southern Region countries. The depreciated value of the equipment offered under INCA is $1,603,175.

In addition to the excess equipment listing printed in your remarks, five additional offers of EDA to SRA countries have been notified to Congress. The total original acquisition value for these recent offers, one notified on 5 June 90, one on 27 July 90, and three on 19 Sept 90, is $340,557,070. The depreciated current values for the items contained in these notifications total $68,734,408.

We respectfully request that the information provided herein be used in correcting the erroneous figure printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. To this end, we are enclosing copies of the relevant Southern Regional Amendment EDA notifications. In addition, although it does not fall under the SRA heading that was the subject of your remarks, we are also enclosing the INCA EDA notification for the purpose of detailing the scope of all grant transfers during FY 90. Your consideration in this matter is appreciated.

Sincerely,

TEDDY G. ALLEN,
Lieutenant General, USA, Director.

WESTCHESTER ALZHEIMER'S ASSOCIATION HONORS MARY ALICE UGHETTA

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join the Westchester Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association in honoring Mary Alice Ughetta for her dedication and commitment to the Westchester County community.

As vice president and board member of the Westchester Alzheimer's Association, Mary Alice Ughetta brought to the organization hard work, dedication, compassion, and real life experience. When her husband, Henry, developed Alzheimer's disease, she and her children cared for him with devotion and love. Mary Alice Ughetta knows firsthand the importance of a respite program to relieve the burden of family caregivers.

In addition to her work with the Alzheimer's association, Mary Alice Ughetta has served on the boards of White Plains Hospital Auxiliary, the United Way, the Neuberger Museum, the Youth Counseling League, and the Scarsdale Historical Society. Through all of her community work, she has shown an unselfish commitment to reaching out to help others.

Mr. Speaker, Alzheimer's disease afflicts more and more Americans every day. Those suffering with the disease must rely on others to care for them. Mary Alice Ughetta has dealt with the difficulties of caring for an Alzheimer patient in her own family, and has committed herself to sharing her experiences with residents of Westchester County. I am truly grateful for all that she has done, as I know others in Westchester have benefited greatly from her unselfishness. I congratulate her for all of her outstanding contributions.

PHILIP MAZZEI

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, as the original author of House Joint Resolution 631, legislation designating October 1990 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month," I am rising today to bring to your attention the importance a great Italian has played in American History.

Philip Mazzei was born at Poggio-a-Caiano, Italy. Throughout his life, Mazzei held various professions including that of a physician, merchant, horticulturist, agent of Virginia in Europe during the American Revolution, and author.

In 1773, Mazzei sailed for Virginia to introduce the culture of grapes, olives, and other such fruits as might be expected to flourish there. This was not a success, mainly on account of the American Revolution, to which Mazzei devoted most of his time and energy. He was an ardent supporter of both religious and political freedom in Virginia.

Philip Mazzei played a great part in framing the basis of the Government of the United States. Throughout the years he spent in America, he carried on a large amount of correspondence with one of our Founding Fathers, Thomas Jefferson. He has also been credited with coining the Declaration of Independence phrase "all men are created equal."

On June 16, 1785, Mazzei sailed from New York for Europe. He published in Paris his "Recherches historiques et politiques surles Etats-Unis de l'Amerique septentrionale." Based in part on materials furnished by Jefferson, this was the most accurate work on America that had appeared in French.

In 1788, Mazzei was appointed "Intelligencer to the King of Poland," and in 1792, he went to Warsaw where he was a private adviser to Stanislas II.

In 1813 he completed his "Memorie della Vita e delle Pereqrinazioni del Fiorentino Filippo Mazzei." He died in Pisa and is buried there.

This extraordinarily versatile man lived in 20-odd cities of importance in the old and new worlds, was a naturalized citizen of Virginia, and later a naturalized Pole. He carried on an active correspondence with Madison, Jefferson, Thomas Adams, and other Virginians.

Mr. Speaker, this man is a great example of the many contributions Italians have brought to America. I am proud to honor him this month by authoring legislation that has designated October as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month."

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE HERRIN JUNIOR HIGH SOFTBALL TEAM

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute the achievements of the Herrin Junior High School's class "L" softball champions.

Herrin, IL, is a community in my district which is known for a lot of great things, not the least of which is its outstanding tradition of producing top-flight softball players. The young women who work their way through the system in place at Herrin are widely known for their skill, competitiveness, and sportsmanship. And I am one who believes that students learn a great deal from the experience of competing in sports at this level.

The Lady Red Devils recently won their fifth consecutive class "L" title in Illinois, and during that time they've posted a 70 to 3 record.

Mayor Ed Quaglia has proclaimed October 22 through October 28, 1990, as Herrin Junior High Girl's Softball Week. As the proclamation says, the team, coaches, faculty, and administration brought honor and acclaim to the city by their outstanding achievements, and have represented their school and city by demonstrating sportsmanship, character, and integrity.

I am honored to serve the city of Herrin, its fine citizens, and its legendary softball program in Congress.

I would like to enter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the names of the students and adults who have worked so hard for this success so they may receive the recognition due them.

Nicole Murray, Kimmy McNeal, Shandra Miller, Sarah Helleny, Joy Major, Rhonda Helvey, Amy Stuebe, Shelly Stuebe, Jamie Hayes, Laura Franklin, Shelli Stucker, Kelly Newman, Rae Liening, Casey Vinson, Cassey Lindsay, manager; Craig Baumgarte and Mark E. May, coaches.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY AMERICAN LEGION HONORS TWO

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join the Westchester American Legion in honoring Joseph Roma, former county commander, and Maura Ciraco, former president, of that fine organization. These two individuals have worked tirelessly on behalf of Westchester County veterans for many years.

Several weeks ago, Joseph Roma retired after 2 years as American Legion county commander. He is a World War II Army veteran and a lifelong resident of Yonkers. He holds theater of operations medals in the American and European theaters, as well as the Soldiers Medal for Valor. He was honorably discharged in 1945, and since that time has had a long and illustrious career serving the veterans of Westchester County.

Before becoming county commander, Joe served three terms as Westchester zone one commander. He is a 41 year member of the Charles N. Bajart Post American Legion, where he has held every elected position He was Westchester Catholic War Veterans commander. He has twice been elected chairman of the central committee of War Veterans in Yonkers, NY.

Maura Ciraco has been involved with veterans issues for many years. Her late husband, Vito Ciraco, was a life member of the American Legion, and she is a life member of the American Legion auxiliary. She has been a member of the Mamaroneck Post for 41 years, and she has served as a delegate to many veterans conventions over the years. She has spent many hours organizing shows and dances to entertain veterans at Montrose and Kingsbridge Hospitals, like she did with the U.S.O. in the Atlantic and Pacific theaters. Maura is the mother of 6 children—including 2 Vietnam veterans—the grandmother of 15, and the great grandmother of 8.

Mr. Speaker, Joe Roma and Maura Ciraco have clearly devoted their lives to Westchester County's veterans. They understand that those men and women who have fought for our country so valiantly deserve our respect, our recognition, and our deepest gratitude. I am grateful for this opportunity to join with the Westchester American Legion in recognizing Joe Roma and Maura Ciraco for all of their accomplishments.

THE BUDGET CRISIS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, October 17, 1990, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE BUDGET CRISIS

No one thought that it would be easy to win the approval of a $500 billion five year deficit reduction package which the President and congressional leaders had worked on for five months. But neither did anyone expect the House of Representatives to reject the proposal so resoundingly, by 254 votes to 179. What follows are some observations.

DIFFICULTY OF DEFICIT REDUCTION

One of the great puzzles is why reducing the deficit has been so difficult, especially when there is a consensus among Members of Congress that the deficit must come down. Several factors help explain this situation.

First, Americans have refused to admit the seriousness of the budget deficit as an insupportable drain on the economy and on the ability of government to fulfill its responsibilities. Americans have heard for a decade that we could cut taxes, increase revenues, and have it all; that there could be all gain with no pain. In fact, this country has been on a flight from fiscal responsibility for at least a decade.

Second, the budget deficit is a crisis that cannot be seen and whose long-term ill effects are very hard to identify and isolate. Any politican will tell you that it's hard to get people stirred up about budget deficits. President Bush referred to the deficit as a cancer gnawing away at the nation's health' economists have compared big deficits to having termites—you can't see them but they eat away at the structure of the house.

Third, deficit reduction causes short-term pain in return for less certain and longer term gains. It is simply impossible to bring about major reductions in the deficit without attacking many programs people like, including medicare. Cutting popular programs achieves big budget savings, but it also raises the hackles of certain groups. At the same time, the major benefits of deficit reduction—increased productivity and improved standard of living—are long-term and less tangible.

Fourth, politicians in a representative democracy have a hard time saying no to competing interests. Politicians are very much aware that Americans want incompatible things. They want guns and butter: lower taxes and better services, a cleaner environment and less regulation. The President and other politicians have failed to educate the American people to the steep cost of these programs. As a result, most Americans believe that the government can keep spending without having to raise taxes.

Fifth, a divided government has made budget negotiations exceedingly difficult. With the Republicans controlling the presidency and the Democrats controlling the Congress, no party can enforce its policy preferences and compromises have to be made. Meanwhile, party discipline—once a major factor in building consensus—continues to erode, and individual Members have preyed on the budget agreement for partisan or personal gain.

Sixth, the budget agreement created a storm of special interest objections. Many criticized certain tax increases in the package, without offering credible alternatives. Others, who have opposed tax increases in times of prosperity, argued that an economy in stagnation or recession should not face higher taxes either. Many complained that the tax increases fell heaviest on the middle class, while others fought very hard to protect upper income taxpayers from higher taxes.

Seventh, many Members were upset because they were excluded from the key budget decisions. Any budget agreement negotiated without the broad participation of the Members is bound to cause problems. This one certainly did. The summit short-circuited the normal legislative process, perhaps for good reasons, but the congressional leadership could not deliver the rank-and-file vote when an agreement was brought to the House floor.

Eighth, the timing of the budget agreement—only a month before the mid-term elections in November—made many Members of Congress nervous. There were plenty of faults in the agreement and Members of Congress did not miss the message from constituents who were overwhelmingly hostile to the agreement. Politicians love to make tough speeches but they don't like to make tough choices. The agreement required a tough choice.

OBSERVATIONS ONE OUTCOME

The defeat of the agreement was a stunning political defeat for the President and for congressional leaders. More fundamentally it raises questions about the American political system to deliver when faced with tough choices. Our failure to reach a viable budget agreement in a timely fashion shows weak political leadership in a time of real domestic duress. It shows a deep conflict over economic policy and a clash of fundamental values. It shows an electorate under great economic stress and pressure.

To our friends abroad the budget debacle only underscores their anxiety that the United States is facing a looming recession and is incapable of governing itself. Many of them think that deep structural problems in the economy and the financial sector simply are not being addressed by American officials. America's image as a haven of financial opportunity has been shaken and indeed in the past few months foreign investors have been taking money out of the U.S. markets.

OUTLOOK

At least for the next few days there will be continuing budgetary chaos in Washington. For all of the turmoil that the Congress has put itself through to produce a budget, the real struggle still lies ahead. Over the next several days nearly two dozen congressional committees will have to decide how to cut spending and raise taxes in order to reach the deficit reduction targets. The plan now under consideration, the new budget resolution, omits most of the means for achieving the laudable goals. It resolves little, buying two or three more weeks for congressional committees to work the specifics out.

Meanwhile our constituents continue to ask the relevant question: Why can't you Members of Congress govern? The turmoil over the budget will certainly multiply the anti-incumbent feeling in the country today. The biggest cost of all of this budget turmoil is the cost in voter cynicism. The reaction of most people to the complex budget maneuvering is simply one of anger and bitterness towards politicians.

BRADY BILL A MUST

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, during recent consideration of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1990, I spoke on the floor of the House to express my deep disappointment at the bill's failure to address the issue of a handgun waiting period. Amazingly enough, the only gun control amendment to the bill that was made in order was one that weakened the bill's provisions. That is an outrage.

I should like to share with my colleagues an editorial that appeared in the New York Daily News today arguing the urgent need for passage of the Brady bill. The message is clear. We cannot afford to wait any longer:

HOW MANY MORE?

There is only one effective response to the death of 8-year-old John Thomas Jones: (202) 255-5604. Dial it. Tell House Speaker Thomas Foley that another child has been cut down by random gunfire in New York City. Tell him you're mad as hell. Tell him to move two gun control measures to a floor vote. Now. Tell him to use all the power of his position to see that the bills are passed. Immediately.

For New Yorkers, these gun-control bills are imperative. The state's tough gun-control laws mean little if not backed up by equally tough federal laws.

One proposed law, the so-called Brady Bill, would mandate a seven-day waiting period before anyone could buy a handgun. For hunters and other pro-gun lobbyists, this should be a breeze. It's the kooks, the crooks and the convicts who will find this law puts a cramp in their shooting style. Good.

The second law would call for a three-year ban on the manufacture and sale of semi-automatic weapons that can easily be converted to automatic. Why such a law should bother hunters and other legitimate gun supporters—and why this bill should thus be in deep trouble in Congress—is a profound mystery. In dense urban areas, there is no legitimate purpose for assault weapons. Ask the family of little TT Jones. And seven other children caught in the crossfire. Any New York pols who vote against this bill will be held accountable.

The front-page headline in yesterday's Daily News said it all: "How Many Have to Die?" That's the question to put to Foley. It's (202) 255-5604. Dial it. Now.

MANVILLE APPRECIATION DAYS

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, October 19-20 has been designated "Manville Appreciation Days" in the Lompoc Valley.

The 2-day celebration will feature many activities including tours of the Manville mining operation for the general public; an arts and crafts show presented by the Lompoc Valley

Art Association; a street dance; several barbecues; displays of artifacts uncovered during mining operations in Miguelito Canyon; dedication of the giant mural on the north wall of the chamber of commerce building; planting of a tree in the city's Recognition Grove; special displays and programs at the Lompoc Museum; music by Lompoc school bands; and a civic luncheon among others.

The special event was dreamed up by an ad hoc committee of citizens who are cognizant and appreciative of the many contributions that Manville Corp. and its employees have made to the valley and its citizens over the many decades that the corporation has been mining diatomaceous earth here.

Almost any place you look in the community you will see the touch of Manville and its employees. The company has donated land for five city parks; made land available at its cost for employees' housing; assisted in the construction of the city swimming pool and the community hospital and helped to finance construction of the Lompoc Murals project. Manville's employees are major contributors to the United Way and other charity fundraisers and they participate in the community in hundreds of ways including teaching Sunday school, working with Scouts, coaching ball clubs, assisting youth groups, senior citizen groups and supportring the arts and cultural groups.

Manville employs approximately 600 persons. The corporation has mined diatomaceous earth in the valley since November 16, 1928. The first hospital in the valley was built at the plant in 1921. The corporation has donated land for municipal uses including: Floresta Park; Centennial Park; JM Little League Park; and 30 acres for Beattie Park.

Medical care was provided for workers and their families for a small monthly payment in the early days. The corporation made substantial contributions in the planning and financing of the Lompoc Hospital in 1943.

The corporation allowed and encouraged employees to participate in local civic affairs. Manville people have served as mayors, council members, school trustees, and at one time the city engineer was a Manville employee.

The JM enterprise was not a typical ordinary business but rather a unique enterprise in which enthusiasm, persistence, youth, and hard work—and some luck—all played a part.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the people of Lompoc are proud of Manville, and Manville is proud of the community. And it is my honor and privilege to extend to Manville, on behalf of the U.S. House of Representatives, commendations and thanks for its contributions to the valley, and our best wishes for continued prosperity and happiness in the "Valley of the Flowers."

TRIBUTE TO PAUL BELL

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, yesterday Paul W. Bell, superintendent of the Dade County Public Schools, the fourth largest school system in the country, died of heart failure. I want to join with all of Dade County in expressing to his wife, Barbara and to his children Karen, Miya, Steven, and Shari, my heartfelt sorrow and deepest sympathy for their loss.

From my days on the school board, I knew Paul Bell as a man dedicated to excellence in education. He was talented, committed, and compassionate.

A recent incident is typical of Paul Bell. Erin Tinsman, the granddaughter of Ruth Tinsman of my North Miami Beach staff, had to miss her graduation last spring and was readmitted to Miami Children's Hospital to carry on her 9-year battle against leukemia. She was not able to get her high school diploma with the rest of her class. When Paul found out about it, he arranged to present Erin's diploma personally. "I couldn't attend any graduations myself this spring," he said to Erin, referring to his own recuperation from a heart attack in May, "so I'll attend yours."

Paul was a great human resource, not only for education, but for our entire community. He touched and influenced for the better the lives of thousands of young people. The impact of his efforts will be felt long into the future. He leaves behind a legacy of which any person would be proud, and for which we are all grateful.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues portions of an article about Paul Bell from the Miami Herald.

[From the Miami Herald, Oct. 17, 1990]

SCHOOLS CHIEF PAUL BELL, 57, DIES OF HEART FAILURE

(By Charisse L. Grant and Arnold Markowitz)

Paul W. Bell, who rose from teacher to superintendent of the nation's fourth-largest school system during his 30-year career, died Tuesday of heart failure.

* * * * *

MASTER'S DEGREE

His rise to the top without a doctoral degree was a rarity for a big city school administrator. Bell's most advanced degree was a master's in elementary education. At School Board headquarters, where people are addressed as "Doctor" about as often as in a hospital, Bell was a rare "Mister." It was one of the few objections raised to his appointment last March, but Bell had been around the top for so long that once the voting logjam was broken, it was easy for every member of the board to accept him.

"These last seven months were his happiest and the most fulfilled time of his life. He felt he really gave the school system the direction that was important," Barbara Bell said in a prepared statement issued when her husband's death was announced.

"The job gave him a feeling of renewal. He loved it and leaves it with pride and no regrets. He would have done it no other way."

Bell grew up in Louisville, Ky., and attended the University of Louisville, majoring in political science and expecting to go to law school there. Along the way he worked one summer as a camp counselor, acquiring an interest in children at about the time his enthusiasm for a law career was ebbing. Instead of law, he earned his graduate degree in elementary education.

TEACHING INDIO CHILDREN

After he graduated, he married and moved to Guatemala, where he managed his father-in-law's coffee farm. While there, he tried to teach the local Indio children to read in Spanish, a skill he had not mastered himself. After two years, his father-in-law sold the farm. Bell moved to Guatemala City to teach in an American school, was divorced and came back to the United States nearly broke with two daughters, Karen and Miya, to look after.

That was in December 1959. By the following Feb. 1, he was at Miramar Elementary School on Northeast 19th Street in Miami, teaching English as a second language to children of Miami's new immigrants from Cuba. Another teacher there was Barbara Vozmer, who married Bell a year later. They had two children, Steven and Shari.

Paul Bell was a classroom teacher just two years before he was reassigned to train other teachers in bilingual education and to help write texts for the courses. He was in administration ever since—rising to assistant superintendent for instruction and curriculum, the post he held longest.

His responsibilities and salary were cut in a 1978 staff shuffle by then-superintendent Johnny L. Jones. It was a bad time for Bell, but he waited it out. When Jones was fired in 1980 and replaced by Leonard Britton, back up went Bell, first as assistant superintendent of administration and then as associate superintendent for education.

"I've only applied for two jobs in my life. One was as a teacher in Dade County schools. The other was as superintendent." he said in an interview in April.

COMPROMISE CHOICE

Last March, when the School Board could not decide who should lead the district in the 1990s, Bell began looking like a good compromise choice. He had, after all, 30 years in Dade public education under superintendents Hall, Edward L. Whigham, Jones, Britton and Fernandez.

More than that, School Board Vice Chairman Janet McAliley said when the 17th ballot finally settled things:

"He's been a driving force and the creative force behind Fernandez, Britton and Whigham, too. When there's a problem in a school, I go to him, and it's consistently dealt with immediately."

WESTCHESTER-PUTNAM AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM TO HONOR THREE

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, on October 28, the Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Program will honor three outstanding individuals: Mr. Bruce Bozeman, Ms. Merna Popper, and Mr. Bernard Doyle. Each of these individuals will be recognized for their commitment to affirmative action.

The Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Program has, since 1972, made affirmative action a reality for area residents. With leaders like Paul Redd, this program leads by example—an example of excellence. The three individuals who are being honored today represent the vision of the Affirmative Action Program in our community.

Mr. Bruce Bozeman will be honored with the Community Service Award. He is a lawyer who has given countless hours of legal and other services to the less fortunate. His compassion and dedication is inspiring and empowering. He has served as the acting director of both the Westchester Community Opportunity Program and the Port Chester Carver Center, and he has provided invaluable counsel in the establishment of numerous agencies including the Westchester Community Opportunity Program, the Greenburgh Neighborhood Health Center, and the Port Chester Carver Center.

Ms. Merna Popper will receive the Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Management Award for promoting the accomplishment of women. As the publisher of Women's News, Ms. Popper has served as a role model for women throughout the county. In addition to publishing Women's News, Ms. Popper produces and hosts "The Women's Line," a radio talk show, and "Women's News TV," an interview show on public access cable television. Her efforts have ensured that Westchester women know the accomplishments of other women and have been an invaluable source of information.

The Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Union Award will go to Mr. Bernard Doyle for increasing minority representation in the Teamsters Local 456, based in Elmsford, NY. Mr. Doyle is the local's secretary-treasurer, and because of his efforts over the years, the local now has a 40-percent minority membership. He joined the Teamsters at age 19, and he has held a number of elected offices over the last 20 years. He is an active member of the Westchester Affirmative Action Program.

Mr. Speaker, these three individuals are being honored for their outstanding contributions to the cause of equality and their work in behalf of opportunity. They serve as role models in our community, and I am proud to have this opportunity to join with the Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Program in honoring them for their accomplishments on behalf of our community. I know I speak for many when I say how grateful I am for their vision and dedication. These individuals are making a difference for many who are striving to succeed.

THE 66TH ANNUAL OBSERVANCE OF CO-OP MONTH

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to cooperative businesses on the 66th annual October observance of Co-op Month.

Cooperatives are a part of a self-help tradition as old as our Nation. Throughout our history, cooperatives have enabled people to meet common needs through group efforts. The first cooperative was organized in the United States when Benjamin Franklin formed the Philadelphia Contributorship for the Insurance of Homes from Loss of Fire—the oldest continuing cooperative in the country. Today, cooperatives continue to play a dynamic role in our economy and our heritage.

Nearly 60 million people are members of 40,000 U.S. cooperatives. These people have organized to provide themselves with goods and services in nearly every sector of our economy. Numerous cooperative associations throughout the United States provide industry-specific services, educational programs, and financial and other services to their members.

International cooperatives are also strongly united; 164 national cooperative organizations, representing 72 nations, belong to the International Cooperative Alliance—the apex organization of all national cooperative movements. The alliance aims to promote cooperative development and worldwide trade. It boasts an individual membership of almost 500 million people.

Currently, cooperatives are at the forefront of two major endeavors. Not only are they helping rural Americans with self-help efforts, but they are helping Eastern European countries make the transition from a controlled economy to a free market.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me now in recognizing the outstanding contributions that cooperatives across the Nation and the world are making daily. It is with great respect that I pay tribute to cooperatives and their endeavors to encourage a neighbor helping neighbor approach to business.

THE BUDGET AGREEMENT

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Congress and the American people understand the importance of cutting our Federal deficit. The question is who should bear the brunt of reducing this deficit? I believe that the wealthy must pay their fair share. The middle class has paid enough. Senior citizens have paid enough. Working class Americans have paid enough.

I voted against the budget agreement which came out of the budget summit because the middle class was being asked to pay too much. The wealthiest of Americans were not being asked to pay their fair share and, as a result, the bill was defeated in the House of Representatives. We should not be balancing our budget on the backs of the middle class, or on the backs of senior citizens. The Medicare cuts in the proposed budget summit agreement were ridiculous and harsh. The gasoline taxes and home heating fuel taxes were too great. At the same time, the wealthiest were given huge tax incentives and a good deal. This was wrong.

The President, unfortunately, seems determined to help his rich friends. He wants the middle class to pay more of the burden while the rich get away virtually scot-free. The Rostenkowski proposal in the House of Representatives puts the burden where it should be, mainly on the wealthy. It cuts the gasoline tax. It makes less cuts in Medicare. It eliminates the home heating fuel tax. It bursts the bubble and mandates that wealthy people pay at the same tax rate that the middle class does, not a lower rate as is the law now. It mandates a 10-percent surtax on people making $1 million or more a year. In short, it takes much of the burden off the middle class and puts it where it belongs, on those who can afford it.

For the past 10 years, the middle class in this country has received the short end of the stick. Where is the trickle down effect from supply side economics that was supposed to result from reducing taxes on the wealthy? It has certainly not reached the middle class American family, the people who continue to pay taxes faithfully, who work hard every day, who simply ask for some value for their tax dollar. Instead of benefiting all Americans, the trickle down went into flimsy real estate deals and the bank accounts of crooked savings and loan officers.

As a representative of the forgotten middle class, I say stop trying to balance the budget on the backs of working families and senior citizens. The middle class supports a fair tax system that would burst the tax bubble and at least tax the wealthy at the same rate as the middle class. We want to see Medicare remain affordable, and we do not want Social Security funds used to mask the Federal deficit. We want Social Security funds to be used for Social Security purposes only. We need an effective long-term health care program for senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, we must institute a tax system based on the ability to pay, not a system that continually squeezes the middle class.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS DEBATE

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague and friend, Congressman GUS HAWKINS recently ventured the rhetorical question, does "the President want a civil rights bill?" The answer is, GUS, you bet he does.

Contrary to what the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee would have you believe, the President and his administration have gone the extra mile to get a genuine civil rights bill. Unfortunately, as introduced, only mildly amended, and passed in both Houses, the Civil Rights Act of 1990 does not live up to its title. It's not a civil rights bill; it's a full employment for plaintiff attorneys bill. This is a sad state of affairs for all of us in Congress, and indeed, for America, when civil rights becomes a partisan issue.

Upon introduction of the Kennedy-Hawkins Civil Rights Act of 1990, it was clear to many of us in the House minority that the White House wanted to support the bill, if only they could. Unfortunately, the bill's flaws were too great. That the President is now in a position of having to veto the bill isn't because the White House became cagy or uncooperative. On the contrary, the administration tried to negotiate in good faith, and made clear early on what kind of a bill they could accept. Rather than pursue a course of negotiations similar to the Americans with Disabilities Act, the bill's authors chose to ignore all warnings. If this bill does not become law by the end of this Congress, the fault will rest squarely on their shoulders.

The President had four specific criteria for a civil rights bill which he would sign. First, he announced in May it could not be a quota bill. Second, it would have to give all individuals who believe their rights have been violated their day in court; and preserve the fundamental concept that an accused is innocent until proven guilty. Third, it would have to serve as a remedy to workplace harassment, but it should not bring about what he termed, a "lawyers' bonanza," encouraging litigation at the expense of conciliation. And, finally, it should place on Congress the same standard applicable to everyone else.

Rejecting the process used since the original Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Kennedy-Hawkins bill wants discrimination conflicts to be resolved, not through conciliation and compromise, but through confrontation, litigation, jury trials, and all that this includes. When one considers that the major case of this debate, Wards Cove, was filed 16 years ago—it is difficult to believe increased litigation, as opposed to conciliation, is to the benefit of any victim of discrimination.

Perhaps this legislation is the end result of today's Democratic Party becoming the tool of the Trial Lawyer's Association and their legislative agenda. Recent FEC reports disclose the trial lawyers' PAC has contributed $149,550 to the Democrats on Mr. HAWKINS' committee. At the same time, Republicans have received only $17,500. Maybe money doesn't talk, but the connection between this disparity in donations and a partisan civil rights bill premised on litigation and jury trials is, at a minimum, very troubling.

Let's understand, both the Democratic bill and the Republican alternative overturn five Surpreme Court cases. But, their methods and results are different. And, certainly, one can claim the Democratic bill overturns even more. The debate is not in overturning recent cases, but rather how it is done.

Under Kennedy-Hawkins, it would no longer be acceptable for companies with 15 employees or more to try to foster equal opportunities. To protect themselves, they would have to guarantee an exact numerical representation of minorities, women, religious, and other ethnic groups on their staff in line with that of the population living in the surrounding community. It also gives employees the right to sue for unlimited compensatory and punitive damages. Under current law, victims of job place discrimination are "made whole," or given back their previous position and all back pay. Kennedy-Hawkins, as mentioned earlier, gives plaintiffs and their attorneys a powerful new incentive to enter the courts—and it's not unreasonable to assume that among the suits that would be brought would be frivolous ones.

Congressman HAWKINS argues that one of the concessions made by the proponents is that now the plaintiff must point to a particular practice as the cause of disparity when he/she can reasonably do so.

But, in fact, the plaintiff is not required to show that any practice caused the disparity. Rather, it is enough for the plaintiff to show that a group of practices resulted in a statistical disparity, and that a practice within a group contributed to the disparity, even if the practice did not itself cause the disparate impact.

What about the defendant? With virtually no tangible statistics to back him/her up, the employer has a nearly impossible task of stitching together a case to prove his innocence. As the employer's presumption of innocence is trampled upon, he would have to engage in enormously complicated mathematical gyrations to disprove a negatives; that is, when did you stop discriminating against your employees?

Perhaps the most serious indictment of Kennedy-Hawkins, though is the fact that it would not succeed in doing what its sponsors say is its most important goal: Overturning the 1989 Wards Cove decision and restoring the 1971 Griggs versus Duke Power Co. decision. No one disputes that the Griggs standard for determining whether employment decisions are free of discrimination is a suitable one. It is correct for proponents of Kennedy-Hawkins to say that Griggs worked well in the real world for 18 years. There's one little problem with this reasoning: Kennedy-Hawkins does not restore Griggs.

Griggs required that any employment practice which adversely impacted minority workers that is a disparate impact practice—would have to be shown to be "manifestly related to the employment in question." This definition has appeared in every disparate impact case Supreme Court decision until the Wards Cove case. One would expect any restoration of the Griggs decision to include these vital definitional words, yet they never appeared in any of the six rewrites of the Kennedy-Hawkins bill.

If supporters of Kennedy-Hawkins want to restore Griggs, then why don't they restore that actual language of Griggs?

Republican Leader BOB MICHEL reminisced during floor debate that this was the first time in his memory civil rights debate had become a partisan issue. Unfortunately, the goal no longer appears to be bipartisanship in civil rights, or a good strong civil rights bill that truly does restore law to what existed before these five cases. Rather than achieving a quick Presidential signature on legislation restoring these protection to victims of discrimination, the strategy of Kennedy-Hawkins is clear: Guarantee quotas in reality, if not in name; turn civil rights litigation into a new wave of litigation and jury trials; and guarantee that President Bush's overtures to minorities be stopped by a veto of this bill.

Let's hope that changes. Victims of discrimination ought not be the pawn of partisan politics.

CALABRIA SOCIETY TO CELEBRATE 55 YEARS AND HONOR LUIGI GALLICCHIO AND JOSEPH MARTORANA

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, 55 years ago in New Rochelle, NY, the Calabria Society was formed. For over half a century, the society has served as a pillar in the Westchester County community. The society has provided scholarships and has supported a wide range of charities throughout the county. In addition, the society has worked to maintain a strong sense of culture and tradition within our Italian-American community.

On October 20, the Calabria Society will honor two outstanding individuals for their contributions to the society and to our community. Mr. Luigi Gallicchio has been a member of the Calabria Society for 20 years. He has consistently shown his commitment to the community programs with which the society has worked. Mr. Joseph Martorana has been a good friend of the society for many years. Through his work in New York State government, he has also been a superb representative of Italian-Americans in Albany. He, too, has exhibited a strong sense of commitment to our community.

For the last 8 years, the Calabria Society and its 300 members have been led by Dom Procopio. As president of the society, Dom has been an active and vigorous community leader in Westchester County. I am delighted to have this opportunity to recognize the achievements of the Calabria Society, as well as the special accomplishments of Luigi Gallicchio and Joseph Martorana.

UNCIVIL RIGHTS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, Congress is once again addressing the issue of civil rights, and whether or not the Civil Rights Act of 1990 will be effective in establishing equal rights for minorities. A surge in racial unrest, the Central Park jogger incident, the Virginia Beach riots, and the riots in Miami, provide a troubling backdrop for consideration of legislation that is meant to ensure civil rights to all Americans.

With respect to this legislation, my concern has always been how does the practice of essentially mandating quotas assure the American people that equality for minorities will be attained? I commend to my colleagues two articles that have recently been brought to my attention. The first was written by Ambassador Morris Abram, permanent representative to the U.N. in Geneva and past vice-chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights from 1984 to 1986, and is entitled "The Senate's Quota Bill Vs. King's Dream" from the September 11, 1990, issue of the Wall Street Journal. The second is a Mike Royko column from the September 21, 1990, Chicago Tribune, and is entitled "Where Good Sense Is In The Minority." Mr. Royko's column is of particular interest to me because of the absolute absurdity of the situation he describes, and because of the fact that the incident occurred in my home State of Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Civil Rights Act of 1990 as it is presently constituted is a grave mistake and will not do anything to promote the true meaning and spirit of civil rights in this country. Indeed, I am afraid this piece of legislation will be a step backward in the promotion of equality and justice. I commend the aforementioned articles to my colleagues attention and would simply close with a quote from Frederick Douglass, to which Ambassador Abram makes mention in his article: "Equality of numbers has nothing to do with equality of attainments."

THE SENATE'S QUOTA BILL VERSUS KING'S DREAM

(By Morris Abram)

If I were still practicing law, I would love the Kennedy-Hawkins Bill—the so-called "Civil Rights Act of 1990." It may enrich contingency fee lawyers. But it will also impoverish the principle of equality of all Americans. All my life, beginning in the darkest days of segregation in my home state of Georgia, I have fought against the principle of color preference, then known as "White supremacy." This bill institutionalizes color preference under the false flag of civil rights. It is not a civil rights bill. It is a quota bill that will achieve precisely what the landmark 1964 Civil Rights Act stood foursquare against.

Proportionality of result, not equality of opportunity, is the touchstone of this flawed legislation. It creates a presumption of guilt based only on crude race or gender statistical imbalances in the workplace, and then forces employers to rebut that presumption under a standard of proof that rules out the pursuit of excellence as a defense and is very difficult to meet. The cumulative weight of this stacked deck will make the risk of having the wrong numbers so great that the employer, in self-defense, will hire by quota.

Contrary to the blandishments of its supporters, Kennedy-Hawkins rewrites 20 years of civil rights law. It would do something I never thought I would see in America—it would make racial, ethnic and sex imbalance alone presumptively illegal. Under Kennedy-Hawkins, a plaintiff need only allege a statistical disparity between minorities in the labor pool and on the job, and charge that the employer's practices collectively caused the imbalance—nothing more. Because it effectively eliminates the requirement that plaintiffs identify a specific discriminatory practice, the legislation would turn a civil rights complaint into an indictment without a bill of particulars.

By effectively making bottom-line statistical imbalances proof of discrimination (although protesting that it does not), Kennedy-Hawkins holds employers hostage to raw census data. Those statistics do not measure individual differences in skills, experience, training or quality of education with each job group. But such distinctions do matter: Try convincing an employer that there's no difference between the graduates of a third-rate college and those of a first-rate university.

The bill's faith in the idea that statistical disparities alone create a presumption of discrimination is equally flawed. Abraham Lincoln's friend, the former slave Frederick Douglass, understood the divisive and destructive implications of the belief that, in a word without discrimination, there would be racial proportionality in every human endeavor: "Equality of numbers," he wrote in 1871, "has nothing to do with equality of attainments."

Without the requirement that the plaintiff specifically charge discrimination, employers must justify every hiring or promotion practice that might account for the imbalance—and prove their innocence by rebutting a presumption of guilt so difficult to overcome and so costly to fight that they will capitulate and hire by numbers.

The proposed standard requires the employer to demonstrate that every one of his hiring or promotion criteria "bear(s) a significant relationship to successful performance of the job" by means of "demonstrable evidence." How many employers can "prove" that their hiring criteria—whether they be standardized tests, job interviews, written or oral skills, education or experience—definitively correlate with successful job performance? Could a Supreme Court justice prove by "demonstrable evidence"—whatever that means—a "significant relationship"—whatever that means—between law review experience and successful performance as a Supreme Court clerk—especially when seeking out the best is no defense? Could a college faculty show that tenure track candidates who publish articles always make better teachers or advance the cause of knowledge?

Under this test, merit and high standards go out the window, impairing not only the principle of American equality but, inevitably, American efficiency and productivity. Together, the bill's presumption of guilt and its high hurdle of proof will force employers to avoid lawsuits and potential liability by hiring and promoting by quota.

Kennedy-Hawkins wages war on objective standards at a time when this society can least afford a lesser measure of achievement. Objective criteria may not be perfect; some may mask discriminatory intent, or have little relation to the job. But Kennedy-Hawkins wields a bludgeon where a scalpel would do. Existing law already walks the fine line between protecting standards and weeding out potentially discriminatory criteria. The Supreme Court's 1989 Ward's Cove v. Atonio decision, the case Kennedy-Hawkins would overturn, already demands an exacting standard of business necessity: Why fix it if it's not broken?

But the social costs of a quota bill go beyond loss of productivity and efficiency. It balkanizes and tribalizes our nation by raising the color line; it stigmatizes and demoralizes those it supposedly helps. Kennedy-Hawkins may be a middle-class minority ride to preferential treatment; but it won't solve our real minority problems. It won't help fight the crack epidemic ravaging our minority youth; it won't stem the tide of unwed minority teen pregnancies; it won't stop the breakdown of our inner-city education system.

Congress and this administration have the opportunity, perhaps more than any other in recent years, to forge a new and lasting civil rights consensus. Every opinion poll confirms that the vast majority of Americans of all races share the goals of equal opportunity and color blindness and will support the vision of Martin Luther King, who urged that we judge ourselves "not by the color of our skin but by the content of our character." Let's not miss this chance by endorsing a quota bill.

WHERE GOOD SENSE IS IN THE MINORITY

(By Mike Royko)

You play the jury and decide. Does Mike Welbel discriminate in his hiring practices?

Welbel owns a small business, the Daniel Lamp Co., 3611 W. Cermak Rd.

He buys lamp parts that are made elsewhere, and his workers assemble them in his plant. The lamps are shipped to furniture stores.

He has 26 employees. The jobs require little skill or education so the pay is low. But a job is a job. Welbel says that of his 26 workers, 21 are Hispanic and 5 are black.

At this point, some of you might say: Yes, Welbel discriminates because he doesn't have any non-Hispanic white employees.

Overruled. Welbel's business is in the heart of the Southwest Side's Hispanic community. So most of the people he hires are from the neighborhood. It's doubtful that anyone would want to travel a considerable distance to work in the lamp shop.

But yes, Welbel does discriminate. You might not think so, and I don't think so. That doesn't matter. Federal bureaucrats say he does. And so he's up to his ears in trouble.

It seems that a black woman applied for a job about 18 months ago. She wasn't hired. Welbel says he doesn't know why.

"I didn't interview her. Maybe the plant supervisor did. He's not here anymore. I don't know why she wasn't hired. Maybe we didn't need anyone. I just don't know."

But he does know that the woman filed a complaint with the Chicago office of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the federal agency that is supposed to guard against discriminatory hiring practices. She complained that she wasn't hired because she is black.

And one spring day last year, two investigators came to his plant.

"I told them, 'Here's the records. Help yourselves. You can see everything.' What did I have to hide? I figured that if everybody who works for me is Hispanic or black, how could I be discriminating?

"You see, when I started the business nine years ago, I used to deal with the state Department of Labor or place help-wanted ads.

"Then I got to know these Hispanic organizations—the Spanish Coalition and Latino Youth in Chicago—and we could call and say we needed a couple of people, and they'd say 'no problem,' and send someone in.

That's why Welbel wasn't concerned when the federal bureaucrats came snooping. With an all-minority work force, why should he worry? "I didn't even get a lawyer."

Now he knows why he should have worried. "Dealing with those government people is frightening. They do all the talking. They tell you how it's going to be. You just sit and listen. I've never even met the woman who filed the complaint."

The bureaucrats have told him how it is going to be.

First, they say he must pay the woman $340.01 in wages she lost by not being hired.

Welbel says: "Fine. I'll be glad to pay her that just to get rid of the headache."

But that's just for starters. Sort of a small ante in the pot.

The bureaucrats have also demanded that Welbel pay $123,991 in back pay.

Back pay to whom? Good question. The money is to be divvied up by six other blacks who weren't hired and whose names were found in Welbel's files. And by any other blacks who might have applied in 1988 and 1989.

And who are these others? Welbel doesn't know. Nor do the bureaucrats.

So the feds want Welbel to spend about $10,000 on newspaper advertising to find black people who say they applied and weren't hired. Then they can come in and get their share of the $123,991.

"They told me that I should have had 8.45 black employees in 1988 and 1989. They said that within a 3-mile radius of my plant, companies that have 100 workers or more average 31.3 percent black. So I should have a 31.3 percent black work force. And that's how they came up with what I owe people who didn't work for me.

"And they want me to spend $10,000 on advertising to find people who didn't work for me so I can pay them $123,991 for not working for me."

Is Welbel going to do it?

"I can't. I don't have the money. To tell the truth, the whole company isn't worth that much. That's why I came in this neighborhood. I got the building cheap. Nobody wanted it. I have a nonskilled work labor pool nearby.

"No, I can't pay that money. I'll have to close down, go out of business.

"This is incredible. I'm a small operation. I've got 26 minority people working for me. And here's this federal agency on my back with some mathematical formula that I never heard of before."

I called the EEOC for their side of it, but they wouldn't discuss the case. I can understand that. If I did something that loony, I wouldn't want to talk about it either.

So if the EEOC doesn't back off, Welbel might have to go out of business. And that will eliminate 26 jobs held by minorities. They won't have incomes, they won't pay taxes, and maybe some of them will have to go on welfare, which means someone else's taxes will be used to support them.

I wonder: Among all the other things the Japanese have acquired, do you think they might have bought the EEOC?

INTRODUCTION OF THE RAILROAD WORKERS' INJURY COMPENSATION ACT OF 1990

HON. BOB WHITTAKER

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. WHITTAKER. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take one of the first steps toward reforming the shamefully outdated system of compensating injured railroad workers. The 1908 law, known as the Federal Employers' Liability Act, was progressive at the time, when concepts such as no-fault workers compensation had yet to become accepted. But in our modern society, a fault-based, luck-of-the-draw injury compensation system like FELA is as archaic as a buggy whip.

The measure I am introducing today, prepared by the Bush administration and transmitted to us by Transportation Secretary Sam Skinner, initiates the process of replacing FELA with a modern, efficient, and equitable no-fault compensation system. That is the prevailing system in virtually all other industries now. Even when they operate across many State lines, companies are governed by no-fault workers compensation systems when it comes to liability for their employees' on-the-job injuries. But the railroads are still singled out for disparate treatment that merely increases the uncertainty of recovery for the employee and helps to enlarge the share of the recovery going to the lawyers rather than the injured worker or his family.

Embarrassingly, the House had not even examined whether the FELA compensation system was working, for a period of 50 years. Yes, the last time that the House had revisited FELA was in 1939. Then in late 1989, the Transportation Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, where I serve as ranking Republican member, ended that long period of neglect by holding a comprehensive oversight hearing on FELA.

The bill I am introducing today builds upon the record created at our hearing. It also emphasizes in my mind the need for constructive and creative discussion of this issue between railroad management and rail labor. They are the ones who know the day-to-day operating environment of the railroad industry, and who can help with technical refinements and improvements to this basically sound legislation. I look forward to working with them, and with the administration, to lay a firm foundation for the eventual replacement of FELA with a modern and human compensation system.

I think it is especially fitting that we are taking this next critical step to modernize the working environment of the railroad industry and its employees, almost exactly 10 years after the enactment of the Staggers Rail Act, the law that economically emancipated the railroad industry. As the successful record of the railroad since 1980 demonstrates, the Staggers Act allowed healthy market forces into the over-regulated rail transportation industry, allowing the carriers to operate in an environment more nearly comparable to other American industries.

But the excessive rate and abandonment regulation that affected the railroads prior to 1980 was only one aspect of an outmoded public-policy psychology—a mindset that had unfortunately been frozen into statutes, FELA is one such statute—a manifestation of that now-discredited penchant for anomalous, unique-to-railroad laws that have proven economically disastrous and self-defeating not just for management, but also from the standpoint of employee welfare. Therefore, I am doubly glad to be a small part of the process that will change the FELA system for the better.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have inserted into the RECORD at this point Secretary Skinner's letter of October 15, 1990, transmitting the draft of this legislation, as well as the accompanying section-by-section analysis of the bill.

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Transmitted herewith is a bill, "To repeal the Federal Employers' Liability Act, to provide for coverage of railroad employees' injury claims under individual state workers' compensation programs, and for other purposes."

This bill, entitled the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990, provides for a long overdue reform of the railroad industry's employee injury compensation system. The bill would repeal the Federal Employers' Liability Act ("FELA") with its outmoded concept of fault as a necessary component of employee injury compensation, and provide for railroad employees to be compensated for job related injuries under the no-fault workers' compensation systems maintained by each of the individual states. Enactment of this bill will allow railroad workers to join millions of other employees in virtually every other American industry who receive compensation for work related injuries without regard to who was at fault.

FELA was enacted by Congress in 1908 to address a very serious and pressing need. Railroading represented not only one of the nation's largest and most important industries, employing approximately 1.5 million employees, but also one of the nation's most dangerous occupations, with 4,534 rail employees killed on duty in 1907. Opportunities for obtaining compensation were very limited. In addressing this need Congress naturally looked to the common law tort system and adopted a negligence-based system. Under FELA, railroad employees are entitled to receive compensation to the extent they can establish that their injuries were caused by the negligence of their employer. Correspondingly, the employee's recovery can be reduced or eliminated to the extent they were contributorily negligent. The enactment of FELA was certainly landmark legislation, which provided vital benefits to rail employees and an important impetus to the adoption of workers' compensation systems across the nation.

Unfortunately, while FELA may have represented an enlightened step forward in 1908, its fault-based system has not kept pace with modern developments. Fault as a component of employee injury compensation has been rejected by all states which have adopted worker's compensation statutes in the years following enactment of FELA. As a result, the railroad industry and its employees are burdened with a system that is costly, ineffective, and out of step with modern workers' compensation concepts. There is no justification for treating railroad workers differently from workers in virtually every other industry, including the transportation industry. A transformation of the railroad workers' compensation program to no-fault principles is long overdue.

The workers' compensation system established by FELA fails to protect the interests of railroad employees, the railroad industry, or the nation's interest in maintaining a sound, competitive transportation system. There are five essential needs that an effective workers' compensation program must cover. First, an effective system must insure that every injured worker receives compensation regardless of who is at fault. FELA does not meet this most basic of requirements. Some injured employees who are unable to establish negligence on the part of their employer do not receive any compensation for their injuries; furthermore, injured employees' recoveries are reduced to the extent they were contributorily negligent.

Second, an effective system should resolve cases quickly and provide injured employees with rapid access to compensation benefits to meet day-to-day financial responsibilities for themselves and their families. FELA does not provide for prompt payment of benefits because the parties are forced to battle over the question of who was at fault. This produces lengthy investigations, protracted settlement negotiations, and often extensive trial proceedings through several levels of the court system. The employee does not receive compensation through FELA until this process is complete.

Third, an effective system provides incentives for immediate rehabilitation and, when possible, a speedy return to productive employment. FELA encourages quite the opposite result since the goal of a maximum settlement or jury award is enhanced if the injured employee has a greater appearance of need. Delayed rehabilitation can only lead to greater expense and a lessened likelihood of the employee returning to work. Neither represents sound social or economic policy.

Fourth, an effective system minimizes the extent to which it burdens the courts and permits lawyer's fees and administrative expenses to eat into an employee's recovery and the company's resources. The administrative expenses associated with FELA are enormous and ever increasing. The investigative costs associated with establishing fault and the requirement that disputes be resolved through the courts adds significantly to the total monetary and social cost of the system without providing any additional benefits to the injured employee.

Fifth, an effective system should place fair and equitable burdens on competing industries. Since the railroad industry's competitors are subject to no-fault state workers' compensation programs, they have a significant competitive advantage over rail carriers. This directly harms the railroad industry, rail employment, shippers who use rail, and the nation's ability to compete in world markets.

The Department of Transportation has no greater interest than the safety of our transportation system. We reject the contention made by some that FELA is a safety statute, i.e. a positive force for improved rail safety. In fact, the opposite is true. Since the employee and the carrier are primarily interested in showing that the other party was at fault, the true cause of the accident is frequently obscured. The contentious nature of the inquiry can also sour the employer-employee relationship. Eliminating fault from consideration will facilitate prompt identification of safety problems and expeditious corrective action by employers.

The President has recently announced the National Transportation Policy, which is designed to help our transportation system meet the needs of the 21st century. The Policy has identified as a major goal efforts to bring Federal treatment of railroads into conformity with treatment of other industries and the repeal of Federal statutes that impose archaic and outmoded requirements on railroads. Railroads have as a result of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980 been freed of the most onerous and unnecessary economic regulations governing rates and services, and this has led to dramatic improvements in their ability and incentive to offer efficent, competitive transportation. The repeal of FELA will likewise produce significant benefits for railroad employees, and the railroad industry.

I urge the Congress to move ahead on this important legislation. Hearings held before subcommittees in each house have developed an ample legislative record identifying the inequities and inadequacies of FELA and providing strong support for its repeal. As we strive to improve America's competitive position in the world, we need a strong and healthy rail industry. The repeal of FELA can made an important contribution to that objective.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that enactment of this proposal would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL K. SKINNER.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Federal Employers' Liability Act, enacted in 1908, preceded the enactment of State workers' compensation statutes and represents an important early effort to provide compensation to workers injured or killed in the course of their employment;

(2) the Federal Employers' Liability Act establishes a fault-based system in which employee injury compensation is based on the employee's ability to establish negligence on the part of the employer, and in which compensation may be reduced or eliminated to the extent the employee is contributorily negligent;

(3) following enactment of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, all of the individual States adopted nofault workers' compensation statutes which provide compensation for workers injured or killed in the course of their employment without regard to considerations of fault or negligence on the part of either the employer or the employee, and which are applicable to virtually all other industries in the United States;

(4) in recognition of the remedy provided to injured railroad employees by the Federal Employers' Liability Act, certain State workers' compensation laws specifically exclude railroad workers from coverage under the State programs;

(5) the determination of fault as a component of injury compensation produces a number of undesirable consequences, including the failure to ensure that all injured workers receive compensation, a disincentive to railroad safety and sound employer-employee relations, and a lengthy process with high transaction and social costs that increase industry costs, burden the court system, and decrease the compensation received by the injured worker;

(6) State workers' compensation programs provide for the receipt of compensation (in accordance with benefit schedules established by each State to meet its particular needs) by all workers who are injured on the job without requiring workers to demonstrate fault or the cause of the accident, and with an administrative process that is generally less complicated and expensive that litigation through State or Federal court systems;

(7) subjecting the railroad industry to the fault-based Federal Employers' Liability Act put the industry at a disadvantage in competing with other modes of transportation, which are covered by State workers' compensation programs, and this inequity of treatment places a burden on interstate commerce; and

(8) the determination of fault as a component of employee injury compensation does not represent sound public policy and should be eliminated.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to place all railroad employees under the workers' compensation laws of the several States, in order to ensure that railroad employees will be compensated, without a determination of fault or negligence, for injuries or death arising out of or in the course of their employment.

SEC. 4. REPEAL.

The Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.) (popularly referred to as the "Federal Employers' Liability Act") is repealed.

SEC. 5. APPLICABILITY OF STATE WORKERS' COMPENSATION STATUTES.

Notwithstanding any provision of State law that excludes railroad employees from coverage under a State workers' compensation program or that authorizes a railroad employee to bring a tort claim against a railroad, no State shall, after the effective date of this Act, prohibit railroad employees from access to that State's workers' compensation program and any claim against a railroad by an employee of the railroad for injury, death, or occupational disease arising out of or in the course of the employee's employment shall be treated the same as the claim of a nonrailroad employee against his or her employer brought under the State's workers' compensation laws.

SEC. 6. AMTRAK TAX EXEMPTION.

Notwithstanding section 306(n) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 546(n)) or any other provision of law, the National Railroad Passenger Corporation shall be subject to the workers' compensation tax, fees, and assessments of a State in the same manner and to the same extent as any other interstate entity doing business within the State and governed by the worker's compensation laws of that State.

SEC. 7. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 20(a) of the Act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1185; 46 U.S.C. App. 688), is amended by inserting after "railway employees" both places it appears the following: "in effect prior to the enactment of the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this Act shall become effective 9 months after the date of enactment. All claims for work-related injuries, including occupational disease or death, that accrue prior to such effective date shall continue to be processed under the provisions of the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.) (popularly referred to as the "Federal Employers' Liability Act"). All claims for work-related injuries, including occupational disease or death, that accrue on or after such effective date shall be processed under the applicable State workers' compensation programs. Notwithstanding any other provision contained herein, a claim for injury, including occupational disease or death, that is found not covered by applicable State workers' compensation law because the injury resulted solely from an employment event occurring prior to the effective date of this Act may be processed under the provisions of the Act of April 27, 1908. In such event the time for filing an action provided in section 6 of the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 56) shall begin to run only from the date an adverse final decision denying coverage under the State workers' compensation law is received.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE RAILROAD WORKERS' INJURY COMPENSATION ACT OF 1990

Section 1. Section one provides that the Act may be cited as the "Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990".

Section 2. Section two contains Congressional findings supporting the need for enactment of the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990. The findings focus on the genesis of the Federal Employers' Liability Act in the early part of the twentieth century, the subsequent successful adoption of no-fault systems by all of the states, the significantly improved safety in railroad employment, and the difficulties associated with the presence of negligence as a factor in employee injury compensation. The findings support the need for a change from the fault-base Federal Employers' Liability Act to the no-fault programs maintained by the several states.

Section 3. Section three declares that it is the purpose of this Act to provide all railroad employees after the effective date hereof with coverage exclusively under the workers' compensation laws of the several states in order to assure that railroad employees are compensated, without a determination of fault or negligence, for injuries or death arising out of or in the course of their employment.

Section 4. Section four repeals the Federal Employers' Liability Act, officially known as the Act of April 27, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.).

Section 5. Section five provides that in recognition of the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act states would be prohibited from treating claims against a railroad by an employee of the railroad for injury, death, or occupational disease arising out of or in the course of the employee's employment differently from that state's treatment of claims of non-railroad employees under that state's workers' compensation laws. It is the intent of section 5 of the bill that railroad workers be entitled to participate in the state no-fault workers' compensation programs notwithstanding the existence of provisions in state workers' compensation statutes, which may either exclude railroad workers from the state compensation programs or contain language paralleling the Federal Employers' Liability Act and providing railroad workers with a tort-based claim for compensation under state law.

Section 6. Section six contains a technical provision designed to insure that the exemption from state and local taxes and other fees that the National Railroad Passenger Corporation ("Amtrak's responsibility to comply with the taxes and assessments associated with the individual state workers' compensation stautes.

Section 7. Section seven contains a conforming amendment designed to insure that the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act as it applies to railroad employees does not inadvertently affect the compensation system established for merchant seamen. Under section 20(a) of the Act of March 4, 1915 (46 U.S.C. 688), the rights of seamen who suffer personal injury in the course of their employment are tied to the rights and remedies available to railway employees under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Section seven of the bill insures that the repeal of the Federal Employers' Liability Act will not alter the rights available to merchant seamen whose employment-related injuries may occur at sea and not obtain the benefits of state workers' compensation laws.

Section 8. Section eight provides that the Railroad Workers' Injury Compensation Act of 1990 shall become effective nine months after the date of enactment. Accordingly, all causes of action for work-related injury, death, or occupational disease that accrue prior to such date would continue to be processed under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. All causes of action that accrue on or after that date would be processed under the applicable state workers' compensation programs. A nine month delay in the effective date of the provisions of the Act has been included in order to provide the states with a period of time in which to make necessary administrative adjustments to their workers' compensation programs to respond to the addition of railroad employees to the programs. Section eight also includes a savings clause which has been added to ensure that no employee is left without recourse in the event the employee's claim for injury, including occupational disease or death, is found not covered by the applicable state workers' compensation law because the injury resulted solely from an employment event occurring prior to the effective date of this Act. An employee in this instance would continue to have the right to pursue a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and the statute of limitations provided in section 56 of title 45 of the United States code would not begin to run until an adverse final decision denying coverage under state law is received.

WE NEED LOW-INCOME HOUSING PRODUCTION

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, one critical issue which we must resolve before we adjourn is the extension of the low-income housing tax credit. If this credit expires, the housing crisis that afflicts many parts of the country will worsen, and shelter costs will be under great pressure in many places. We have shown our concern for the homeless by a variety of measures, but no program dealing with the problems of homelessness will avail us much if they are not accompanied by programs to get housing built at prices that low-income people can afford.

The low-income housing tax credit is an indispensable part of this effort and it must be extended by legislative action this year.

The following letter signed by a wide range of groups concerned with housing needs illustrates the point.

OCTOBER 16, 1990.

To: Members, Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee.

The undersigned neighborhood and nonprofit groups concerned with the provision of low income housing for needy Americans urge an extension of the low income housing tax credit as part of any tax package. The low income housing tax credit program now produces about 125,000 units of housing to shelter the homeless and others desperately in need of decent housing. It is the nation's major housing production effort, and with the expected freeze on government expenditures, may be the only such effort for years to come. It has received overwhelming bipartisan support in both houses, and President Bush has urged its extension.

If Congress fails to extend the program, then the momentum generated by non-profits and local state agencies working in conjunction with the private sector to produce this needed housing will come to an abrupt stop.

Please do not fail to extend this vitally needed effort.

TRIBUTE FOR FRANK HUNTLEY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Frank Huntley of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio for his many years of dedicated service to the citizens of the Youngstown area.

As the current coordinator of the Center for Urban Studies at the Youngstown State University, Frank is in charge of developing and implementing programs which help relate university resources to problems associated with urbanization in the Youngstown community. One of his primary responsibilities is to provide technical assistance and training to local government, business, and public service organizations. Prior to this, Mr. Huntley served the Youngstown community as the coordinator of continuing education at Youngstown State University, director of community relations for the Youngstown Vindicator, and was a member of the city of Youngstown Planning Commission.

Frank received his B.A. degree from Youngstown State University in Sociology and his M.A. from the University of Akron in Urban Planning and Urban Administration. He has put his academic achievements to work by striving for the urban development of the Youngstown community. Mr. Huntley has also worked for the improvement of his community by devoting himself wholeheartedly to the Buckeye Elks Lounge and the Buckeye Elks Youth Development Center. His service to the youth of Youngstown is particularly noteworthy.

It is with great pride that I rise today to pay tribute to one of the many fine citizens of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio. It is indeed an honor to salute Mr. Frank Huntley.

ORCHARD SCHOOL NAMED A BLUE RIBBON SCHOOL BY SECRETARY CAVAZOS

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Orchard School in Yonkers, NY, for being selected as a blue ribbon school by Secretary of Education Cavazos. The school, which is run under the auspices of the Julia Dyckman Andrus Memorial in Yonkers, NY, was honored last month at the White House by President Bush.

The Orchard School was established in 1972 as a school for children and youth with special needs, specializing in the education of emotionally troubled children. Last spring, 55 children were enrolled, the majority of whom were in residence at the treatment center. The school is known nationally for its innovative application of educational technology and regionally for its record of academic excellence.

The Blue Ribbon Schools Program honors elementary and secondary schools who meet achievement criteria in reading and mathematics and who demonstrate exceptional ability to meet the needs of their students and their communities. This year, the Orchard School was 1 of 221 schools chosen nationally, and 1 of 18 in New York State. It is the only special education school in New York and one of only three nationally to earn this honor.

I am proud of the achievements of the Orchard School and of the way that critical services are provided both professionally and compassionately to young people in need of help in our community. We can never underestimate the importance of instilling in our children a sense of identity and self-esteem. I am grateful for the vision that the Andrus family had when they chose to support important programs such as this.

I want to congratulate all of the students and staff of the Orchard School for this well deserved recognition. I am certain that they will continue to live up to this high level of academic excellence for years to come.

REFLECTIONS ON IKE

HON. BILL EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, as one who spent his formative years during the administration of President Eisenhower, I have always been a devoted admirer of the man the world knew as Ike. As I have gotten older I have reflected on his era many times, usually with great nostalgia, and sometimes have even thought there must have been much that I did not understand about those times, because they did seem so good—peace prosperity—a climate that would be nice at almost any point to retrieve.

During the sixties and the seventies many among the elitist establishment pooh-poohed Ike as a do-nothing President, hands off in administration and delegating to others the real decisionmaking authority. I never took to that theory, and now I'm glad to see that history, based on careful research, is beginning to bear out my longstanding gut feeling about the man from Abilene and is vindicating my long-held views. But, that's a personal satisfaction and I won't belabor it.

This year is the centennial anniversary of President Eisenhower's birth. Indeed, even as we speak, it is interesting to contemplate that 100 years ago the man who was to lead the allied cause to victory in World War II, lead the entire free world for 8 years as President of our great Nation, set a magnificent standard as a role model for family, public service, military ideals—was but a babe of 3 days.

During this centennial period many observances have been held, many tributes paid, many memories rehashed. There is also a lot of perspective coming into focus. One of the most thoughtful and refreshing perspective pieces came to my attention this morning. I want to share with my colleagues, and submit herewith the article by Robert J. Samuelson that appeared today in the Washington Post.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 17, 1990]

THERE'S GOOD REASON TO LIKE IKE

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

I didn't always like Ike. In 1960, at the age of 14, I was enthralled by John Kennedy. Not only was he more charming, idealistic and energetic than Richard Nixon, but he promised a clear break from the plodding Eisenhower. Somewhere in the 1960s (or was it the early 1970s?), I got wisdom. I realized that Dwight Eisenhower had two qualities vital in a president: a sense of self-restraint and a sense of what's important.

As an Eisenhower fan, I've been struck by how favorable the reviews have been on his 100th birthday. For years, he was dismissed as a mediocrity who played too much golf and provided no leadership. In 1962 a poll of historicans on presidential greatness ranked Ike 22 out of 33, between Andrew Johnson and Chester Arthur. Now, Ike is celebrated as a successful president and something of a visionary, who foresaw the end of the Cold War. It's an odd resurrection that exaggerates his clairvoyance and overlooks the real causes of his competence.

His rehabilitation has occurred partly by default. No president since has seemed to handle the office so well. Kennedy and Gerald Ford are hard to judge, because they served so briefly. Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon and Jimmy Carter all departed in disgrace, Ronald Reagan, though popular, is widely dismissed—somewhat like Eisenhower 30 years ago—by commentators as a lucky pea-brain. Eisenhower's reputation has not risen so much as the standard of comparison has fallen. In the 1960s, it was Franklin Roosevelt; now, Ike's competitors are not so tall.

The Eisenhower revival also reflects the discovery that he was craftier and more complex than he seemed. When historians studied his archives, they found that he controlled his aides—not the other way around—and that his public ambiguity was often calculated. "Don't worry, Jim," he once told press secretary James Hagerty, who fretted about how a sensitive issue would be handled at a press conference. "I'll just confuse them."

But all these refinements merely discredit Eisenhower's bungler image. His success involved far more. His greatest feat was to heal. You need to recall the climate of the times. The Americans of the 1950s had experienced two hateful political debates; the first over the New Deal, the second over communism. By the late 1930s, President Roosevelt was exploiting class tensions by denouncing the well-to-do. In the late 1940s, Republicans were denouncing Democrats as communist dupes. At its worst, this became McCarthyism.

Eisenhower calmed these passions. This was not preordained. He might have sought (as many Republicans wanted) to overturn New Deal programs. As late as 1964, Barry Goldwater, the GOP presidential nominee, wondered publicly about the value of Social Security. Any effort to undo the New Deal would have failed, but in the process would have been hugely divisive, Ike didn't try. He might also have embraced strident anti-communism. Instead, he carefully constructed a bipartisan foreign policy and generally avoided shrill political rhetoric. Eisenhower's dull style was a deliberate part of his politics. He strove to soothe.

His second big achievement was maintaining a sound economy. With hindsight, the economic statistics of his years seem stunning. Unemployment averaged 4.8 percent and inflation 1.4 percent. Median household incomes (adjusted for inflation) rose 22 percent. Three of Eisenhower's eight budgets ran surpluses, and his deficits were small. Of course, not all of this was his doing. The engines of the early postwar economy were the new technologies and pent-up demand left by the war and Depression. But Eisenhower's policies allowed the engines to perform.

What's absent from Eisenhower's legacy is a long list of new federal programs, though he did create a few big ones: the Interstate Highway System (1956) and the National Defense Education Act (1958)—which provided aid for science education. "Eisenhower had * * * [a] deep aversion to the expansion of the state," writes historian Alan Brinkley in The Wilson Quarterly. "His mission, he believed, was to restrain and limit government, not to force it to fulfill any great missions or obligations."

Eisenhower is understandably criticized for not being bolder in attacking obvious social injustices such as racial segregation. What's forgotten is that even his successors, Kennedy and Johnson, didn't act until civil rights demonstrations compelled them to act. The more spontaneous activism of Kennedy and Johnson involved creating new programs and trying to raise the economy's growth through "economic management." These undertakings often created as many problems as they solved.

Government needs disciplines that are both effective and understandable to the public. Eisenhower adhered to certain common-sense convictions that provided these. Balance the budget. Control inflation. Create a climate in which private enterprise can generate growth. Following these convictions wasn't easy. To check inflation, Eisenhower endured three recessions (the slumps of 1953-54 and 1960-61 were mild, that of 1957-58 severe). Controlling the budget meant resisting constant demands from his party for tax cuts and from the Democrats for spending increases. But Ike resisted because he had a "consoling faith in 'the long view,'" as one-time aide Emmet John Hughes later wrote.

It has been lost. In the 1960s, economists who thought themselves smarter and more sophisticated than Eisenhower convinced politicians and the public that his common sense was old-fashioned. So the taboos against budget deficits and inflation were broken in the name of promoting higher economic growth. And once broken, they have been hard to recreate. Politicians had been given respectable rationales for doing popular things. Self-restraint diminished.

Had we retained Eisenhower's caution, we would have spared ourselves much grief. Double-digit inflation (and the harsh recessions required to cure it) would never have occurred. The inevitable expansion of government would have been slower and more careful. Huge budget deficits would have been avoided. The reason I like Ike is that to this day we are paying the penalty for abandoning his common-sense approach.

REALITY AND RESPONSIBILITY

BY THE HONORABLE JOHN J. LAFALCE

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, this body is quite familiar with the difficulties this year in producing an acceptable budget package: 5 months of negotiations between House and White House leaders; a less than spectacular agreement; angry constituents; a failed package. An article by noted economist Lester Thurow, which appeared in Sunday's Washington Post, elucidated the causes of this fiasco.

Mr. Speaker, our budgetary difficulties stem from a belief that our Nation can be governed without responsibility and sacrifice—a belief created and perpetuated through the doctrine of supply-side economics. Until we confront and dispel the myth that simultaneously increasing Government spending and lowering the taxes of the wealthiest citizens will balance the budget, we will be mired in huge deficits, voter antipathy if not antagonism, and irresponsible Government. Moreover, courage and tough choices will be required of this body and the other body if we are to achieve vital deficit reduction, establish a progressive Tax Code, and restore voter confidence in Congress.

Supply-side economics—the antithesis of reality—promised greater investment which, in turn, would lead to growth in the GNP, higher wages for low- and middle-income households, and higher revenues. Indeed, Ronald Reagan promised that supply-side economics would completely balance the budget, without spending cuts, by as early as 1985. Reality, as Mr. Thurow points out, was quite different: the deficit is between $250 and $300 billion, the national savings rate has significantly decreased, and GNP growth has slowed.

Yet it is the effect on low- and middle-classes that make supply-side economics, and its progeny, cutting the capital gains tax, so loathsome. The results of the 1980's are in: the poor grew poorer while the rich grew richer. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the after-tax income share of the richest 2.5 million households is nearly equal to the income share held by the 100 million households with the lowest incomes. A cut in the capital gains cut will perpetuate the income injustices of supply-side economics; capital gains largely are the exclusive domain of the upper income quartiles. CBO estimates that in 1990 the lowest 90 percent of all households had capital gains of $299. The richest one percent of all households earned $175,536 in capital gains.

The budget package must rectify, not aggravate, the growing inequality of income distribution. Congress must weight and balance many competing, worthwhile interests. Most importantly, Congress must show the courage necessary to pass an acceptable package. If Members have the courage to face the need for painful spending cuts and revenue increases, a responsible package can be reached.

The following articles by Lester Thurow is of great value and should be read by all Members and staff.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 7, 1990]

THE BIG LIE THAT CAUSED THE BUDGET CATASTROPHE

(By Lester C. Thurow)

In 1980 the American electorate embarked on a grand experiment—supply side economics. Ten years later, that experiment continues to warp the political process. Its enduring influence explains why Congress and President Bush found it so difficult to reach any budget agreement at all; why the failed agreement was so peculiarly shaped; and why the public, nourished on a decade of false promises, seems unwilling to make even modest sacrifices to assure the nation's economic future.

In the current economic climate almost any solid deficit-redcution package would be welcome. Still it is remarkable that the initial deal struck last week would aggravate the very features of the current tax system that seemed most generally objectionable to tax experts and the public: Its "small business growth incentives" would offer new tax dodges to the wealthy—who had supposedly traded away their shelters for the much lower tax rates provided by the 1986 tax reform; its tax-deduction limit would worsen, rather than eliminate, the disreputable "bubble" feature which grants the very, very rich lower marginal income tax rates, and hence lower capital-gains tax rates than those faced by the merely well-to-do taxpayers; and to would increase the relative tax burden borne by low- and moderate-income taxpayers. All this in a package endorsed by Democratic leaders who claimed to have tax fairness as their top concern.

What explains the persistance of supply-side mythology? From where comes its power to so constrain American politics?

When America first jumped on the supply-side bandwagon, people felt, rightly, that the economic performance of the 1970s was unacceptable. The political and miltary affronts in Tehran were compounded by the vision of a chained economic giant wilting in the face of Japanese and German competition.

A GNP growth rate of 2.8 percent was unacceptable when compared with the 4.1 percent growth rate of the 1960s. That dismal record was compounded by an even more important measure of economic performance, productivity growth—the rate at which a nation is becoming more efficient and hence more affluent. The 1960s' growth rate of 2.9 percent had fallen to only 1.4 percent in the 1970s. Such a decline meant that instead of doubling every 24 years, America's standard of living would take 50 years to double—each generation could no longer expect to have a standard of living twice that of its parents. Facing these facts Americans were willing to try something new and different.

Supply-side economics, as enunciated by President Regan and later embraced by Bush, promised that lower taxes on upper income groups would stimulte savings and hence permit more investment—the argument used by Bush to advance his capital-gains tax cut proposals in the recent budget summit. Higher investment would lead to higher growth. In addition to restoring economic vigor and rebuilding international competitiveness, higher growth would accomplish two other important objectives—without asking for painful sacrifice from anybody.

First, with a larger economy, government tax revenue could go up even though tax rates had been reduced. In 1981 Reagan promised that the federal budget would be balanced in 1985 without having to make significant spending reductions. Second, allthough most of the tax cuts would go to high-income individuals (it was they who had the capacity to save more), higher growth would lead to better paying jobs for middle- and low-income Americans. In the short run their total tax rates would go up—for 80 percent of the population the extra payroll taxes they would be asked to pay to fund Social Security would be larger than the income tax cuts they would get. But with higher earnings they would in the end benefit. All gain, no pain.

Politically supply-side economics delivered the goods—three presidential elections have been won using it—but economically it has not delivered on any of it promises.

Where higher GNP growth was promised, lower growth was delivered—2.6 percent over the decade of the 1980s. In 1990 the economy is stalled on the lip of a recession, just where it was in 1980. Because of the debt and banking problems built up during the 1980s, any recession in the 1990s will produce levels of bankruptcy not seen since the Great Depression. Even without a recession, middle-class wealth is melting away as housing prices fall in much of the nation in reaction to the debt excesses of the 1980s.

Instead of growing faster, productivity slowed down—1.2 percent during the 1980s. In 1989 productivity actually declined. There is only darkness visible at the end of the productivity tunnel.

Savings rates plunged. In the last four years of the 1970s, American families saved 7 percent of their disposable income; in the last four years of the 1980s, they saved only 4 percent. The rich saved nothing from their tax cuts. In contrast, the Japanese saved 15.7 percent of their income in the past 12 months.

If total national savings (a measure that includes corporate savings and government dissavings) is examined, savings fell from 17.4 percent of GNP in the last four years of the 1970s to 11.3 percent of GNP in the last four years of the 1980s. As a result, in 1989 Japanese investments in plant and equipment per worker were three times as large as those in the United States.

At the beginning of the decade the United States had a small surplus in its trading accounts ($1.5 billion in 1980 and $8.2 billion in 1981). At the end of the decade it recorded a current-account deficit of $129 billion in 1988 and $110 billion in 1989. What was a competitive problem at the beginning of the decade was a competitive disaster at the end of the decade.

In 1981, the United States was the world's largest creditor nation with net assets totaling $141 billion. Every year the rest of the world paid interest, dividends, and profits to Americans. By 1989 the United States had become the worlds largest net debtor nation with debts totaling $620 billion. Where Americans used to get, they now give.

The federal deficit did not, of course, vanish in 1985. In the year ahead, the deficit is estimated to be $254 billion and rising if last week's deficit reduction proposals are passed by Congress ($294 if they are not) and over $300 billion if the Social Security surpluses are excluded from the totals, as they ought to be. A budget summit that reduces the deficit by $40 billion is essentially the equivalent of Nero fiddling while Rome burns. The difference is that Nero wanted to burn Rome so that he could rebuild it—the Roman Colosseum was his. Unfortunately there is no evidence that the current fiddlers have any real rebuilding in mind.

President Bush is fond of saying that "we have more will than wallet." He has it exactly backwards. Our GNP after correcting for inflation is four times as large as it was in 1947 when we were paying to rebuild the world after World War II. Our per capita GNP is 2.3 times as large. We can afford to do what must be done abroad; we can afford to do what must be done at home.

America is not an over-taxed country. In 1989, Americans paid fewer taxes as a percentage of GNP (about 30 percent) than the citizens in any other industrial country. Taxpayers in 22 industrial countries, including the Japanese and the Germans, paid more. Moreover, there are places where the budget can be cut without harm. Based on the performance of other countries (far lower spending levels; far better performances when it comes to health and longevity), substantially less could be spent on health care if the system were fundamentally reorganized. The events in Eastern Europe mean that big defense cuts can occur while still maintaining our ability to fight wars in the Third World. America has more than 2 million troops; fewer than 200,000 are in the Middle East.

The American problem is will—not wallet. In a democracy, will depends upon leadership and in the United States that means presidential leadership. It isn't leadership to spend months arguing that a capital-gains tax cut is the most important issue facing the American economy.

Whatever one believes about the growth-enhancing aspects of a capital-gains tax cut—or other "tax incentives"—everyone agrees that they leave more after-tax income in the hands of the wealthiest. In the last decade America has already had a heavy dose of that kind of "sacrifice."

Recently the U.S. Census Bureau confirmed that inequality in the distribution of income had increased substantially in the last decade. Every statistic points in the same direction. In the decade of the 1980s, the average real income of the top 5 percent of the population rose from $120,253 to $148,438. At the same time the average real income of the poorest 20 percent fell from $9,990 to $9,431. After-tax measures of income would report an even wider gap. As the income share of the top 20 percent rose in the 1980s, the income share of each of the bottom four quintiles was falling—the lower the quintile the bigger the decline. Despite a 21-percent rise in the real per capita GNP, the average real hourly wages of rank-and-file workers fell 5 percent. Those promised good jobs for middle- and low-income Americans did not appear.

If the income share of the rich is rising at the expense of the rest of the population (it is), if government is directly altering its policies to augment the income share of the rich (it has), if the campaign contributions of special interests increasingly dominate the political process (they do), if fewer and fewer middle- and lower-income individuals vote (it's happening), America is, under the cover of supplyside economics, rapidly moving towards becoming (dare we say it openly?) a plutocracy.

Unfortunately history tells us that as a social and governmental system, plutocracy does not for long work.

TRIBUTE TO BOB OWEN

HON. JOHN S. TANNER
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues the dedicated work of Bob Owen of Gleason, TN. Bob has worked for the Bank of Gleason for 46 years, the last 25 as its president. His is a story of success and of service.

Bob says he came from a family "too poor to paint and too proud to white wash", but he has not allowed that to hinder him. He got his first job at the bank at the age of 17. Through hard work and a quick mind, he became a bank officer before the age of 21. From there, he climbed steadily up the career ladder to his current position.

In this day and time of "fast tracks" and "workaholics", one might think that Bob spent all of his time figuring out how to make the bank more profitable. Measured by the success he has achieved, it is obvious that he did expend a great deal of energy insuring the success of the bank. However, while achieving that success, he never lost his sense of responsibility to his community.

He served as mayor of Gleason for 4 years during which he worked hard to attract new industry to the town. He has also served on numerous boards of the local public utility, the hospital, the industrial committee, and numerous other local organizations. He continues to serve on many of them.

His service, both as a banker and a community leader, has meant much to Gleason, so much that he has endeared himself to its citizens.

Bob Owen has set high standards for himself and his business. They are standards that all officials, in the public and private sectors alike, can emulate.

I ask unanimous consent that the attached news article be inserted in the RECORD.

FATE LEADS FARM BOY TO SUCCESSFUL CAREER IN BANKING

(By Linda Bolton)

Bob Owen of Gleason laughingly says he got into the banking business 46 years ago because "no one else would hire him."

The fact of the matter is, Owen hit the job market at the ripe draft age just as the United States was about to become engaged in World War II. Most young military prospects were not even considered for employment, because once trained for those positions, they most likely would be vacating them to go off to war.

However, at the young age of 17 with his high school diploma fresh in hand, Bob nervously walked into the Bank of Gleason to inquire about a job his uncle, Benny Oliver, had told him about.

He recalled how he talked with Bank President Carl Parks and M. E. Fanning, Chief Executive Officer for a moment before the two disappeared into another room momentarily to discuss young Owen's future.

"They just looked me over and for some reason or another they hired me," he said as if he still had trouble believing it. "It was about the third time I had been inside a bank and I knew only three people in Gleason at the time," he added.

He went to work that day—attending to bookkeeping and waiting on customers. He was also in charge of building a fire in the stove every morning.

Young Owen's only other previous work history included six weeks working for Ira Scates, off-bearing slabs at a local sawmill, until the mill closed in 1944.

The ambition and potential the bank officers must have seen in that shy, unexperienced farm boy has lead him through the ranks to the bank's top position today. Mr. Owen currently serves as president of Bank of Gleason, which recently opened a branch office in McKenzie. His family, who owned no stock when he joined the banking staff, is today the second largest stockholder in the growing company.

He has served two terms as director of the Tennessee Bankers Association and currently serves as first vice-president. Through a ladder-type program, he is slated to become president-elect in May, 1991 and will become the first person in the tri-county area to head the statewide association as president in May, 1992.

Along with other members of the executive committee, Owen said he gives direction to banks.

"We are a listening ear for the association. We listen and we make recommendations," he added.

Going back a few years, Bob said he was reared on the family farm in the "suburbs of Como" as he puts it. His father died when he was only 12 years old, leaving his mother to rear Bob, his sister, Mary Elizabeth, and his younger brother, Oscar. Following his father's death, Bob said he sort of "became the quarterback" of the family.

Due to the impending war and the scarcity of money, he said his family couldn't afford to send him to college after he graduated from Cottage Grove High School.

"The way I tell the story, we came from a family too poor to paint and too proud to white wash," said the genteel man.

However, he built for himself a successful career in banking, being elected an officer in the firm before the age of 21, advancing to cashier in 1954, vice-president in 1958, executive vice-president in 1960 and president in 1965.

He related how his mother managed to rear her children without entering the public work force. She sold the family farm in 1946 and moved her family to a Carroll Street residence in McKenzie. She never remarried and died at the age of 86 in 1984.

His sister, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Travillian retired following a successful teaching career with the Gleason school system and his brother, Oscar Owen of McKenzie, recently retired from a successful postal career.

Owen said he was examined four separate times for military service during World War II, but was always turned down.

"I was classified 4-F because they said I had a problem with my hearing," he stated.

At that time, Owen said people looked down on you if you were a healthy-looking young man of draft age and not serving your country. Many people thought he was given special consideration because he worked in the bank, he said.

Asked if he enjoyed his early years at the bank, he replied, "I thought it was just awful. I just kept the job until I would be called to service, I thought," he said, adding no one else would hire you."

During those early years, he met Darreen Shaw, a student at Gleason High School and native of The Tumbling Creek community. They fell in love and were married December 12, 1946.

Just as Bob was settling into the banking business, the U.S. again become engaged in military action in the Korean War. In January, 1952, about six months prior to becoming too old for the draft he received a notice to appear for yet another examination. He said he and his wife laughed when he got the notice because they were sure he would once again be rejected.

Well, Bob says his hearing must have improved since his last testing and 70 days later found him in the army for a stint just under two years, 15 months of which was overseas duty.

He returned home to his banking job and later helped rear three sons, Robert and Eric, who presently own and operate Owen Brothers farm and Alan, who works alongside his father as Vice-President of Bank of Gleason.

Bob eventually attended Bethel College and is a graduate of the Tennessee Banking School at Vanderbilt.

He said he only had one other job during his 46-year banking career—it lasted only four days and his superiors at Bank of Gleason never knew about the venture. He related how First American National Bank of Nashville had urged him to take a job there and "just try it," he said. So he took a few vacation days and reported for work in his new position. He said it didn't take him long to get homesick for his family and friends in Gleason, so he quit the new job and returned to the old one his bosses none the wiser.

The Gleason resident earned admiration that placed him in the mayor's seat from 1957 until 1960. He was appointed to fill an unexpired term created by the death of Mayor J.L. Margrave and was subsequently elected to another term.

Under his administration, the town located the Henry I. Siegel manufacturing industry in Gleason and lay the groundwork for the brick company.

"It was fascinating, but I got all I wanted," he said of his political career.

Owen has also served his community in many other capacities, including charter member and past president of Gleason Rotary Club in which he was bestowed the Rotary's highest award "Paul Harris Fellow"; past Commander of the Gleason American Legion Post; has served on the Board of the West Tennessee Public Utility District since 1957, where he has served as chairman of the board and president since 1969; serves as director of Methodist Hospital of McKenzie, serves on the City of Gleason Industrial Committee, is a member of the board of directors of the Tennessee Student Assistance Corporation and has served for the past 15 years with the Weakley County Jury Commission, and has been a partner in Finch-Owens Insurance Agency since 1957. In addition, he is a 32nd degree Mason, a Shriner, and a member of First Baptist Church in Gleason.

Owen received the "Outstanding Citizenship Award" in 1959 and the Jaycee "Boss of the Year" award in 1978. He was honored in 1982 by local townspeople with a day set aside in his honor.

The banker said the current mideast crisis has some effect on the banking industry.

"People are not as venturesome. I see a lot of people backing up and taking another look (before spending)," said Owen. "It takes a lot of money out of circulation and that takes its toll."

When asked what major changes he has seen over the years in the business, he laughingly replied, "air conditioning and computerization," the latter of which he admits he still isn't too familiar with.

"I've always said if we've succeeded in the banking business it's because we hired people smarter than I am. We have a great group," he added.

Bob said the most trying time of his life was during the illness and death of his wife, who lost a three-month battle with cancer approximatley 10 months ago.

Bob said he seriously considered retiring a few years ago, but his wife talked him out of it. Now he is glad of that decision.

He said he deals with grief by staying as busy as he can and taking one day at a time.

"When I quit now is when they fire me or take me to the cemetery," he said.

He concluded by saying, "The people of the tri-county area have been good to me. They are great people-people and family is all this world is about."

C. JAMES PATTI NAMED "MARITIME PERSON OF THE YEAR"

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to learn that C. James Patti, president of the Maritime Institute for Research and Industrial Development—MIRAID—recently was presented with the National Propeller Club's Maritime Person of the Year Award for 1990.

Jim received the award on October 12 at the 64th annual Propeller Club of the United States national convention in Tacoma, WA. The award was intended to recognize Jim's "leadership, dedication and untiring efforts in the promotion of the Propeller Club of the United States and devotion to the business of its executive commitee."

The Propeller Club of the United States represents ship owners and operators, ports, shipyards, stevedores and maritime labor. It has as its goal the promotion, furtherence and support for America's merchant marine.

Those of us who serve on the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and who have had the pleasure of working with Jim know that he richly deserves this great honor which has been accorded to him. Jim has been associated with the U.S. maritime industry for more than 20 years, representing various segments of the U.S. merchant marine on Capitol Hill. During that time, he has been one of the leading voices in the country for a strong American merchant marine, and he has worked tirelessly for the revitalization of America's maritime industry.

From 1970 to 1980, Jim served as vice president and counsel at the Transportation Institute. In that position, he established and directed the Institute's legislative department on behalf of its members shipping companies. Jim joined MIRAID as its vice president in 1980. He developed and implemented the organization's legislative and regulatory policies affecting the U.S.-flag merchant marine. Five years later, he was elected president of MIRAID's board of directors.

Jim served as president of the Propeller Club, Port of Washington, DC, from 1981 to 1983, and currently serves on the Propeller Club's national executive committee.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you join with me when I congratulate Jim on receiving this award. It is well deserved and it demonstrates the high regard in which he is held by his colleagues in the maritime industry. I know that I speak for all the members of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee when I say that we look forward to working with Jim Patti for many years to come. We all wish him and MIRAID continued success in the future.

"SOUTHERN NEEDS" BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF JAMAICA, MICHAEL MANLEY

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to a recent article in Foreign Policy magazine by Prime Minister Manley of Jamaica. The article, entitled "Southern Needs", articulates the challenges facing developing countries as well as the possible effective responses to those problems by the industrialized nations.

Excerpts from Prime Minister Manley's article follow:

FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF A LEADER

From the perspective of a leader of a sovereign and developing country, the evolution of the political contour of the world over the last three decades is nothing less than breathtaking. Movements for democracy, intellectual freedom, and economic self-determination have forced fundamental changes in the relationship between the state and its citizens. New economic policies are clearly demanded. Simultaneously, the political and economic order has become truly globalized. All these factors have led to the rapid and seemingly irreversible warming of the Cold War.

While discussions of East-West economic competition are being recast in terms of cooperation, glaring disparities in the comparative levels of wealth and development remain between North and South. Yet all countries are becoming aware of the need for collective, coordinated, and rational approaches toward the problems of the Third World.

During the 1970s, many Third World countries sought to create institutions that could formulate development schemes to advance their economic development exponentially. Attempts were made to identify the sources of developing countries' economic woes and to provide solutions to remove the impediments to economic well-being.

This new wave of thinking led Third World countries to adopt development models that were believed to address more accurately nationalist aspirations, historical inequities of class, and the apparent unwillingness of the developed countries to undertake significant efforts to redistribute the world's wealth. In the 1960s, Jamaica was one of many countries to adopt wide-ranging import substitution policies, and it took some time to learn the inherent disadvantages of that strategy. Then, as developing countries began to address the flaws of pure import substitution, there came the enormous shocks of the 1970s.

In 1972, the government of the People's National Party of Jamaica had a vision of a development plan that would correct the maldistribution of its country's resources, increase local ownership of the means of production, and improve Jamaica's position in the international marketplace. Like most Caribbean countries, Jamaica's economy is small and import-dependent. During the 1970s, the economy was hurt by several developments. The oil crisis of 1973 led to a worldwide recession and a decline in imports of raw materials and commodities by industrialized countries. As Jamaica's energy bill soared, international demand for its most important exports, sugar and bauxite/alumina, dropped. Inevitably, its balance of payments deteriorated sharply. At the same time, the prosperity of the island's industrial base was almost completely dependent on attracting foreign capital. Like many Third World countries, Jamaica experienced problems when foreign owners of Jamaican-based businesses and industrial concerns transferred profits to their home countries rather than investing them in local development. Exacerbating the already formidable problems facing the government were such glaring social inequities as high unemployment, an inadequate educational system, and deficient health care, which deprived a substantial number of Jamaican citizens of the basic requirements for productive lives. Thus, rapid rises in the price of imported oil, domestic demands on government resources, increased costs of imported goods, and financial turbulence within the world monetary and trade sectors all coalesced to form the ceaseless debt problems and financial shortfalls that Jamaica is currently experiencing.

During my first period as prime minister, 1972-80, Jamaica's government reacted to these difficulties with very strong government interventionist policies. Jamaica was not alone in its early and unsuccessful experimentation with new types of development strategies—strategies that were viewed as the deus ex machinas of the Third World. Developing countries adopted import substitution, protectionist legislation, and regulations that compelled foreign exchange generating export sectors to subsidize more inefficient and less competitive sectors. By the 1980, however, bitter experience had taught us that the slender capacity of the state to counteract the tidal forces of the world economy was totally inadequate.

Currently, Jamaica is strangled by debt; virtually half its export earnings go to service the debt. Its economy cannot move forward. At the end of 1989, Jamaica had a population of only 2.3 million but an external debt of US $4.5 billion, constituting approxiamtely 140 percent of gross domestic product (GDP).

As the pressures mounted, the Jamaican government, like most others in the Third World, was forced to borrow. Loans came from three sources: private commercial banks, other governments, and official international lending agencies, such as the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank, and regional development banks like the Inter-American Development Bank. The last group is known as "multilateral institutions." Whereas most African debt is bilateral—that is, it is owed to governments—most Latin American debt is owed to commercial banks. Jamaica's own debt is mostly bilateral and multilateral, and it was accumulated mainly from 1978 thorugh 1987.

The debt crisis threatens not only individual countries, but the functioning of the world economy as well. It constrains world trade, inhibits capital inflows, hampers growth and per capita income, and generates tremors of increasing severity in the international banking system. Certainly it cannot be in the interest of transnational banking institutions in industrialized countries to allow Third World countries to degenerate into virtually permanent states of debt. It is highly likely that some banks will be unable to absorb the financial shocks that would flow from a unilateral and permanent suspension of repayments by large numbers of developing countries, particularly if the governments of these banks did not formulate tax and banking regulations to protect their solvency or financial ratings. Morever, any perturbations in the banking sector could have ripple effects in other capital-intensive sectors of industrialized countries. Finally, any regional or bilateral conflicts among developing countries resulting from the pressures of the debt crisis could set back the superpowers' current progress toward sustained détente.

The question must be asked whether the world appreciates that it is in every nation's interest to create conditions favorable for general economic development, rather than economic development for only one sector of the world. The time for the international community to look into this question is long overdue, and the price in human suffering is too high. Further, the democratic governments and free-market economies in many developing countries are being threatened by the dangers caused by the debt crisis. Indeed, one need only examine the motives cited by participants in internal disturbances and attempted coups around the world to confirm that crushing external debt leads to domestic instability. The effects of the debt crisis can be seen in the increasing attractiveness of underground economies to citizens of developing countries, economies that sap governments of capital, complicate the task of stabilizing their structures, and deprive national industries of legal consumer transactions.

The debt crisis has also fueled the explosive growth of the drug trade; in Colombia wealthy and powerful drug cartels have undermined democratic government. When meeting subsistence needs legally seems impossible, the attractiveness of illegal alternatives, such as drug trafficking, increases.

In addition, developing countries face a brain drain as their most talented and educated citizens emigrate to developed countries where economic and career opportunities are better. Emigration is not limited to the elite, however; those on the lower rungs of the economic and educational ladders also enter (legally or illegally) developed countries in an attempt to escape the cycle of poverty. It is ironic that, as East-West rapprochement is diminishing the risk of superpower conflict, the danger of Third World instability appears to be increasing.

Assistance from the North to developing nations can thus be justified upon the same basis as was the Marshall Plan: enlightened self-interest. Following World War II, the United States concluded that it could best serve its national interests and the world's security by assisting in the reconstruction of the war-ravaged economics of the West Europeans countries, regardless of the side on which they had fought during the war. While the altruistic considerations underlying the Marshall Plan cannot be denied, a fundamental motivation was the U.S. government's realization that European reconstruction would provide new markets and trading opportunities for the U.S. business sector and therefore significant benefits for the American economy.

The success of the Marshall Plan and U.S. assistance to Japan is manifest in the West European and Japanese economies today. The countries of western Europe, particularly West Germany, are models of industial know-how and technological innovation. U.S. reconstruction assistance to Japan allowed that country to emerge in the postwar years as an economic powerhouse respected around the world for its expertise in high-technology production and for the quality of its consumer groods. The United States, for its part, has enjoyed export markets in the reconstructed economies.

Ultimately, the global debt crisis may be resolved in several ways, including the revival of world trade and the resumption of adequate capital inflows to developing countries. Whatever the solution, a way must be found to halt the debt-deflation spiral that saps the world economy of much of its vitality. Sufficient debt relief to developing countries would restore the import capacity of debtor countries and free resources to resuscitate world trade. Such an expansion in world trade would alleviate the trade deficits of debtor countries. Moreover, debt relief would prompt a resumption of capital flows to developing countries that would stimulate economic growth.

In recent times, various innovative solutions to the debt crisis have been proposed, including debt-equity swaps, cancellation of debt for least developed countries, and the Brady Plan. In the case of debt-equity swaps, particularly those proposed for purposes of privatization, private concerns have hesitated to acquire state enterprises that are often highly inefficient, with outdated equipment and little market dominance. Variations on the debt-equity swaps, such as "debt for nature" exchanges are problematic because of countries' understandable desire to control their natural resources and, in the case of small island nations, the lack of available land. It is not surprising that transnational banks resist outright cancellation of privately held debt; they would prefer arrangements that would guarantee payments on arrears and the resumption of regular repayments. The Brady Plan represents a conceptual breakthrough because for the first time debt reduction has been contemplated by the United States as part of an overall strategy to cope with Third World debt; however, it does not do enough. The extent of its relief for foreign exchange payments is relatively small, and it involves considerable new lending, which tends to perpetuate the cycle of debt.

With regard to multilateral lending institutions such as the World Bank and the IMF, the misconception persists that developing countries oppose conditionality. Generally this is not true. The overwhelming majority of developing countries have long since accepted the important contribution of institutions like the IMF to good economic management, fiscal prudence, and other matters. While these countries may sometimes question the manner in which conditionality is approached, they do not reject the concept. Many Third World countries are, however, concerned by the trend toward a heavy emphasis on structural adjustment and corrective measures in the absence of adequate resources for development.

The debt crisis is not going to solve itself, nor do piecemeal measures such as case-by-case rescheduling constitute a feasible solution. A solution must proceed from the recognition that governments in developed countries, transnational commercial banks, multilateral lending institutions, and governments of developing countries share some of the responsibility and all of the consequences of the debt crisis. Industrialized countries must understand that Third World countries are not seeking tolerance of inefficiency or corruption. Nor are they asking one part of the world to pay the costs of irresponsibility by other parts of the world. What developing countries do ask is that the world community capitalize upon hard-earned lessons in economic management to assist developing countries that have the will, intelligence, and determination to end their economies' stagnation or deflation.

As noted earlier, a more coherent, collective effort to solve the debt crisis is emerging. Discussions and planning at meetings of multilateral organizations, such as the June 1990 G-15 meeting, and summits of the industrialized countries contribute significantly to our understanding of the debt crisis and its possible solutions. What is needed, however, are joint meetings between the Paris Club and debtor countries in order to agree on concrete measures of debt relief for hard-pressed Third World countries. Such discussions will require all participants to avoid tangential matters, such as apportionment of blame for the current debt crisis, that distract from the task of extracting the developing countries from their morass of debt. One must believe that the international community will rise to this challenge to ensure peace and prosperity for future generations in both North and South.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO ESTABLISH A NATIONAL GLOBAL WARMING ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT POLICY

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that addresses two issues that I believe have been long neglected problems—a national energy research and development strategy and its relevance to potential global warming problems. The bill, the National Global Warming Energy Research and Development Policy Act of 1990, attempts to set forth a civilian energy research and development program that gives program direction and policy guidance to domestic energy technology development.

Once again, the recent events in the Persian Gulf have acted as a destabilizing factor on United States oil prices. We need to examine how we set our energy priorities and take a closer look at the complicated linkages among our energy needs, our energy policy, and research and development strategies. I believe that the bill I am introducing today will help us focus our energy priorities.

The bill establishes a national policy for energy research and development that will lead to energy technologies that reduce the contribution of energy to potential changes in global climate. In addition, the policy will reduce the dependence of the United States on foreign energy supplies consistent with the achievement of other domestic energy, economic, social, and environmental goals.

The bill establishes and continues programs within the Department of Energy that will increase energy efficiency of existing technologies; will promote technologies that generate lower levels of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases; improve scientific understanding of the natural and man-made sources of greenhouse gases and attempt to determine their relative contributions to global climate change.

However, I believe that we cannot abandon our large fossil fuel resource base, and I have also included in the bill a review and assessment of our ongoing Federal fossil energy research to be carried out by the National Research Council. The National Research Council will evaluate the goals of the program, will assess the potential contribution of each technology's emission of greenhouse gases, and look at the technology in terms of its ability to reduce our energy supply vulnerability.

In seeking to ensure the continued development of appropriate technologies, I have included joint research and development ventures for several technologies as an enhancement for private sector involvement in our energy future. I believe the ventures, which also call for Federal and private sector cofunding, are an appropriate way to leverage scarce Federal research dollars.

In the past we have approached energy problems one issue at a time. I believe we must recognize the complexity and interrelationship among these various issues. Global climate and energy security concerns must be an integral part of our long-term research and development policies for new energy technologies. The legislation presents an opportunity to look at the interrelationships of energy issues in the context of a well thought out research and development program, a key ingredient of a national energy policy.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF OSSINING CELEBRATES BICENTENNIAL

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, 200 years ago, Capt. Elijah Hunter established a little church in the area that has become Ossining, NY. This was the first church to be established in the village, and the 40th Baptist Church to be established in New York.

For over 30 years, church members met and worshipped in private homes. Baptisms were performed in the Hudson River and the Kil-Brook. In 1815, the first church building was erected, and later, in 1865, a baptistry was built. Finally, on June 4, 1974, the present church structure was dedicated, replacing the original wooden structure.

The church standing today is truly beautiful. In addition to its gothic design and the beautiful interior woodwork, the church boasts a towering steeple that is an Ossining landmark and beautifully crafted stain glass windows.

On October 21, the First Baptist Church of Ossining will celebrate its bicentennial. The members of the congregation are proud of their history and of the role that their church has played in the religious and cultural history of our Nation. I wish to congratulate Dr. William R. Conklin, the pastor, and all of the members of the First Baptist Church on this very special occasion.

AN EDUCATIONAL EXPERIMENT THAT WORKS

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, several years ago, former Secretary of Education William Bennett published a provocative pamphlet entitled "Schools That Work: Educating Disadvantaged Children," which profiled exemplary schools across the Nation that have succeeded in delivering a top quality education to low-income students. Not surprisingly, these schools shared certain characteristics, including first, creating an orderly and safe school environment by setting high standards for discipline and attendance; second, helping students to acquire the habits and attitudes necessary for achieving academic excellence and success in life; third, providing a challenging academic curriculum, and fourth, encouraging parents to involve themselves in their children's education.

I have attached an article from the October 4, 1990 issue of the New York Times, which describes the 25th anniversary reunion of a small private school on Manhattan's West Side which subscribes to this old-fashioned and successful approach. Small, privately funded Points of Light such as De La Salle Academy demonstrate that disadvantaged kids can excel academically when our schools remember to stress these simple truths.

I urge my colleagues to read this article and to support educational policies, such as education vouchers for low-income families, that will encourage the creation of other De La Salle Academies across America.

FORTY-FIVE RETURN TO THE PLACE WHERE THE FUTURE BEGAN

(By David Gonzalez)

Grown men do not often gather to pay homage to their junior high school, especially when it existed for only seven years.

But a quarter century after their school's founding, the graduates of the Msgr. William Kelly School, a Catholic school for gifted minority and working class youths, boast of their alma mater with the pride and reverence most people reserve for the tweediest Ivy League institutions.

Last weekend, 45 men reunited in the basement parish hall of a West Side church to celebrate the school and teachers who helped open their eyes to a world beyond cramped housing projects and blue-collar careers. They returned as doctors, lawyers, executives, social workers and, in some cases, with paunches, thinning hair and children in tow.

"Kelly was a turning point for me," said Michael Schneider, a physician who flew in from Ohio to attend the reunion. He grew up in the Bronx, the son of a janitor who had emigrated from Romania. "It made me optimistic about the future."

Many said their experiences at the school, which they called simply Kelly, not only awakened them to possibilities, but also to responsibility to use their talents to improve their communities. The school has produced several public interest lawyers, government officials and entrepreneurs who have employed inner-city residents. Many alumni said the epitome of that philosophy was Brother Brian Carty, a teacher and principal at Kelly who was their mentor, friend and booster.

"We always emphasized that the only change that is going to take place is by us creating that change," said Brother Brian, a 46-year-old beefy, bespectacled man whose easy smile is topped by a thick, bushy moustache. "They did not have to be passive and accept what is, but had to create and take risks."

The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York took a bit of a gamble itself when it opened the school in 1965 to meet the needs of talented inner-city children who were not sufficiently challenged by the traditional curriculum. The 270-students, who attended the school had to pass a stringent test and be recommended by their parochial and public school principals before being admitted to Kelly, which served grades six through eight.

The school benefited from a synergy with the social ferment of the civil rights and Vietnam eras. In contrast to local schools, which reflected the de facto segregation of New York's balkanized neighborhoods, Kelly students came from the five boroughs and all races.

"These kids were all bright and different," said Dr. Schneider. "It was the first time for many with a lot of other black kids or Hispanics."

BIG PAYOFF CAME LATER

They received an education that emphasized the basics of reading and writing, but also valued independent study and group projects. Courses in psychology, theology, cinema and philosophy and frequent field trips rounded out their education and spurred them to think about their place in the world.

"We told the kids they had the ability and they had to start using their heads, Brother Brian said. "We expected a great deal from them and didn't let them coast." He said the payoff came when a number of Kelly's alumni were admitted to New England boarding schools or the city's elite public high schools and later went on to Ivy League colleges.

"Kelly helped me see the big picture," said Kevin Allen, a third-year ophthalmology resident at Harlem Hospital who graduated from Kelly in 1968. "A lot of kids today don't think they can be leaders, but Kelly brought that across, that the world wasn't just the five blocks up and down my street."

Dr. Allen added that the spirit of service he learned at Kelly has influenced him to plan to open an office in the inner city when he finishes his residency. "There's a huge need in the inner city for eye care, from young people who need glasses for school to old people who have glaucoma."

Neftali Martinez credited the lessons he learned at the school with having helped him rebuild his life after it was torn apart by drug abuse and a fling with the fast life on the streets. "If it hadn't been for Kelly I would have been lost or dead," said Mr. Martinez, 36, a treatment team leader at Creedmore Psychiatric Hospital who said he used drugs while at Kelly. "But there was this connection to the world of ideas, Kelly kept me anchored and helped me realize I have this talent." He said he now tries to impart the lessons he learned both on the streets and at Kelly to a group of troubled teen-agers that meets regularly at a West Side church.

The Kelly school closed in 1972, the victim of diminished archdiocesean funds and dwindling numbers of the De La Salle Christian Brothers, the religious order that ran the school. But Brother Brian, determined that today's poor urban youths need such a school more than ever, kept alive his dream of reopening the school. In 1984 he and a group of Kelly alumni, many of whom had remained in New York, opened the De La Salle Academy on the Upper West Side, which is supported by donations and a tuition assessed on a sliding scale.

The unfulfilled promises of the 1960's, combined with crack, unemployment and broken families make the job more difficult, and hiring for the school is more expensive now that most of the 12-member faculty is composed of lay teachers. But Brother Brian vowed to promote the values of service and achievement to a new group of students that he hopes will become a new generation of urban leaders.

His only fear is that they may become victims of their success. "Too many kids want to leave the city and escape to the suburbs," he said. "But who can blame them?"

ADMINISTRATION STILL WIMPISH IN PROSECUTION OF S&L CROOKS

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, several recent announcements and developments have combined to remind us of the continuing monstrous injustice of the Savings and Loan Association bailout swindle.

The New York Times—Sunday, October 14, 1990—recently reported a new conspiracy involving Jeb Bush and the Broward Federal Savings and Loan Association in Sunrise, FL. Although Attorney General Thornburgh and his FBI experts have stated that most of these swindles are too complicated for prosecution, this ripoff appears to be a simple one: A building worth only $6.9 million was overevaluated and sold for $9 million. The partnershp, including Mr. Bush, secured loans totaling $11.6 million to buy the building, improve it and maintain a reserve account. The conspirators—partners—probably divided up the difference between $9 million and $11.6 million and now the taxpayers have already paid out $4 million in support of this scheme.

Another significant development occurred in Washington where the RTC called for an immediate infusion of $40 billion to keep the bailout operation going while the budget summit—as a major technology revision—included $74.3 billion over a 3-year period for the bailout. Meanwhile on the floor of the Congress neither of these bailout requests is being openly discussed.

Also recently, Attorney General Thornburgh, who has been quite soft on S&L investigations and prosecutions, announced that he was revising his previous position of light sentences for white collar crooks. He's now on again with a tough approach to white collar crime. The statistics related to indictments, prosecutions and convictions for S&L crooks, however, show no change in the lack of zeal of the FBI and the Justice Department.

In another very significant development, Charles Keating, the owner of Lincoln Savings in California and one of the kingpin S&L thieves, was indicted and put in jail by a Los Angeles prosecutor. To date, Attorney General Thornburgh and the FBI have treated this same Charles Keating with white kid gloves. Despite the enormity of Keating's crimes the only thing our wimpish Federal law enforcement operation has done is file a civil suit against Keating, the mega-million dollar bank robber.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this Nation's top law enforcement agencies are still not willing to treat the old boy network as criminals. The following Rap Poem goes to the heart of the scandal:

THE FBI IS LIVING A LIE

The FBI is living a lie
When it puts bank robbers away
Treat them all equal
The way they treat Charles Keating
And let all the thieves stay.
For Keating they made a law
That is brand new
This kingpin can stay free
All Wimp Thornburgh wants to do
Is go to court and sue.
The FBI is living a lie
As long as it lets Keating talk tough
This suspect is a widow mugger
Who ought to be treated real rough.
The FBI must apologize
To bank robber Willie Sutton's children
Or put Charles Keating in the pen
This is America
Bank robbers are all equal men.
Keating—the punk who took the most—
Deserves the tightest knot
On his golden upright noose
The FBI is living a lie
As long as it lets Keating run loose.
Keating stole millions
He's clearly an enemy of the state
So why does Wimp Thornburgh
Continue to discriminate?
All Thornburgh wants to do is sue
Why not equal justice
They should have sued
Slick Willie Sutton too.
Just because Willie robbed banks
Was no reason to go to jail
Look at all the S and L crooks
Not even putting up bail.
The FBI is living a lie
Under Thornburgh's wimpish rule
Being soft on S and L thugs
Makes our great nation
Look like a silly damn fool.

OPEN LETTER TO MIKHAIL GORBACHEV

HON. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. I would like to insert into the RECORD an article from the New York Times that contains an open letter from a member of the Soviet Congress to Mikhail Gorbachev. I believe it is a thoughtful letter that shows how much work is yet undone in the Soviet Union despite the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to Mr. Gorbachev.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 16, 1990]

NOW, MIKHAIL, THINGS WILL GET HARDER

(By Vitaly A. Korotich)

Dear Mikhail Sergeyevitch, I am happy that you have been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. I know that life is not easy for you these days—that you are not the happiest and most relaxed man in our country—and that it will not be easier for you in the future. In fact, it will be even worse now that you have won the prize, because more than ever before you are in the spotlight and everyone's hopes are focused on you.

We in the Soviet Union have never, in peacetime, lived as badly as we do now, and our hopes for a better life have never been higher than they are now. The weight of these hopes will press upon you. I want you to survive under this pressure—to survive as a human being and as a politician.

For the first time in many decades, humanity's hopes are really connected with our country; for the first time in many years, people really believe us. The Soviet Union has been separated from the rest of the world for decades by the walls that we have built—by social and political and all kinds of social and political crimes.

Only recently have we started our way back into humanity, and possible to see that we have a domestic and foreign enemies would not want such a comeback. In that country, they include militarist orthodox Communists who are willing to give up their power must destroy the barriers that has been built up, not only by your own enemies but also by those who were and sometimes still are, your partners. Outside the country, you have enemies who cannot survive if there is mutual understanding between honest people. These foreign enemies will press you to do what they want. I want you to resist. I want you to believe in the power and teach us how to listen to one another.

I don't know how the elected leaders of the Russian Republic or the Lithuanian Republic feel privately about your Nobel Prize. Maybe they wish you had won the Nobel Prize in Economics. But, still, they will be obliged to celebrate your decisions—publicly at least—if those decisions help them fulfill the will of their—and your—people.

Maybe in many places in Russia, the Ukraine, Georgia, the Transcauscus, Central Asia, Armenia and the Baltics the peoples' elected leaders and people who are standing in long lines in the streets will not celebrate your award—not because they are against the prize but because they have something else on their minds.

They need your help in solving their economic and political problems. They want you to listen to them today. They want you to draw closer to them, to cut through all the ways of bureaucracy and dogmatism.

I remember how, in Parliament, you interrupted the speech of Academician Andrewi Sakharov, your predecessor in the winning the Nobel Peace Prize—a speech about peace and mutual understanding—and how you would not let him finish it. Now Mr. Sakharov is dead, and you yourself must finish this speech and this fight for democracy.

Millions of people—live and dead—are looking at you. More than 40 million have been killed in our country from the time of the October Revolution. If each one of those people were to receive one minute of silence—if there were 40 million minutes of silence—that would amount to more than 73 yars of silence: the time that has passed from Revolution until now. These dead, and the living, are waiting for your decisions. Don't disappoint them. Don't disappoint us.

I wish you success in carrying out your responsibilities. And I greet you from the bottom of my heart.

PLAGIARIZED ART PROHIBITION ACT

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, several media sources in my district have carried recent stories about deceptively produced art which is inundating U.S. markets and about a local organization, the Rockport Fine Arts Council which has been leading a valiant crusade against it. The Rockport Fine Arts Council, and particularly two of its members who are renowned Rockport artists, Dorothy and Mike Stoffa, have fought to pass local and State laws which would protect unsuspecting art buyers.

This art, which is usually copied directly from works with proven commercial appeal, is being reproduced abroad using sweatshop labor and imitative mass production techniques. The sweatshop art then enters the United States duty-free as original art and may quickly be distributed for sale throughout the country. It is frequently sold in violation of our copyright laws, and there are numerous stories of ways it is advertised and sold that defraud purchasers. It is often foisted upon unwary consumers as the work of a neophyte, but promising, American artist or even as recently discovered original prints of great artists. As sales of this massively copied art may now exceed $1 billion annually, the ingenuity of those who profit from it is growing as well. We are seeing plagiarized, slightly altered artworks being generated by computers; and new photo reproduction techniques which imitate fine art paintings.

While there are a series of procedural legal protections available through the U.S. Customs Service for seizing and destroying illegally copied artworks, the responsibility for pursuing the violations rests with the aggrieved copyright holder who has been able to identify specific infringements. First, the copyright holder must locate where the illegal copies are entering the country and submit to the Commissioner of Customs each of the following: a valid copy of a U.S. registered copyright; a customs disclosure form; five photos of the copyrighted material; and then he or she must pay a base fee. Additionally, the individual must file a written demand to block the shipment of the pirated art and a bond to cover any damage to the seized art which might occur.

If no copyright infringement is found, the seized articles are released and the bond is turned over to the accused importer. This process is, however, inconsistent and inadequate because it is nearly impossible for one individual to have the facilities and resources to be able to monitor everywhere copied art may be entering the country, as well as identify the responsible parties.

Placing greater responsibility with the custom service would improve the process for locating large and dispersed amounts of pirated works of art, thus protecting the consumer from fraudulent art hucksters.

Today's high volume, high technology, fast-paced world marketing methods make it difficult for individual purchasers, legitimate art dealers, or aggrieved artists to protect themselves. Current law does not provide an adequate remedy for consumers who have been deceived about the quality of their art purchases, art dealers who must compete with plagiarized works, or injured artists whose artistic property was stolen. By the time consumers, art dealers and artists become aware of the problem that they face, it is too late to take individual legal action by themselves. Those ultimately liable are usually far beyond the jurisdiction of the local and district courts.

ART AND THE CONSTITUTION

Our works of art are the purest measure of our cultural achievements and represent the highest expression of our aspirations as a civilized people. They shape our other social expressions; they provide many of our best personal inspirations, and they are a store of our cultural history. Our sense of aesthetics is one of those few human characteristics that clearly distinguish us from other worldly creatures.

Article I of our Constitution expressly recognizes the importance of incentives for artistic and scientific creativity. In our copyright, patent and trademark laws, Congress has acted throughout our history to provide incentives for and to protect creative property.

These historic congressional protections for creative property have generated major industries that sustain the U.S. economy, improve competitiveness, and bolster our balance of payments position. For example, copyright industries are now one of the largest revenue producing sectors of the American economy, accounting for almost 5 percent of our total gross national product. The National Endowment for the Arts has estimated that the direct sales of all art-related industries constitute a $50 billion a year industry in this country alone.

THE DECEPTIVELY MARKETED ART THREAT TO CONSUMERS

The theft of artistic creativity from another individual is the oldest recognized arts crime in recorded history. Since the seventh century B.C., Greek artists have claimed the right of authorship by signing their sculptures and paintings. By the second century B.C., we have Greek records that those caught stealing artistic creativity and claiming authorship of it were brought before a tribunal, convicted as thieves and banished from the city.

During the same historical period Jewish sages gave creators the right to be recognized as the source of a creation. Ancient Jewish teachings admonished one to give credit to the authors of original creative works. One who did not identify creative sources was actually considered a thief under Jewish law.

During the Middle Ages in Italy, artists usually had no legal standing to protect their works. Patrons selected the subject matter, manner of expression, delivery requirements, and price. Nevertheless, the state provided for protection against illegally copying—mostly to protect society rather than the artist. Yet, today when we have tried to make the protection of creators' rights a high constitutional and statutory priority, our laws are proving inadequate to deter the theft of artwork and to protect unsuspecting art purchasers.

CONCLUSION

In reviewing the existing laws to protect the public and our Nation's artistic creators, I believe there are gaps in our Federal fraud and copyright laws that must be filled. We must act to make the importation and sales of plagiarized art a Federal offense. Those who willfully create, import, and sell it, should be subject to criminal penalties. We should also create Federal penalties to discourage other deceptive and fraudulent art sales practices.

Twelve States have already enacted consumer protection laws against the sale of falsely represented works of art and many others are now considering it. But State by State legislation is inadequate to deal with a national problem of such massive dimensions.

Therefore, I am proposing Federal criminal legislation—the Plagiarized Art Prohibition Act. My legislation is designed to protect potential purchasers and artistic creators against the fraudulent art marketing practices being perpetrated around the Nation.

Essentially, my legislation will make it a Federal crime to create deceptive art for introduction into interstate commerce or to import, transport, advertise or sell works of art in a fraudulent or deceptive manner. It will give the Attorney General important tools to use in combating these practices including the right to seize and destroy deceptive marketed works of art. The Federal Government would be empowered to protect consumers and artists from illegal art trade practices without depending on individual copyright holders to initiate legal action.

Mr. Speaker, the threat to the art admiring public and to artistic creators from plagiarized and deceptively marketed works of art is truly alarming. We should act now to protect our consumers and preserve our artists' ability to be compensated for their creative efforts.

I include the text of the Plagiarized Art Prohibition Act in the RECORD:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Plagiarized Art Prohibiton Act".

SEC. 2. PROHIBITIONS.

(a) PROHIBITIONS.—Any person who imports into the United States, or sells or distributes in commerce 1 or more paintings that are similar to or imitations of an original work of visual art shall be subject to the penalties set forth in this Act if—

(1) such paintings are plagiarized from that original work of visual art; and

(2) such person intends to deceive prospective purchasers of such paintings as to the identity of the creator of the paintings.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "commerce" means—

(A) commerce between any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any territory or possession of the United States, and any place outside thereof, and

(B) commerce within the District of Columbia or within any territory or possession of the United States;

(2) an "original work of visual art" is an original work of authorship under title 17, United States Code, that is a painting existing in a single copy, or in a limited edition of 200 copies or fewer, that are signed and consecutively numbered by the author; and

(3) a work is "plagiarized" from another source if it—

(A) is derived from that other source,

(B) is strikingly and substantially similar to or an imitation of that other source, and

(C) is presented as the work of someone other than the creator of that other source.

SEC. 3. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) CRIMINAL OFFENSES.—Any person who violates any provision of this Act willfully and for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain shall be punished as provided in section 2319 of title 18, United States Code, for violations of section 506(a) of title 17, United States Code. Section 506(b) of title 17, United States Code, shall apply with respect to copies of the work involved in the violation to the same extent as such section applies to infringing copies.

(b) SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE.—Section 509 of title 17, United States Code, shall apply with respect to copies relating to a violation of subsection (a) to the same extent as such section applies to copies relating to a violation of section 506(a) of such title.

SEC. 4. CIVIL REMEDIES.

(a) CIVIL ACTIONS.—Any person who is or would be aggrieved by a violation of this Act, either as the creator of an original work of visual art or as a purchaser of a copy of the work that is the subject of the violation, may bring a civil action against the person or persons committing the violation.

(b) REMEDIES.—The provisions of sections 502 through 505 of title 17, United States Code, shall apply with respect to actions brought under subsection (a) for a violation of this Act to the same extent as such provisions apply to civil actions brought for infringement of copyright.

SEC. 5. LIMITATIONS ON ACTIONS.

(a) CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.—No criminal proceeding shall be maintained under this Act unless it is commenced within 3 years after the cause of action arises.

(b) CIVIL ACTIONS.—No civil action shall be maintained under this Act unless it is commenced within 3 years after the claim accrues.

(c) EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDIES.—

(1) CIVIL ACTIONS.—An action under section 4(a) against a person who violates this Act that is brought by an owner of copyright in an original work of visual art described in section 2(a) precludes any action under title 17, United States Code, brought by that owner against that person for infringement of that copyright arising from the same acts which comprise the violation under this Act.

(2) CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.—A person convicted of a violation under section 3(a) shall not be subject to the penalties set forth in section 506 of title 17, United States Code, for infringement of copyright arising from the same acts which comprise the violation under section 3(a) of this Act.

SEC. 6. PREEMPTION.

The provisions of this Act preempt any State law to the extent that this Act provides rights or remedies more extensive than those provided by such State law.

TAXES HIT MIDDLE CLASS

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, constituents of mine continue to ask why I have voted against the recent budget proposals that have come before us over the past 2 weeks. Consistently I have answered that my constituents cannot bear the burden of higher Federal taxes.

Yesterday, this Chamber adopted a budget resolution which, according to its sponsors, shifts the tax burden to the Nation's wealthiest taxpayers. I opposed this budget resolution because I did not buy that argument. Others, too, have not bought it.

I draw my colleagues' attention to an excellent editorial which appeared in today's edition of the Paducah Sun, the largest newspaper in my western Kentucky congressional district. The editorial points out that a family earning an average annual income of $25,000 would pay about $183 in additional taxes, while a family with an annual income of $36,000 would owe $280 in additional taxes.

I think that we would all agree families earning $25,000 or $36,000 a year are far from being among America's wealthiest taxpayers.

I congratulate the newspaper's editorial page editor, Don Gordon, and the other members of the staff at the Paducah Sun for their insight into this timely matter.

I would ask my colleagues to read this editorial and consider its points closely in the event that we have the opportunity to consider another budget resolution which would be fairer to America's working middle class.

The editorial is as follows:

HOUSE POISED TO HIT MIDDLE CLASS

House Democrats, apparently emboldened to abandon all restraint in the face of thier opposition's weakness, have gone from a position of "soaking the rich" to one of soaking nearly everybody who earns a paycheck.

A tax plan that has emerged from the House Ways and Means committee and reportedly enjoys broad party support in the House would hit all but the poorest taxpayers. For instance, families earning an average of about $25,000 would pay about $183 more per year. For those averaging about $36,000, the additional tax bill would be $280.

From protectors like these, deliver the American middle class.

One way the House tax writers would increase the revenue take is by depriving wage-earners of their tax protection against inflation next year. It seems many members of Congress are interested in cost-of-living indexing only when it protects entitlements, not earnings.

The entire budget process started downhill when President Bush repudiated his own no-new-taxes pledge and it has been accelerating ever since.

And now the administration apparently has abandoned the field completely to the Democratic congressional majority, and that's sure to be bad news for American taxpayers.

If the budget had been squeezed dry of unnecessary and wasteful spending, the tax plan might go down better. But of course spending continues unabated and anyone who believes Congress won't find ways to spend the new revenue envisioned in the House tax package hasn't been watching that august body in action in recent years.

President Bush, whose performance in the budget fiasco over the past several weeks does him no credit, can yet redeem himself by using his remaining weapon. It's called a veto.

WORKING TOGETHER IN HIGHER EDUCATION

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, there is little doubt that funding for education, especially for higher education through student assistance, is one of the critical issues facing us today. What's more, with reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 coming up next year, it is likely that the debates on student aid, both loan, and grant programs, will intensify.

One of the elements of the debate focuses on providing assistance for middle income students who are increasingly not eligible for the more traditional Stafford Guaranteed Loan Program and the Pell Grant Program.

Another element focuses on finding ways of realistically controlling student defaults in the loan programs, with a special emphasis on those students in the career training sector of higher education.

Today, I want to address those issues. First, I will touch on a singular effort by Pennsylvania's State treasurer, Catherine Baker Knoll, to support a special loan program in the Commonwealth primarily for students from middle- and upper-middle-income families.

Then I will describe a new program developed by a career training school as a step toward guaranteeing repayment of student loans.

And, finally, I will focus on some positive contributions that career training schools, their faculties, and their students, make to their communities.

Just a short while ago, a unique agreement was reached between the Pennsylvania treasurer and the State's designated guarantee agency for the title IV student loan programs—the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency—that will ensure the continuation of a program that assists students from predominantly middle- and upper-middle-income families.

These are the students who are too often forgotten when policy regarding the financial assistance programs has been made. They are the ones who usually don't qualify for the federally backed and federally subsidized Stafford loans, and, who, for the past decade or so, have increasingly had to rely on high-interest loans to finance the rapidly escalating costs of any postsecondary study.

Under the terms of the agreement, the treasury will buy up to $200 million in funding notes from the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency. This extensive line of credit enables PHEAA to continue its nonsubsidized student loan program which is the only one of its kind in the Nation. It provides assistance to students from predominantly middle- and upper-middle-income families.

PHEAA's nonsubsidized loan program has helped thousands of students since its inception 7 years ago. Last year, the program provided assistance totaling $135 million and, during this academic year, the program is expected to provide at least $150 million in assistance. This $150 million is expected to assist more than 66,000 students attending 363 Pennsylvania postsecondary institutions.

As the father of five children, I know firsthand that education is an excellent investment, and, I'm sure, that as the mother of four children, Pennsylvania Treasurer Catherine Baker Knoll also knows this.

But, as the person entrusted to make many crucial financial decisions for Pennsylvania, it is not her job to invest State money without a return that can be measured relatively easily.

According to Mrs. Knoll, the loan to PHEAA will provide a yield of 20 to 25 basis points over the 90-day treasury bills, which is one of the staples of the Pennsylvania Treasurer's Short-Term Investment Poll.

I join with Treasurer Knoll in saying that this unique agreement "represents an excellent source of liquidity for PHEAA, a sound purchase for the State treasury, and a superb investment in Pennsylvania's future."

Prior to signing the agreement, PHEAA was forced to stop processing applications for these special 8-percent loan because the growing reliance on them increased so quickly the program ran short of funds.

Although none of PHEAA's other programs had to be halted, the delay in processing loan applications for this one program caused a great deal of concern among Pennsylvania families. Unfortunately, the prospect of having to do without these loans required some students to put their educational plan on hold.

Now, these students have the opportunity to follow through with their plans because of the agreement between PHEAA and the Treasury.

This agreement is indeed a wise investment an sends a very clear and much needed message to Pennsylvania's young men and women that higher education is important and should be financially accessible to all students.

The next agreement I'll tell you about exists between a chain of truck driving schools and the private businesses that hire its graduates. This arrangement represents a concerted effort to help reduce the student loan default rates.

Several months ago, CareerCom, the company that operates the truck driving schools, approached the carriers who hire its gradutes about participating in a tuition reimbursement incentive partnership program.

Under the program, CareerCom gives preferential access to its graduating students for those carriers who agree to assist the graduates with repaying their student loans and the carriers pay $50 per month directly to the graduate's lender or current holder of the loan.

CareerCom now has 30 of these arrangements with 13 different carriers.

The total amount of the loans the carriers agree to repay on behalf of the graduates ranges from $1,500 to $6,625 and the period of employment required before repayment benefits begin ranges from 2 to 6 months.

This partnership is an excellent initiative in its own right, but, what makes it even more impressive is that it is coming from the career training sector of higher education.

The students and schools in this sector are the ones who seem to have been excessively targeted in recent years for much of the criticism regarding any problems related to the student financial assistance programs.

Mr. Speaker, we are constantly bombarded with negative stories about the career training sector of higher education, but we never seem to hear about the significant and positive contributions these career training schools and their students make to their communities and their chosen professions every day.

Does anyone know, for example, that the students, teachers, and staff at the Pittsburgh Beauty Academy have raised and donated $125,000 to Children's Hospital over the past 10 years, and, who, just this year alone, raised $2,500 for St. Anthony's School for Exceptional Children?

Is anyone aware that this same group of men and women regularly participates in activities to benefit West Penn and Mercy Hospitals, the Lupus Foundation, the Alzheimers Foundation, and continually participates in blood drives?

Does anyone also know that the academy has 10 small beauty salons in homes for the aged where its students regularly use their talents while brightening their customers days with a little conversation?

The Pennsylvania Association of Private School Administrators is well aware of these activities. The association recently chose the Pittsburgh Beauty Academy and its students to receive its first Community Service Award.

In the notification letter to the Pittsburgh Beauty Academy the association says:

> The committee was very impressed with the numerous activities sponsored by your schools, students, teachers, and staff. The good you serve to your communities is certainly appreciated by all * * *. The Pennsylvania Association of Private School Administrators is proud to have you as a member.

The Pittsburgh Beauty Academy has been graduating topnotch students for the last 35 years and has five schools in the Pittsburgh area—two of which, I'd like to point out, are in my district.

But the students at the Pittsburgh Beauty Academies are not unique. Many other career school students use their skills and talents to make significant contributions to their communities. The Art Institutes of Seattle and Pittsburgh and the Colorado Institute of Art are among this group of schools.

A new environmental recycling program at the Art Institute of Seattle helps men and women overcome drug addiction.

The institute started the paper and aluminum recycling program in cooperation with a local drug and narcotics treatment facility. The treatment facility manages the program as a way to offer its clients voluntary employment while teaching good work habits and helping to save our environment at the same time.

Volunteer efforts at the Colorado Institute of Art were recently recognized by the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools through its Community Service Award.

The service work benefited United Way, the Keep Denver Beautiful campaign, the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, and the American Red Cross.

Students in the visual communications program at the Art Institute of Pittsburgh participate in art projects to benefit the American Heart Association and the American Cancer Society, and paint cartoon graphics on the examining room doors at Children's Hospital.

In addition, students in the industrial design technology program at the Art Institute of Pittsburgh designed and built background props that were used at a benefit dinner for the homeless.

When these students aren't giving of themselves, or using their talents to raise money for worthy causes, they have their eyes toward the future.

And, judging from the successes of past graduates, the future looks very bright for these young men and women.

This year, two former students of the Pittsburgh Beauty Academy—Arnold Zegarelli and Philip Pelusi—are among the first six career training school graduates who have been inducted into the newly created Hall of Fame at the Pennsylvania Association of Private School Administrators.

Mr. Zegarelli was one of the Pittsburgh Beauty Academy's first graduates. After graduating in 1958, he has worked diligently to perfect his talents. Today, Mr. Zegarelli enjoys the reputation of one of the best platform stylists in the country.

Since Mr. Pelusi graduated from the academy in 1962, he has undertaken the challenge of further developing his styling talents as well as his business talents. Today, he is the owner of 10 beauty salons in the Pittsburgh area.

Mr. Pelusi also had the recent honor of being a guest in Japan which enabled him to share some of his styling tips while picking up a few from the Japanese.

Another student who received the honor of inclusion in the Hall of Fame at the Pennsylvania Association of Private School Administrators is Kathy Grubb.

Ms. Grubb, a 1980 graduate of the Art Institute of Pittsburgh, began her career as assistant art director at Gray, Baumgarten, Layport Advertising in Mt. Lebanon, PA. Today, she is vice president of that advertising firm.

Let me just briefly tell you about four other former students of the Art Institute of Pittsburgh:

Kelly Freas, a 1951 graduate, developed the carefree Alfred E. Newman for Mad magazine;

Tom Wilson, a 1955 graduate, created the luckless Ziggy cartoon character;

J. Robert Teringo, a 1956 graduate, is associate art director for National Geographic;

And, Vince Manino, a 1979 graduate, is chief photographer for United Press International.

There are six more successful career training school graduates I'd like to tell you about while I still have the floor because they were inducted into the Hall of Fame at the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools this year.

Fritz Gerlach graduated from the Nashville Auto Diesel College more than 30 years ago and was inspired to continue his education.

While attending the University of Kentucky, Mr. Gerlach earned 80 percent of the money used to pay his expenses by relying on the skills he learned in Nashville as an automobile and truck mechanic.

Mr. Gerlach began his career as a field service engineer with Cummins Engine Co., and, today, he is vice president for marketing with Cummins Atlantic in Charlotte, NC. His major responsibility is directing the company's overall marketing effort in North and South Carolina, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, and parts of West Virginia.

Mr. Gerlach is also a member of the Nashville Auto Diesel College Hall of Fame.

William Romius traveled from Mississippi to St. Louis at the age of 16 to live with his grandmother.

Having never attended school, he immediately entered the fourth grade and remained in school until entering the Army at 21 years of age.

After his Army service, Mr. Romius returned to complete high school. He later completed the electronic technology program at the Basic Institute of Technology in St. Louis and enrolled in the Logan College of Chiropractic Medicine.

Today, he operates a private chiropractic clinic and is doing research at St. Lousi University for an electronic device to help patients with spinal cord injuries.

Garey Lee Womack graduated from the Refridgeration School in Phoeniz, AZ, and went to work for the cities of Lubbock and El Paso, TX.

In 1980, he joined Honeywell, Inc., to become a heating, ventilation and air-conditioning technician and was one of the developers of the corporation's restaurants business unit which is the largest such service contractor in the United States. It currently operates in 17 locations and employs over 120 people.

Today, Mr. Womack is the national operations manager for the unit. He personally interviews and hires all supervisors and support staff for the unit and assists them in their job development.

Mr. Womack has also received the Honeywell stock recognition award. This honor is given to a very select number of employees to "recognize and employee whose past and projected future contributions are critical to Honeywell's continued success."

Duane Wiens graduated from the advertising design program at the Colorado Intitute of Art more than 20 years ago.

In 1967, he cofounded Unit 1, Inc., which is today one of Colorado's major corporate and institutional design houses.

By 1978, Mr. Wiens had moved on to start Matrix International which creates corporate identity programs—including trademark design, annual reports, brochures, and posters. He has also worked to create coordinated images for resort and housing projects.

Matrix International has received local and national design awards from organizations such as the Public Relations Society of America and Printing Industries of America, and the company's work has been reproduced in numerous trade publications and exhibited in the Colorado International Invitational Poster Exhibition.

The agency also donates its services to community organizations. Some of the beneficiaries of this ongoing effort are Children's Hospital, Junior League of Denver, Rockefeller University, and the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Colorado.

Paul Whinnie took his training from the Art Institute of Pittsburgh and decided to train other young people.

Following his graduation from the specialized technology in visual communications program at the Institute, Mr. Whinnie joined the faculty of the Greater Johnstown Area Vocational-Technical School in 1975. He teaches a course in commercial art which includes the study of typography, graphic design, color theory, airbrush, layout and design, and computer-generated design.

While teaching full time, Mr. Whinnie continued his education at the University of Pittsburgh's Johnstown campus where he earned a bachelor's degree in education and a master's equivalency certificate in vocational education.

When he is not working with his students, Mr. Whinnie maintains a freelance graphic design studio and an affiliated silk-screen printing operation, coordinates Vocational Industrial Club of America competitions at the district and State levels, and advises the clubs at the national level.

Mr. Whinnie has also taught at the University of Pittsburgh's Johnstown campus and at Mount Aloysius Junior College. And, in 1984, he received the Outstanding Art Educator Award from the Pennsylvania Art Education Association.

While growing up in South Dakota, Terry Avon Redlin planned to eventually work as a forest ranger, but a motorcyle accident and the loss of one leg during his teens forced him to change his plans.

He decided to attend the College of Associated Arts in St. Paul, MN.

Mr. Redlin spent 25 years working in the commercial art field as a layout artist, graphic designer, illustrator, and art director.

His breakthrough came in 1977 when his painting, "Winter Snows" appeared on the cover of the Farmer magazine. Since then, he has won the Minnesota Duck Stamp competition twice and the State trout stamp contest.

In 1982, Mr. Redlin placed second in the Federal Duck Stamp competition, and the following year he was named Artist of the Year for Ducks Unlimited, National and Minnesota.

He has also branched out to designing limited edition collector plates and received the National Association of Limited Edition Dealers' Lithograph of the Year Award in 1988 and 1989.

Also in 1988, a book of Mr. Redlin's work received a certificate of merit in the Printing Industries of America Competition.

With all of these successes, Mr. Redlin still makes time to support his first love—the wilderness.

He has raised over $10 million for wildlife projects, and, in 1986, Mr. Redlin was named Conservationist of the Year-Magnum Donor by the Minnesota Waterfowl Association for his gifts of entire print editions.

Mr. Redlin has also donated $900,000 to the Courage Center in Golden Valley, MN, a nonprofit organization that helps individuals with disabilities and sponsors rehabilitation programs.

All of these men and women had the opportunity to receive the needed career training to follow their dreams. They have used this training as the basic foundation on which they have built extremely successful careers while, at the same time, making significant contributions to their communities.

If not for the student loan programs, some of these successes might never have occurred.

Yes, there are problems with our student loan programs but these students and schools should not be singled out and made the scapegoats for all of them.

When we take up reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 next year, we must ensure that every eligible student has the opportunity to follow his or her dreams and to pursue the educational program of his or her choice.

Reducing educational access is not an effective solution. Such actions will not solve any of the existing problems and will most likely create many new ones.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX ON THE OIL INDUSTRY (H.R. 5843)

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Excess Profits Tax Act of 1990 (H.R. 5843), and I invite my colleagues to back this measure. Over the last 2 months we have seen the price of oil more than double ostensibly as a result of Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait. Fears of a shooting war breaking out in the Middle East that could disrupt the world's oil supply have increased prices even further. The main beneficiary of this price increase has been the oil industry. Oil producers have realized profits far in excess of those they had anticipated for this period, and realizing this, middlemen and retailers have raised the price of oil even further. While those in the oil industry have seen their incomes jump in the last 2 months, our Nation's consumers and businesses have borne the brunt of these price increases at the pump. Lower and middle-income families are especially hard hit by the recent jump in oil prices.

This excess profits measure would help to deter and redistribute the huge profits oil companies are now realizing. Specifically, excess profits in the oil industry would be taxed at a rate of no more than 40 percent for a period of 3 years. At the same time, exploration and development of oil resources would be encouraged under the provisions of this bill. Mr. Speaker, in these times of fear and uncertainty over the situation in the Persian Gulf, while our courageous Americans are stationed in the Saudi Arabian deserts to protect our interests, it is only right that those who inure undue profits from this crisis also contribute to our country. H.R. 5843 does just that.

Mr. Speaker, I request that the full text of my bill be inserted at this point in the RECORD:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to income taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 7—EXCESS PROFITS TAX

"Sec. 1571. Imposition of tax.
"Sec. 1572. Definitions.
"Sec. 1573. Adjustments to income for years in the emergency period.
"Sec. 1574. Excess profits deduction.
"Sec. 1575. Energy plowback deduction.

"SEC. 1571. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In addition to the other taxes imposed by this subtitle, there is hereby imposed on the income of every corporation engaged in the production of petroleum and petroleum products for each taxable year which ends or begins during the emergency period, a tax equal to 40 percent of the excess profits taxable income for such taxable year.

"(b) TAXABLE YEARS PARTLY IN THE EMERGENCY PERIOD.—In the case of a taxable year which begins before the emergency period or ends after the emergency period, the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be an amount equal to 40 percent of the excess profits taxable income for the taxable year multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is the number of days within the emergency period and the denominator of which is the total number of days in the taxable year.

"SEC. 1572. DEFINITIONS.

"(a) EMERGENCY PERIOD.—For the purposes of this chapter, the term 'emergency period' means the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this chapter.

"(b) BASE PERIOD.—For the purposes of this chapter, the term 'base period' means the period beginning January 1, 1986, and ending on December 31, 1988.

"(c) PETROLEUM AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS.—For the purposes of this chapter, the term 'petroleum and petroleum products' means any crude oil, gasoline, kerosene, fuel oil, or home heating oil extracted or produced by any corporation doing business in the United States.

"(d) EXCESS PROFITS TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'excess profits taxable income' means taxable income for the taxable year (computed with the adjustments specified in section 1573) reduced by the sum of—

"(1) the excess profits deduction for the taxable year; plus

"(2) the energy plowback deduction for the taxable year.

"SEC. 1573. ADJUSTMENTS TO INCOME FOR YEARS IN THE EMERGENCY PERIOD.

"For the purposes of this chapter, in determining the taxable income of a corporation for a taxable year ending or beginning in the emergency period, the following adjustments shall be made:

"(1) DIVIDENDS RECEIVED.—The deduction for dividends received shall apply, without limitation, to all dividends on stock of all corporations, except that no deduction for dividends received shall be allowed with respect to dividends on stock of foreign personal holding companies or dividends on stock is not a capital asset.

"(2) GAINS AND LOSSES FROM SALES OR EXCHANGES OF CAPITAL ASSETS.—There shall be excluded gains and losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets.

"(3) INCOME FROM RETIREMENT OR DISCHARGE OF BONDS, ETC.—There shall be excluded income derived from the retirement or discharge by the taxpayer of any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than 6 months, including in the case the issuance was at a premium, the amount includible in gross income for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge.

"(4) DEDUCTIONS ON ACCOUNT OF RETIREMENT OR DISCHARGE OF BONDS, ETC.—If during the taxable year the taxpayer retires or discharges any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, if the obligation of the taxpayer has been outstanding for more than 6 months, the following deductions for such taxable year shall not be allowed:

"(A) the deduction allowable under section 162 for expenses paid or incurred in connection with such retirement or discharge;

"(B) the deduction for losses allowable by reason of such discharge or retirement; or

"(C) in case the issuance was at a discount, the amount deductible for such year solely because of such retirement or discharge.

"(5) RECOVERY OF BAD DEBTS.—There shall be excluded income attributable to the recovery of a bad debt if the deduction of such debt was allowable from gross income for any taxable year ending before the effective date of this chapter or if such debt was properly charged to a reserve for bad debts during any such table year.

"SEC. 1574. EXCESS PROFITS DEDUCTION.

"(a) COMPUTATION.—The excess profits deduction for a taxable year shall be the greater of the following:

"(1) 100 percent of the average base period taxable income, or

"(2) an amount equal to the total of the following amounts;

"(A) 10 percent of the first $10,000,000 of invested capital,

"(B) 9 percent of the next $9,000,000 of invested capital, and

"(C) 8 percent of invested capital exceeding $20,000,000.

"(b) AVERAGE BASE PERIOD TAXABLE INCOME.—The average base period taxable income shall be determined by computing the base period taxable income for each month in the base period, the highest and lowest aggregate of 6 months taxable income shall be dropped and the remaining sum of 24 months shall be divided by 2 to obtain a base year figure for the purposes of this chapter.

"(c) APPLICATION OF CHAPTER.—The provision of this chapter shall apply to all corporations which were in existence during the entire or any part of the base period or the emergency period as defined in this chapter.

"SEC. 1575. ENERGY PLOWBACK DEDUCTION.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'energy plowback deduction' means the amount paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year (with respect to areas within the United States or a possession of the United States) for—

"(1) intangible drilling and development costs to which section 263(c) applies or ascertaining the existence, location, extent, or quality of any deposit of crude oil or natural gas,

"(2) the construction, reconstruction, erection, or acquisition of the following items but only if the original use of such items begins with such taxpayer—

"(A) depreciable assets used for—

"(i) the exploration for or the development or production of oil or gas (including development or production from oil shale),

"(ii) converting oil shale, coal, or liquid hydrocarbons into oil or gas, or

"(iii) refining oil or gas (but not beyond the primary product stage),

"(B) pipelines for gathering or transmitting oil or gas, and facilities (such as pumping stations) directly related to the use of such pipelines, or

"(3) secondary or tertiary recovery of oil or gas.

"(b) LIMITATION.—The amount of the energy plowback deduction for any taxable year may not exceed 25 percent of the excess profits taxable income for such year (determined without regard to the energy plowback deduction)."

(b) The table of chapters for such subtitle A is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Chapter 7. Excess profits tax."

(c) The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN SUPPORT OF THE UNITED STATES-MEXICO FREE TRADE AGREEMENT: PRIVATIZATION PROVIDES OPPORTUNITY FOR UNITED STATES INVESTMENT

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, the world is experiencing a dramatic time in history. The Soviet Union and Eastern Europe are turning toward free societies and free markets. The European Community is breaking down internal barriers to spur free trade and economic development. The world is becoming increasingly interdependent as businesses expand across borders and international trade escalates. These events indicate the efficiencies and benefits resulting from free markets and free trade.

Mexico is actively participating in the global transformation toward free markets to improve economic growth. The United States has the opportunity to encourage this transformation and to share in the benefits of open markets. A free trade agreement between the United States and Mexico holds out the prospect of increased economic growth for both countries.

The Salinas government has embarked on an extensive program of economic reform by reducing the Government's role in the economy. A large component of the reform is privatization of Government-controlled industries. By the end of 1989, about 650 federally managed companies, or "parastatals" had been dismantled, consolidated, or sold. Of the 219 companies that have been sold, Mexican groups bought 91 percent and 9 percent were bought by foreigners or joint ventures.

According to the United States International Trade Commission, the Mexican Government has undertaken a major program of deregulation. As part of this program, the Government has completed, or is in the process of preparing, deregulatory measures affecting most areas of the economy, including the financial system, insurance, standards for containers, agriculture, fishing, motor carriers, multimodal transportation, the petrochemical industry, refined petroleum products, rules regulating transfer of technology, telecommunications terminal equipment, customs brokers, and commodities—sugar, coffee, and cocoa.

The Government of Mexico's decision to reduce the Government's participation in the management of industries opens up a number of opportunities for United States investors. For example, Aviacion, the country's largest air carrier, permitted participation by a number of new United States and other foreign investors. Also, the Mexican Government has outlined a plan for privatizing Mexico's 56-percent share of Telmex, the Government-controlled telephone monopoly.

Mexico's privatization efforts will provide profitable opportunities for United States investment. Privatization will improve the efficiency of the Mexican economy and provide healthy markets for United States exports. A free trade agreement will allow American businesses to take advantage of the investment opportunities and healthy export markets provided by Mexico's privatization and deregulation efforts. The competition from United States firms would create incentives for the Mexican Government to further privatize inefficient state-owned enterprises and for Mexican businessmen to channel capital and labor into more productive industries.

A free trade agreement would encourage Mexico's drive toward capitalism and solidify a democratic ally on our southern border. It would also contribute to creating the North American Free Trade Area, stretching first from Canada to Mexico and eventually including the democratic countries of the Caribbean and Central America. This alliance would surpass the European Community and dominate Japan.

Both partners benefit from free trade agreements. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor H.R. 4680, the Mexico-United States Trade Act, introduced by Representative KOLBE. Congress should support this effort to initiate negotiations for a trade agreement with Mexico that reduces and ultimately eliminates trade barriers.

MEAT AND POULTRY INSPECTIONS

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to clarify that the inspection of meat and poutry products offered for import into the United States is to be conducted by U.S. personnel. My colleague Mr. DORGAN has joined me in introducing this legislation in the House and Senator DASCHLE has introduced a similar version in the Senate.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture [USDA] wants to eliminate meat and poultry inspections at the Canadian border as an experiment to help implement the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement.

Before the Free-Trade Agreement was adopted all trucks carrying meat into the United States from Canada were required to stop for inspection. If meat was found unfit for consumption it was refused entry.

Under the so called streamlined inspection plan that has since gone into effect only trucks preselected by computer in Canada are required to stop for inspection. Shipments not computer picked come into this country without stopping at an import facility. The USDA's latest proposal would literally eliminate border inspections all together. I frankly did not think much of USDA's no inspection proposal when I first heard about it a few months ago and I think even less of it now. It is very possible that the current streamlined inspection system is not only diminishing consumers confidence but in fact endangering the health of American people. The proposals to virtually eliminate any border inspection will only make this worse.

USDA data shows that 703 million pounds of meat entered Montana from Canada in 1989. Given Canada's status as the No. 1 exporter and the fact that it has the worst refused U.S. entry rate, it seems wrong to continue the current streamlined system with Canadians picking the lots to inspect and ludicrous to move as USDA has proposed, to a system of no inspection whatsoever. It seems to me that any computer preselection should be done by the United States.

A few weeks back Representative DORGAN, Senator DASCHLE, and myself sent a letter to USDA requesting them to voluntarily improve and tighten the current system of meat inspection that would include the following: First, determine why so much meat is not meeting U.S. standards now at Montana and North Dakota entries; second, evaluate the current Canadian meat inspection system to provide a basis for any future experiments with United States food safety as USDA is now proposing; and third, USDA should consider reinstating the system that was abandoned in 1988 where all Canadian trucks carrying meat into the United States would be subject to inspection at the border. As to today we have not heard back from USDA on any of these proposals. As a result we are introducing this legislation.

In my view and the view of the majority of my constituents, all meat and poultry entering this country should be inspected. The purpose of the Free-Trade Agreement was to create an equitable marketplace between the United States and Canada. It should not be used as an opportunity to let inferior food into the United States. It is still my hope that as this legislation moves through Congress over the next few days that my colleagues and I can convince USDA to adopt a different inspection system that restores consumers confidence.

ISRAEL MUST NEGOTIATE A LASTING PEACE

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, once again the world has watched in horror at the consequences of hatred in the battlefield in Jerusalem. Monday, October 8, marked the worst violence in Jerusalem since the beginning of the intifada 34 months ago.

After Jewish worshipers were attacked with rocks and bottles at the Wailing Wall below the Temple Mount, Israeli security forces opened fire on the demonstrators, killing 19 and wounding more than 100.

Regardless of who is responsible for starting this incident, the bloody response is an outrage. The United States supported a U.N. Security Council resolution approved last Friday condemning this violent incident and calling for a full investigation by the U.N. Secretary General. This is an action I encourage and endorse.

Since August 2, the United States has directed its attention away from the grave events within Israel and the occupied territories to focus on suppressing Saddam Hussein's bloody and unjustified aggression. Yet, we cannot overlook the fact that while there are unprecedented international efforts to avoid war in the Persian Gulf, 20 Palestians are dying for every 1 Israeli in this struggle for self-determination in the occupied territories of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights, and East Jeruslem.

It is troubling that the Israeli Government has decided not to comply with the provisions of the U.N. resolution and refuses to cooperate in a thorough investigation of this affair. I concur in the judgment that by refusing to cooperate, the Israeli Government will inflict further damage upon itself as well as in its relationships with both hostile and friendly nations.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I addressed the House to decry Israel's violations of basic human rights. These violations include administrative detention for alleged security reasons, the closing of schools, and illegal search and seizure as well as the demolition of Palestinian homes. I also condemned the violence that is tearing apart this region and urged that the United States use all reasonable power and influence to open a dialog among all involved parties.

Since that time, this crisis has intensified. The throwing of stones and bottles onto worshipers at the Wailing Wall is intolerable. So too is the closing of the Temple Mount, one of Islam's holiest shrines, for the first time in 700 years.

In light of our commitment to peace and security in the Middle East, the United States has deployed over 200,000 American men and women to Saudi Arabia, and has invested billions of dollars in the promotion of a safe and prosperous future for this region.

Peace in the Middle East will not come without cost, as Operation Desert Shield has proven to our Nation and the many contributing nations who have joined this U.S.-backed effort. Peace also has not come freely in Europe, or South Africa, or between a still-divided Korea, but both the pains and rewards of these nations' efforts are apparent as their struggles for peace surge forward.

Given the importance of a Middle East peace settlement to global stability, I call upon Israel to immediately open a dialog with the Palestinian people. If this does not occur, I believe that now is the time for the United States, with its traditions of democracy and self-determination, to tie our continued economic support of Israel to its willingness to meet with the Palestinians in the interest of peace.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO MAJ. GEN. RICHARD E. COLLIER

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, on November 4, 1990, Maj. Gen. Richard E. Collier will be honored at a change of command ceremony at Fort Belvoir, VA, on the occasion of his retirement after 33 years of service as an active and reserve officer. He will be awarded the Distinguished Service Medal in recognition of his outstanding contributions as commanding general of the 310th Theater Army Area Command [TAACOM] from October 1986 to November 1990 and for his dedicated and unselfish service to the Nation and the U.S. Army Reserve. General Collier's exceptional achievements and devotion to duty have earned him national recognition for his leadership in the NATO environment and for management excellence in improving his command's performance and mobilization readiness.

The 310th TAACOM, a high priority Army Reserve unit located at Fort Belvoir, VA, exercises command and control of 37 combat service support units in peacetime, including three major subordinate headquarters—the 55th Support Center, 300th Area Support Group, and the 510th Area Support Group. The 310th Command structure is comprised of some 4,500 officers and enlisted personnel located at 18 Army Reserve centers in Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware. In wartime, the 310th would also command more than 300 subordinate Capstone units if called upon to meet its mission responsibilities.

The 310th continuously revises and updates its numerous operational plans in preparation for their postmobilization mission and utilizes many of its Capstone units in applicable United States and overseas training exercises. During the past 4 years, the command participated in readiness-related exercises in Europe and the United States such as Able Archer, Crested Eagle, Golden Sabre, Logex, Reforger, Wintex, et cetera.

As a result of General Collier's leadership, the 310th's capabilities have been significantly improved to meet both its peacetime and wartime missions. He placed significant command emphasis on the unit's wartime mission by taking actions to strengthen the Capstone program, improve and foster goodwill and cooperation among our NATO allies, ensure enhanced logistical support for wartime contingencies, and developed outstanding support and cooperation between his unit and active components in Europe. At the same time, General Collier devoted his energies to improving the training readiness and mobilization capabilities of his peacetime units. To this end, realistic and rigorous training, supply, maintenance, marksmanship, personnel strength, and budget and financial management programs were instituted at his direction. These programs are now paying dividends with the recent mobilization of four units of The 310th TAAACOM ordered to active duty by Secretary of Defense Cheney as part of "Operation Desert Shield" in Saudi Arabia. General Collier's continuing interest and concern for the welfare of his soldiers, his integrity and moral leadership have endeared him to the members of this command.

General Collier was instrumental in the planning, development, and execution of the logistical support for Reforger 87—return of forces to Germany—the largest deployment of U.S. forces to Europe since World War II. Also noteworthy was the cooperative working relationships established by General Collier and the 310th TAACOM with our NATO allies in the United Kingdom, Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, and Denmark concerning host nation support and matters involving mutual logistical support in the event of hostilities

General Collier was born in Richmond, VA on December 29, 1934 and was commissioned as a second lieutenant on June 11, 1957. He served on active duty as an infantry platoon leader and instructor from November 1957 to September 1959. His principal Army Reserve assignments include duty as an aide-de-camp to a division commander, as an S–1 and a division G–4. He commanded a company, two battalions, and a brigade with the 80th Training Division. In 1982, General Collier was selected as assistant division commander of the 80th Training Division before becoming commanding general of the 310th TAACOM in 1986.

General Collier is a graduate of the infantry officer basic and advanced courses, the command and General Staff College, the Senior Commander Chemical Officer Course, and the U.S. Army War College. His decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, Armed Forces Reserve Medal (2d award), Army Reserve Components Achievement Medal (4th award), Army Service Ribbon, and the USAR Overseas Ribbon.

His civilian education includes a bachelor's degree in chemistry from the Virginia Military Institute and a master's degree in chemistry from the University of Virginia. In the civilian life, General Collier is president and principal stockholder of R.E. Collier, Inc., a Richmond general contracting and land development company, which specializes in residential and light commercial construction and real estate development.

General Collier resides in Richmond with his wife, the former Sarah Hicks, also a native of Richmond. They have five grown children: Sonya, Richard E., Jr., Stephanie Ann, Robin Chairman, and Brian Batten.

As a fellow Virginian keenly interested in a strong Army Reserve, it gives me great pleasure to congratulate General Collier for a job well done. I know my colleagues will want to join me in wishing General Collier and his wife Sarah, great success, health, and happiness in the years ahead.

A TRIBUTE TO CHRISTINE CAROLINE DRESSELHOUSE HEYDLAUFF

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, throughout history, man has paid tribute to women who have led their families with a combination of strength, intellect, love, and undying commitment to strong moral values. These matriarchs are revered for their individual accomplishments as well as the achievements of those whose lives were molded and guided by them. I rise today in honor of just such a woman on the occasion of her 80th birthday, Christine Heydlauff of Chelsea, MI. This is not a woman you will read about in your newspaper or view on the evening news. Yet, she symbolizes the kind of person that has made this country great in much the same way that more celebrated matriarchs have been shining beacons for their families to learn and prosper from. In celebration of this event, her grandson, Dale Heydlauff, has written the following accolade to her. I ask that it be made a part of the RECORD:

A HOMAGE TO MY GRANDMOTHER

(By Dale E. Heydlauff)

Christine Caroline Dresselhouse was born in her family home in Sharon Township, Michigan on October 28, 1910. The youngest of four children, Christine was raised to respect the land and the bountiful fruits it could provide with hard work and perseverance. She was also instilled with a strong belief in the value of a good education. She walked a mile and a half to school each day, sometimes facing severe temperatures, so that she could learn the basic skills needed to excel in rural Michigan. When not studying, her parents taught her the myriad jobs required to run a farm and household. These lessons would prove invaluable to her later in life when she continued in the tradition of the German immigrants who had settled in this area by becoming a farmer's wife and mother.

On November 23, 1932, Christine married Clifford Heydlauff, a farmer from Grass Lake, Michigan. Throughout their life together, Christine and Clifford toiled with the land, carefully culling all the land would offer in order to feed their family and earn a modest living. Over the years, Christine gave birth to four children, Jerald, James, Ned and Ann. Each of her children would grow to embrace the same values of hard work and dedication to the land and the family that had shaped her life as a child and adult.

Christine Heydlauff is a strong willed woman who has overcome considerable adversity in her life. She has had to bury all of her siblings and her loving husband, whose difficult death from cancer in 1973 was a crushing blow. These painful experiences have not tainted her love for life or dimmed the sparkle she shares with those around her. Her talents are many and varied. She makes the best pies, cakes and cookies of anyone I know. She can create anything out of cloth. She can complete a crossword puzzle faster than anyone alive. She is well read and keeps current on world events, which contributes to lively discussions and debates when we get together. Her life has been governed by a commitment to Christian values and a fierce devotion to her family. She has been and continues to be a radiant example to those who are fortunate to know her, and displays a solid resolve to face life with a stubborn confidence that she can conquer anything in her path.

Despite this tough veneer, Christine has a heart of gold and a real softness for children. She is patient and kind. She is generous and a faithful friend. She is a beautiful woman, both physically and spiritually. These admirable characteristics would serve us all well if we could only acquire them. And our lives would be enriched by emulating her ways.

Happy Birthday Grandma. I love you and am proud to be your grandson.

TRIBUTE TO ART BLAKEY—THE NATION'S LEGENDARY JAZZ DRUMMER

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I inform my colleagues of the passing of the 71-year old legendary jazz drummer, Art Blakey. He was a drummer whose band nurtured generations of leading jazz players. For the majority of his career, Mr. Blakey did his drumming for the Jazz Messengers, the band that came together under his leadership in the early 1950's, which included pianist Horce Silver, trumpeter Kenny Dorham and saxophonist Hank Mobley. The band toured all over the United States for the next three decades, including a White House performance in 1981. The 1981 Newport Jazz Festival devoted an evening to "The Blakey Legacy," in which the drummer was joined by the players who had been with his band during the previous quarter-century.

Dizzy Gillespie, a giant of be-bop, once described him as "the volcano" of be-bop drummers. He was considered in the top echelon that included such drummers as Max Roach and Buddy Rich. In a television film about Art's career, pianist Walter Davis, an alumus of the Jazz Messengers, said "I think no one in jazz has brought more great musicians to music than Art Blakey."

Art Blakey was a prodigious and versatile artist, and band leader, who appeared on stages around the world. He was most supportive in urging passage of House Concurrent Resolution 57, expressing the sense of Congress that jazz is a national American treasure. He was utterly devoted in his commitment to the preservation and support of this great art form.

Art Blakey truly exemplified the spirit of this magnificant music that he loved and lived for, and his contributions to it will be the most lasting evidence of enormous talent, and he will never be forgotten.

The following article on Art Blakey's life and accomplishments was printed in the New York Times. It speaks to the extraordinary life and times of this artist and I would like to share them with my colleagues in the RECORD:

[From The New York Times, Oct. 17, 1990]

ART BLAKEY, JAZZ GREAT IS DEAD; A DRUMMER AND BAND LEADER, 71

(By Peter Watrous)

The drummer and band leader Art Blakey, one of the most influential figures in jazz for the last 40 years, died yesterday at St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Center. He was 71 years old and lived in Manhattan.

He died of lung cancer, said a hospital spokeswoman, Barbara Cron.

Mr. Blakey, who until recently was leading his band, the Jazz Messengers, played with a mixture of powerful abandon and precise control. An extradordinary drummer, he would turn each piece into an epic voyage, starting out calmly, slowly packing the tune with texture after texture, always controlling the dynamics until a thunderous barrage released the tension. Mr. Blakey shaped each performance by manipulating the texture for his soloists as well; a result was a set of performances that always mixed the excitement of improvisation with a real understanding of the personalities and capabilities of the musicians involved.

"Art was an original," said the drummer Max Roach. "He's the only drummer whose time I recognize immediately. And his signature style was amazing; we used to call him 'Thunder.' When I first met him on 52nd Street in 1944, he already had the polyrhythmic thing down. Art was the perhaps the best at maintaining independence with all four limbs. He was doing it before anybody was. And he was a great man, which influenced everybody around him."

A ONE-MAN UNIVERSITY

While Mr. Blakey was a gifted and important drummer, his contributions to American music as a band leader and talent scout are equally important. Mr. Blakey, like no other band leader for the last 40 years, had acted as a one-man university for young musicians. A partial list of the musicians he hired resembles a history of jazz from the 1950's to the present. They included the trumpeters Kenny Dorham, Clifford Brown, Bill Hardman, Lee Morgan, Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw, Wynton Marsalis, Wallace Roney and Terence Blanchard; the saxophonists Lou Donaldson, Jackie McLean, Hank Mobley, Johnny Griffin, Wayne Shorter, Gary Bartz, Bobby Watson, Branford Marsalis, Donald Harrison, Kenny Garrett and Javon Jackson, and the pianists Horace Silver, Bobby Timmons, Cedar Walton, John Hicks, James Williams, Mulgrew Miller and Bennie Green.

"It's like the door is closed on a generation of musicians that were developed through Art's band," said Mr. McLean, who first played with Mr. Blakey in the early 1950's. "Even when I was with Miles Davis, Art was the strength of the band. That was the first band I was in, and ever since then I've been trying to lead my band the way he has his."

The trumpeter Wynton Marsalis, who joined the band as a 17-year-old in 1979, said: "Art was important to me because he always displayed the maximum belief in integrity and quality. Even more important, he represents the most mature man our society can develop because he was making life easier for everyone else. He provided the context for musicians to play and develop. And since we weren't on his level, he'd subject himself to us so we'd learn. First he just let the musicians play, but then he'd offer subtle advice, but he'd never discourage you: it was always positive reinforcement. He knew that there's a price to be paid to develop in this music, and he did his best to help us."

As a band leader, Mr. Blakey had a powerful influence on the way modern jazz is played, codifying the innovations of the bebop movement and integrating the drums into small-group arrangements that became the leading examples of what was called hard bop. Relying on some of the best arrangers and composers of his time, Mr. Blakey managed to stamp his own identity on his work from his first notable band in 1955 to his last. Tough and based in blues, his bands' arrangements were full of dynamic change and always swung hard. As a result, Mr. Blakey's bands were always popular, and from the 50's on Mr. Blakey was one of jazz's most important figures commercially.

"He came up with a new way to interpret the blues and another way of building the ensamble, where the drums were more orchestrated," Mr. Marsalis said. "That sound is the sound you hear today, particularly with many of the younger musicians. And he had his own particular brand of swing, which makes him important by itself."

Art Blakey was born in Pittsburgh. By the seventh grade he was playing music regularly, and he quickly realized that drumming was a way out of the grinding industrial work prevalent in the area. He joined Mary Lou Williams's band in New York in 1942 and then played the next two years with Fletcher Henderson's orchestra. In 1944, on the urging of Dizzy Gillespie, he joined the singer Billy Eckstine's band, which was a haven for be-bop modernists.

"The first time I heard Art, I said, 'Oh, man, let's get that guy,'" Mr. Gillespie recalled. "He had the knack of knowing when to play loud or soft, and when he played the whole band would lift right off the bandstand. He'd shout like somebody in a sanctified church. He was truly one of our greats."

In the late 1940's, Mr. Blakey brought together a 17-piece band called the Jazz Messengers—a name he would keep for his band throughout his career—and traveled to Africa. When he returned, he continued a series of recordings and performances with Thelonious Monk and Miles Davis that again helped to define modern jazz. In 1955, Mr. Blakey joined forces with Horace Silver, Hank Mobley and Kenny Dorham under the name Jazz Messengers, and he performed and recorded with that group until the late 1980's.

An important element in Mr. Blakey's success was the relationship he had with the Blue Note record label; between 1955 and 1961 he recorded a series of brilliant records that document the succession of his bands. Starting with "The Jazz Messengers at the Cafe Bohemia," recorded in 1955 with Kenny Dorham and Hank Mobley, the label released about 30 albums, including some made by his most famous band, featuring Freddie Hubbard on trumpet, Wayne Shorter on saxophone, Curtis Fuller on trombone, Cedar Walton on piano and Jymie Merritt on bass.

A RENAISSANCE IN THE 80'S

In the 1980's, Mr. Blakey underwent a renaissance. His bands constantly turned out some of the best young musicians working. Not only did Mr. Marsalis and his brother, Branford, herald a new age of jazz, but Mr. Blanchard and Mr. Harrison went on to form their own bands; the trumpeter Wallace Roney spent several years with Mr. Blakey, as did the pianists Mulgrew Miller, Bennie Green and Jeff Keezer. For many young musicians, Mr. Blakey's band was a lifeline back to an era of jazz verities. In the late 1970's and early 1980's, it was one of the few places a young musician could apprentice with a veteran. "When jazz was in danger of dying out, there was still a scene," said the young drummer Cindy Blackman. "Art kept it going."

Mr. Mclean said: "I loved him dearly as a man. Of all the bands I played with—and I got a great deal from Charles Mingus and Miles Davis—he taught me the most. Not just how to be a musician, but about being a man and keeping a sense of responsibility."

Ms. Blackman added: "He adopted me like his daughter. He taught me a lot of things about drummers and music. But as important, he helped me when I was just starting out and not working too often. He'd ask me to sit in when he was playing, he helped me if I needed money. His influence on all us young musicians is incalculable."

Mr. Blakey is survived by four sons, Takashi Buhaina and Kenji Buhaina, both of Manhattan, Gamal Buhaina of Waitsfield, Vt., and Akira Buhaina of Quebec, and four daughters, Gwendolyn Blakey and Evelyn Blakey, both of Manhattan, Jackie Blakey of Florida, and Sakeena Buhaina of San Jose.

THE CRISIS IN THE PERSIAN GULF

HON. BUTLER DERRICK

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, many of our country's outstanding military leaders throughout history have been natives of the South. We have supplied the bravest soldiers, airmen, sailors, and civilians to the defense of the United States since the Revolutionary War days. Many of the units now serving in Saudi Arabia have trained in South Carolina and their loved ones at home know firsthand the sacrifices that are necessary to keep our military equipped financially and morally. I was not surprised, therefore, to read the reasonable analysis and wise counsel of Anderson Attorney William Watkins as recently published in the Anderson Independent Mail. For the benefit of the Members of this body, I would like to share with you the text of Mr. Watkins' editorial of October 10, 1990:

GULF CRISIS CALLS FOR SACRIFICE

(By William L. Watkins)

This country has no choice but to take the Persian Gulf crisis extremely seriously. We—our country, our allies, our freedom and independence—have not been so threatened since 1941, and this threat may be even worse than then. If Saddam Hussein is allowed to take Saudi Arabia, he will take the entire Middle East. In time, he will have the atomic bomb and will use it where he will. If he is successful in dominating the oil-producing nations of the Middle East, he will have unlimited wealth because he will be able to set the cost of energy around the whole civilized world.

It may take a war to stop him. If it does, we will have to be in it. All indications are that the United States must furnish a large part of the troops and equipment, and if there is a war we will furnish part of the casualties.

This country has never lost a war when the whole civilian as well as military worked together. It has not won a war when the civilian population was not asked to make its share of sacrifices. We cannot have, as the saying is, "guns and butter." We civilians were not called upon to make sacrifices in either Korea or Vietnam wars. We did not feel we were a part of the war effort, and the boys doing the fighting probably didn't feel that we were part of the effort either. We must not make the same mistake again. We must prepare for war, and there is no way we can be sure that it will be a short war. We must make sacrifices whenever, the sacrifices will aid the fighting effort. This means very probably some rationing of critical goods and even some price controls by government if prices start to get out of line. And we must be ready to reinstitute the draft.

There cannot be a war fought without replacement troops being available. The replacements are going to come from the young men of the right age and right physical conditions of today. If they are not brought into service and given extensive military training then, if they are called in as replacements, they are unprepared sacrifices. Every Army or Marine camp that is now largely vacant because of the troops having gone to Saudi Arabia should be filled anew with reserves and National Guard troops to improve their combat preparedness and to provide the training needed by draftees. We cannot win a war without this. We must not send our troops into combat without the proper training.

Finally, the cost of this military operation—and it will be high—has got to be paid. It must be "pay as you go." We do not have enough credit left to finance it. And to pay for it, more taxes are necessary. Congress has worn out all efforts to find a tax that does not hurt anybody, or at least anybody who represents a bloc of votes or can have an influential lobbyist. The war should be financed by a tax that hurts everybody, hopefully equally. Maybe a low rate gross income tax, without any loopholes, will accomplish this. Maybe it will be a low rate "value added" tax. Or an energy tax. This would add to the cost of living but if we do not win this war, the cost of energy to us and all our allies will go out the top. Better to pay it now than later and longer. The cost of gasoline to us could still be less than is paid in other nations. Whatever the tax is, it should be so uniform that no minority, how well organized can be exempt from it. There must be no loopholes. And it must end when the need for it ends, and not spent for new programs.

SPECIES INTRODUCTION AND CONTROL ACT OF 1990

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a bill—the Species Introduction and Control Act of 1990. The bill's objectives are to prevent species extinctions, to protect dwindling populations, and to maintain biological diversity. Its focus is not on ecosystems in Brazil, but on lands and waters here in the United States.

We have intentionally and unintentionally introduced and transplanted countless exotic and native fish and wildlife species into U.S. ecosystems over the years with no established controls. In so doing we have:

First, driven some species to extinction, for example many of our indigenous western trout, and

Second, driven some species to the brink of extinction because of predation, competition, and hybridization with indigenous species, and Third, upset the natural balance in receiving ecosystems.

Guidelines and controls are desperately needed to prevent further devastations resulting from the introduction of nonindigenous species. Gypsy moths, killer bees, and carp are examples of some of the more widely known ecological disasters resulting from such introductions.

The Species Introduction and Control Act of 1990 will not ban the introduction of nonindigenous species. It will require extensive research and review of any proposed introduction in order to minimize the risk of adverse impacts. This is a reasonable and responsible approach to take, that the potential consequences from introducing a nonindigenous species be thoroughly examined before an introduction.

My bill calls for the establishment of protocols and procedures to be followed for implementing the protocols when someone proposes an introduction of a nonindigenous species into the United States.

These protocols and procedures include: publication of submitted proposals, notification to potentially affected States, establishing procedures to be followed, including requirements for an extensive literature review, and scientific research, opportunity for public comment and review, scientific peer review, and final approval by the States.

Procedures for submitting a proposal include requiring a proponent to provide an explicit statement of the objectives for the proposed introduction, and to identify other species, both indigenous and nonindigenous, which could be introduced in place of the proposed species, and also accomplish the same objective.

In addition, the bill calls for responsive follow-up measures, by requiring the proponents to put into place, monitoring and control programs, and maintain capabilities for monitoring and control efforts in order to identify any deviations from the projected behavior and distribution of the introduced species. This is a very important component, since an unforeseen impact could result and the monitoring would provide a way to detect it, and control efforts could be implemented to minimize and prevent further damage.

Concerning enforcement, both civil and criminal penalties are included, to send a clear message to violators that this is a very serious issue, and therefore, anything less than strict compliance with the established protocols and procedures, will not be accepted nor tolerated.

Uncontrolled species introductions are a huge problem. We need to get some controls in place. This bill provides a reasonable approach through the establishment of protocols and procedures, and gives the authority for final approval of any introduction of a nonindigenous species to the potentially affected States. I intend to actively pursue this issue and legislation next Congress.

COMMEMORATING LEONARD BERNSTEIN

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to one of my constituents, Leonard Bernstein. Mr. Bernstein, one of the greatest artists of our times, passed away this weekend at the age of 72. We will miss this man, who over the course of his long career, contributed profoundly to American music as a composer, conductor, teacher, writer, and pianist.

Mr. Bernstein made his career debut conducting the New York Philharmonic on November 14, 1943, when conductor Bruno Walter suddenly fell ill. That night, Leonard Bernstein, at the age of 25, dazzled audiences and critics alike. November 14, 1943, marked the first of what would be many magical and celebrated concerts.

As a highly esteemed conductor, he was in great demand. In 1957, he was chosen to be the musical director of the New York Philharmonic and he conducted the orchestra for 12 years. Mr. Bernstein was the only American to ever hold that position. He gave up that position to conduct some of the greatest orchestras in the world, including the New York, Berlin, Israel, and Vienna Philharmonic orchestras. Last year, he conducted a Christmas concert in Berlin, celebrating the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Mr. Bernstein's talents reached well beyond the realm of conducting. He was a major influence in American musical theatre with scores for numerous dramatic works such as "On the Town", "Candide", and "West Side Story". In 1971, he composed the musical theatre piece "Mass" for the opening of the Kennedy Center. He also composed a Kaddish (Jewish memorial service) to the memory of Holocaust victims and numerous symphonies, concertos, and popular songs that will continue to delight and inspire audiences around the world. We will always be grateful for these contributions.

We are especially indebted to Mr. Bernstein for bringing honor and respect to the American performing arts. Traditionally, great music has been associated with Europe. By choosing to study, teach, and work here in America, Mr. Bernstein made great strides in changing this perspective. His example will influence and inspire future American musicians.

Mr. Bernstein also has brought great pride to New York City. He achieved his first fame in New York and his music often celebrated this city. "New York, New York, it's a hell of a town," for example, is the marvelous blare that opens "On the Town." "Here we are, Christopher Street/Right in the heart of Greenwich Village," a line from "Wonderful Town," commemorates my congressional district.

I am proud to have served as Leonard Bernstein's representative in Congress. My district and the rest of the country, will surely miss this dedicated, music genius. We are thankful for his musical legacy that will continue to dazzle and inspire audiences around the world.

TRIBUTE FINALLY PAID TO CIVIL WAR HERO MICHAEL BURKE OF TROY, NY

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute today, 126 years after the fact, to an American hero.

The name of Michael Burke may not be familiar to you, but I hope my remarks today will be part of a process to correct that.

It was my privilege a few days ago to take part in a ceremony honoring Pvt. Michael Burke, who died in 1878 from complications of wounds he suffered 14 years earlier in the Civil War.

In 1864, Michael Burke of Troy, NY, and the 125th New York Volunteer Infantry, won the Congressional Medal of Honor, our Nation's highest award.

On May 12 of that year, in the Battle of Spottsylvania Courthouse in Virginia, Pvt. Burke wrestled a rebel flag from a Confederate sergeant and was immediately shot through the chest. He never really recovered from that wound. When he died, he was only 34 years old.

The 125th Regiment, however, still lives on as a Civil War living history organization. Current members of the regiment were researching unit history when they discovered that the gravemarker of Michael Burke was deteriorating badly. There wasn't even any indication that Burke had received the Congressional Medal of Honor. A special committee was established, and a bronze plaque was obtained from the Veterans' Administration.

On last Sunday, October 14, a memorial service was held at St. Mary's Cemetery in Troy, complete with flag folding, wreath laying, and musket firing by regiment members wearing Civil War uniforms. The new plaque was dedicated.

The service was followed by a reception and display of Civil War items at the Rensselaer County Historical Society in Troy.

Michael Burke's action personified the spirit and pride of the 125th Regiment, and the spirit and pride the American military has shown for over 200 years. America is the freest nation on earth because of unsung heroes like Michael Burke.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to commend Steve Alston, commander of the 125th Regiment, and Richard E. Straight, chairman of the Medal of Honor Committee, for doing such an outstanding job of making the memorial service a success.

But finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask you and all members to join me in saluting, however belatedly, Pvt. Michael Burke of Troy, NY, an American hero.

TRIBUTE TO DR. VINCENT E. REED

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join the Los Angeles chapter of the West Virginia State University Alumni Association in paying special tribute to the outstanding accomplishments of Dr. Vincent E. Reed. This is a well deserved commendation for an individual who has dedicated his talent and commitment to educational excellence and community service.

An innovative and productive educator and administrator, Vincent Reed's selfless dedication to educational achievement enabled him to build a long and illustrious career. In 1956 he began his career with the District of Columbia Public School System and served as a teacher, assistant director of the Manpower Development Training Program, assistant principal of Dunbar High School, assistant principal and principal of Woodrow Wilson High School, assistant superintendent of personnel, and executive assistant superintendent in charge of all secondary schools. Because of his superior organizational and administrative skills, he was called upon to organize and head the first security office for the D.C. school system and the newly created Office of State Administration where he served as associate superintendent. In 1976 Dr. Reed was appointed superintendent of the D.C. public school system

Vincent is a versatile, competent, and well respected administrator who has continuously demonstrated his unflagging commitment toward improving the quality of education in this country. These qualities were particularly recognized in March 1981 when Dr. Reed was appointed by President Reagan to serve as Assistant Secretary of Elementary and Secondary Education. In 1982 he joined the Washington Post as vice president for communications where he has continued his involvement in community service and charitable events.

Born in St. Louis, MO, Vincent was educated in the St. Louis public schools, Iowa University, West Virginia State College, Howard University, Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania, Virginia State College, and the University of Massachusetts.

Vincent Reed's genuine commitment and dedication to educational achievement have not gone unnoticed. He has received many public service and education awards. Among the awards and commendations he has received for his distinguished contributions are the honorary degrees of doctor of public administration by Southeastern University, doctor of humanities by West Virginia State College, doctor of humane letters by Georgetown University, doctor of humane letters by Strayer College, doctor of laws by the University of the District of Columbia, and doctor of humane letters by Harris-Stowe University. To complement his outstanding achievements, he has published articles on educational topics, is an accomplished public speaker, and serves on the board of trustees of a number of colleges and universities. He is affiliated with many education and community service organizations and is also listed in "Who's Who in America."

Dr. Vincent Reed is a living example that diligence and a commitment to excellence can indeed be rewarding. He is a man well respected and admired in the District of Columbia and around the Nation. He has accomplished a remarkable career of public service and is truly deserving of the honor bestowed on him by the West Virginia State University Alumni Association of Los Angeles. I salute his distinguished contributions and wish him continued success in his future endeavors.

IN HONOR OF SISTER MARY JEANNE FERRIER, R.S.M.

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me today in honoring Sister Mary Jeanne Ferrier, Religious Sisters of Mercy, for more than three decades of distinguished service as a hospital administrator. Known for her love of children and praised by her colleagues for her energy and dedication to health care, Sister Mary Jeanne has devoted much of her attention to the administration of hospitals in New York State. Of particular note is her meritorious service at Mercy Community Hospital in Port Jervis, NY. Having served as the president of the board at the hospital, then called St. Francis, from 1956 to 1959, she left New York to assist the Mother General in Bethesda, MD, bringing her caring and knowledge of health care to the rest of the world, from Europe to the Far East to the Americas. Sister Mary returned to Mercy Community Hospital in 1966, serving ast the hospital's administrator and chief executive officer until 1981. She resigned only this year as president of the board of directors, a position she had held since 1977.

We owe a debt of gratitude to those "people with concerned hearts and minds" who, to use Sister Mary Jeanne's own words, "are the strong, rock bottom of health care." Felt by many to be the most effective hospital administrator in the State of New York, we honor Sister Mary Jeanne Ferrier today for her many years of dedication, of caring, and leadership in providing health care to the sick or our region.

CONGRATULATING ROBY CHRISTIE ON THE 9TH ANNUAL HOTTER-N-HELL 100

HON. BILL SARPALIUS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. SARPALIUS. Mr. Speaker, the city of Wichita Falls, TX, boasts of hosting the largest bicycle race in the United States. The August event is appropriately named the Hotter-n-Hell 100. With average temperatures during the 100-mile ride of at least 95 degrees, it always lives up to its name. This ride is not just another bicycle race, and one man responsible for making it different, is Roby Christie.

This year's ride on August 25 attracted 11,467 cyclists to Wichita Falls from 42 States and 4 foreign countries.

The activities started Friday night with a spaghetti dinner known to cyclists as the "Carbo Load", and a cycling symposium.

On Saturday, the riders chose between the U.S. Cycling Federation Sanctioned race, the 100-mile ride, or a number of shorter routes to test their endurance, strategy, and ability. Mr. Christie's committee organized rest stops sponsored by business and community organizations along every 7 miles of the course. These rest stops provide food, drink, and entertainment. For the riders who were unable to finish, a "sag wagon" would pick them up and carry them to the finish line. Meanwhile, the families of the riders were treated to one of the largest consumer shows in the country for cycling equipment. In this, its 3d year in existence, the show has more than tripled in size since 1988.

In spite of all the professional teams that participated, an amateur placed first. However, the professional teams had a chance to compete among themselves in the Criterium race on Sunday. Again, families of riders were treated to entertainment by watching a hot-air balloon race sponsored by Sikes Senter Mall.

All told, the race brings an estimated $1 million directly into the Wichita Falls economy. The Hotter-n-Hell 100 has an economic impact of $3 million. In addition to the economics, it increases community spirit, involvement and introduces social diversity. Mr. Speaker, fellow Members of the House, please join me in congratulating Roby Christie for a successful 9th Annual Hotter-n-Hell 100.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT: A BETTER BILL

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the original civil rights bill. I thought it was unfair—basically a quota bill which would make it difficult for smaller businesses to operate.

The bill went back to conference—a highly unusual practice—and the language was changed. I'm now convinced that my original fears have been satisfied. Words and phrases like "business necessity," "mixed motives," and "particularity" are thrown around in explanation of this civil rights legislation. The main point now, however, is that though far from perfect—the new bill is better than before and far better than having no bill at all. So I'm supporting it.

I am a former businessman. I'm very sensitive to the well-being of the private economic engine of our society. I do not want to have it bear still another burden. However, I do not, in the perspective of this total issue—feel that it will.

One can easily take an issue and prove beyond any doubt the worse possible scenario. But when balanced between theory and practice, I have to believe that this legislation will not hurt business. Business will be better off going back to the original meaning of "business necessity" which has worked without leading to either racial quotas or undue financial damages for 18 years.

There has been a great deal of emotion generated here. I don't know whether that's good or bad. What I do know is that we must resolve this issue and move forward. The ghosts and demons projected by the doom sayers I frankly do not believe are there. Certainly there will be a lobby of lawyers which will become more active under title VII or the Act of 1866. But that will subside. Reason will prevail. It always has. Furthermore, there will continue to be changes and adjustments to any legislation which is as fundamental as equality of opportunity.

I must admit that it hurt me to vote against the first bill. I want to be supportive. I have been fortunate in my lifetime not to have had to overcome racial barriers. But the people who would write the perfect civil rights legislation want to insert paragraphs that—for example—would allow employers to defend discriminatory job practices on the grounds that these practices were prompted by community or customer relationship efforts. You know we went through that period 30 years ago. As a result I have a fear that these proponents of the ideal bill—whatever that means—want no bill at all. And I just don't think that's right.

In the revised bill that emerged from the reopened conference, the punitive damages cap doesn't just pick on small businesses. In the original bill an employee didn't have to point to anything specific when charging discrimination. Now he does. The conference report greatly strengthens any business' ability to argue the importance of job performance. I could go on. I won't.

Suffice it to say that this bill, in my opinion, now meets the test of rightness and practicality.

REMARKS BY CONGRESSMAN GINGRICH CONCERNING THE BUDGET

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend our colleague, Congressman GINGRICH, for recent remarks he made concerning the budget summit and the budget process in general. I am submitting them for the record as his thoughts on what the voters want and what we have been doing are worthy of consideration by all of us.

ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE NEWT GINGRICH TO A CONFERENCE SPONSORED BY THE FINANCIAL EXECUTIVES INSTITUTE

Rep. NEWT GINGRICH: Thank you very much. I thought I would talk for a little while and then take questions, but I should say that my major claim to fame isn't all that nice stuff you just heard; it is that I am the congressman who represents the Atlanta Airport. And in a sophisticated group like this, I always ask, how many of you have been through my district? Raise your hand, if you've been through. (Laughter.)

Now, I'm serious. Raise your hand if you've been through Hartsfield. That's good; that's a start. I had somebody once yell from the back of the room—I asked how many enjoyed it. But we have 55,000 jobs at the airport, so we're grateful any time you can come through, or as you rise in importance send your subordinates.

This is a real challenge to me. I'm going to try to compress four and a half months in a budget summit and the last two very, very hectic weeks, plus a projection of the future into a short enough talk that we can take questions, and as a former college professor who's used to at least 55 minutes, you can imagine what a challenge this is.

So I'm going to sort of jump along and give you a series of outlines rather than necessarily talk only in a long and elaborate way about this thing.

But I want to start with—and I waver between two titles that I think are sort of the key to where we're at. One was that a budget is more than numbers. I think that's one of the major mistakes in the current budget debate; that a budget is really about values, it's about vision, it's about where you want to go, it's about programs. And to talk about a budget in pure numbers is inherently wrong, and is something I think that we have made a major mistake of in the city of Washington.

Because numbers by themselves are almost meaningless. And again, if you think of your family budget or your corporate budget, numbers have to be driven by policy. If numbers start to drive policy, you have sort of a mindless, almost nihilism of government, in which you end up making decisions that make no sense, except that the number forced you to the decision.

And so in a very real sense, you have to have a constant cyclic process in which the numbers inform the policy makers who then look at policy decisions based on values and vision, about which they then make decisions that are numerical.

But unless you go through that almost cybernetic loop, you are in fact missing the key elements of how to make decisions.

The second choice I had was to talk about the budget as if we'd actually allowed normal citizens to write it.

Let me give you just one example, because I think it is such an astonishing and such an unnoticed fact in this city, that it's worth paying a lot of attention to. If you had randomly drawn any 21 citizens in America into a room, and said we're going to give you four and a half months to think about the federal budget, we're going to give you all the technical backup you need, we're going to give you all the opportunities to look at all the arguments—one of the things they could never have done, ever, is allow the Appropriations Committees to have no cuts. I mean, only in Washington would you start a budget process by saying we're going to protect the Appropriations Committees so that they have full inflation-level growth in their spending for the next five years, and now we're going to talk about cutting spending.

And yet in America at large, where there's an overwhelming majority convinced that government is a bad buy, that they're not getting their money's worth, that Washington doesn't have the wisdom to spend their money intelligently—and after watching us last weekend, this has been doubled or tripled.

In the rest of the country they would have started out by saying, now how much do you intend to have the Appropriations Committees spend? And it's well over a trillion dollars over five years. And they would have said, gee, we could probably get a little bit there.

Another example. No group of average citizens, looking at what's happened over the last two months in the Middle East, could possibly have come up with a gas tax increase.

Now I understand that gas tax increases are extraordinarily popular among editorial boards that ride Metro. They're extraordinarily popular among inner city politicians. They're extraordinarily popular among people and college faculties whose vision of the world is European socialism. But the fact is Belgium is one-third the size of South Carolina. The fact is that from Tokyo to Kyoto is 100 miles. The fact is that most of the models imported into the U.S. of a high gas-tax economy are simply irrational for a continent-wide country and for a country which has practiced mobility and which has encouraged suburban and small-town growth.

And to artificially raise the cost of living for a normal average American while avoiding any cuts in the Appropriations Committee would have struck the average American as nuts.

But there's a third issue. The average American would probably have said how close are we to a recession? How serious is the threat of a recession? Sixty percent of the country currently believes we're already in a recession, and they would probably have said what happens to deficits if we have a real recession. And they would have been told by the experts, oh, if you have a real recession, what'll happen is people will be laid off of work, they'll quit paying taxes, they'll start drawing unemployment and welfare, and guess what—the deficit will get bigger.

And they would have said, well, I don't understand this. If the deficit will get bigger in a real recession, then if we're worried about the deficit shouldn't our very first goal be to avoid a recession?

And they'd be told by the experts, no, that doesn't count because the Joint Committee on Taxation has an economic model which is static and does not take into account any kind of expectational changes, and cannot predict outside effects.

I'll give you an example. The much-maligned capital gains tax, which, by the way, would have two surprising indirect effects. One is by lowering the cost of capital in the United States, it would draw money into the United States, thereby providing non-Federal Reserve Board liquidity and at the margin lowering interest rates, and, second, it would raise the value of real property, something of substantial importance if you're the federal government, and you are the largest single seller of real property in America today. Therefore, it would lower the cost of the S&L bailout.

Neither of those changes can be handled by the Joint Committee on Taxation. The Joint Committee on Taxation is today intellectually the equivalent of a travel agency that will not put you on an airplane because their model airplanes can't fly.

It's literally true. If you look at their nondynamic model of how human beings behave, they always overestimate revenue, for example, and excise taxes because they underestimate the speed with which humans stop doing the things we tax. They always underestimate the revenue gain from things like capital gains that increase behaviors, because they always underestimate the expectational changes of humans when you reward certain behavior.

And yet they are the people who set up the ground rules, so that we spend five months in a meeting in which all of us who happen to believe in any kind of private sector economic growth kept saying we stipulate that their model is dumb but we'll now use it.

Now the average citizen would have said, you know, if it's that dumb why are you doing it? And we would have said, well, this is Washington. Which gets me to my next point.

Everywhere on the planet we are seeing dramatic change in the direction of value that could broadly be called Ronald Reagan's values.

We're seeing changes in Mexico, which we applaud—more privatization, more free enterprise. We're seeing changes in Hungary, Poland, Russia, and all the various states of the Soviet empire which we applaud.

I had a New York politician tell me, recently, that he found himself talking to some of the radicals on Boris Yeltsin's staff about how they could sell private property in Moscow, how they could privatize the apartments. And the guy said, well, how would you set prices? And he said, well, you'd let the market economy determine what's the value of an apartment. Then he suddenly thought—my God, I hope he doesn't ask me about rent control in New York City.

Well, what are we doing in Washington. We are preaching to everybody else on the planet smaller bureaucracies, stronger market forces, greater incentives, and then in Washington we're practicing socialism. I mean, look bluntly at what we're talking about—more red tape, more regulations, more bureaucrats, more centralized decision making.

I had a state government official tell me last night that he's seeing a reversal back to more centralization in Washington again.

And yet the average voter knows that government is a bad guy. Let me give you an example of the kind of political madness which exists in America today. Per thousand dollars spent, you get three to five times better education in a Catholic school than you do in the New York City public schools. Now everybody knows that. I mean, there's not any great argument about that. Yet our tax code and our spending code is such that there is a very real likelihood that within the next year, the New York Catholic schools are going to collapse because they don't have any money, and 100,000 children are going to leave a system that is still working to go to a system that is failing, and are going to go from a system that costs less per child to a system that costs more per child.

Now as a society, you have to be relatively dumb to have those kind of patterns developing; to not be able to stop and say isn't there some way we can find either to increase charitable giving, to provide greater incentive for people to have choice; but to do something so that that which works is encouraged and that which fails is changed?

And instead what we're told is you can't behave like that. In New York City today it costs an estimated $250,000 to fire a bad teacher. The result is they have people who have been accused of sex offenses teaching in classrooms because they can't figure out how to go through the process of getting rid of them.

In Chicago, the Chicago Tribune interviewed a teacher who every principal she had ever worked for had tried to fire. And the expectations were that this year she would ruin 30 children. And they asked her: you have 11 more years to go, what is your number-one educational goal, and her answer was to retire on a full pension.

Now a system which can't reorient and rethink itself is a system in crisis, and yet let's look at the U.S. Congress. What you heard in this city I think is extraordinarily anti-democratic, with a small d.

It is extraordinarily anti free society and self-government. I mean, go back and read the comments of the last week. People who lacked courage; people who were unwilling to face up to the American public. What kind of balderdash is this?

You know, the founding fathers presumably established elections for a purpose. They were trying to create a market environment in which on a regular basis, laid out in the Consititution, every two years—not a surprise—people had to go home and say hi, do you like the job I'm doing, would you like to rehire me? And they presumably did this because they valued the opinion of the American people.

Now you get to the Washington elite, and there is nothing but cynicism and contempt for the American people. How dare the American people reject this budget package? Well, they dared it pretty easily. They just paid 27-cents-a-gallon higher gasoline prices yesterday morning, and they said to themselves, do I think I'm getting a good enough buy in Washington to pay 10 cents a gallon more? By a rather remarkably large number, the answer was no.

The average senior citizen looked at this city and said, I have this hunch they haven't cut any spending among the politicians. Do I think they should cut my Medicare? And the average sense was no. Now you may all say, well, they're all selfish, but let me tell you—if your conclusion is that the American people are too stupid and too selfish to be talked to intelligently, and they can't be brought into the process of deciding their future, then what model do you intend to suggest to Gorbachev and Yeltsin? Now you can't have it both ways. If, in the end, you believe in self-government, then you have to find a budget and you have to find a solution which you can explain to the American people so that when they see it they go—that makes sense, that's a future I'd like to have.

Now, what the American people will tell you I think is pretty simple. They want very dramatic reform in this city; there's a reason that term limitation is sweeping the city. People are sickened of the political elite; they are disgusted with incumbents who exploit their office, use taxpayers' money, guarantee their own reelection. The most stable incumbents in the modern world, more stable than any European communist dictatorship, except Albania. Literally. That's not an exaggeration, that's not hyperbole, that is statistically true. You are more likely to be defeated in any election in any part of the Soviet empire than in the United States House of Representatives.

Now that's how sick the system is, and so people finally are rising up in rebellion and saying I've had it—I don't want you to raise my taxes because you no longer have legitimacy. I'm going to set a term limitation because I've concluded I can't reform the system enough to beat you. And I want you to clean up and cut political spending in Washington before you ask me to give up a dime in my family or my charity or my church or synagogue, or my neighborhood.

That's not an irrational statement, despite the Washington Post and New York Times editorial boards. That is a very different perception of reality. It is a non-elite, non-Washington syndrome sense that government ain't functioning, these guys haven't got a prayer of solving it, and I ain't giving them more of my money to waste.

And again, if you watched C-SPAN all weekend, which way would you have voted? Did that look like a group you want to send more of your money to?

And it's not—please understand me—it's not because we're incompetent; it's because we're locked into a terribly difficult struggle. For three presidential elections in a row, the American people have spoken with absolute decisiveness. I mean, the truth is if you go back, you can argue that Carter running as a Southern Baptist, populist outsider was part of the same tradition. And in a very real sense, Nixon versus McGovern and the Nixon/Wallace combined vote in 1968 fit the same pattern. The last time a progovernment tax increase, welfare-state bureaucracy winner existed was Lyndon Johnson in 1964. So, for 26 years, at the presidential level, the American people have said that's it.

I mean, stand up in San Francisco and promise you'll raise taxes as Walter Mondale did and you're gone; you'll barely carry your home state by 7,000 votes. Wander around the country and offer the Massachusetts miracle, and people say, I'll bet that sucker's going to collapse. And it did.

So I'm suggesting to you that in the core values of the culture of the American people, they've made a decision, and their decision is they want big change.

The side which argued for lower taxes and less government, and a stronger national defense, and stronger anti-crime and drug policies, to take the core values, that side got 89 percent of the electoral vote in the last three presidential elections. Eighty-nine percent. It carried the popular vote by an average of 54 to 42 in three presidential elections. This is not close. Then you get to Capitol Hill where a combination of labor union power structures, gerrymandering, incumbency use of taxpayer money to keep themselves locked into office, and all the other perks that the Democratic Party has now used to entrench itself, create a left-wing bastion, so that you have the most liberal House and Senate leadership in history, while the country, for at least three consecutive elections has gone to the right. And you have this huge chasm. And that's the real collision.

This weekend—why did the government shut down? The government shut down because the Democrats who control the House would not accept even a nominal cut in spending. They were determined to have full funding at this year's level, not last year's, while they continue to avoid passing a budget, and we had the government close for two days because they would not pass a spending cut resolution, and we finally passed one which is very weak and very mild, and out of sheer exhaustion we didn't fight any further.

But in fact it was madness. There is not a person in America who thought that for one week you couldn't sequester. By the way, the sequester in the original fight—the sequester would have been travel money; no furloughs, no crisis—travel money.

Now a Congress which is saying to the American people every dime we get from you is so precious we can cut nothing, and every dime you have in your family budget is so available we can raise your taxes, including something as obvious and sensitive as gasoline, is a Congress which is simply grotesquely out of touch.

Let me give you just a couple set of numbers, to give you a sense, again, of what I mean by being out of touch. Members who were unopposed in November voted 44 to 34 in favor of the budget deal.

Members who were retiring and not running for any other office voted 14 to 2. Members who are running for the Senate voted zero to eight. Members who are running for governor voted zero to three. Members who are listed in close elections voted zero to twenty-five.

Now you can say that's a sign they're cowards. But I want to come back to my earlier point. I am a populist because I think sovereignty rests in the people. I'm a populist because I think at some level if you can't convince them they have the right to say no. That the burden is on the leaders to convince the led. It's not to be cynical, it's not to involve in a conspiracy, it's not to sneak something through as quick as you can before they notice it. It is to be able, with honor and dignity, to go home and say yes, I did this and let me tell you why. And if you can't, you shouldn't.

And we haven't made the case up here. Now we're going to have a very interesting 10 days, and I'll make a couple predictions for you.

The House Republicans yesterday, the Policy Committee led by Mickey Edwards of Oklahoma, with a task force led by Carl Pursell of Michigan and John Kasich of Ohio, have produced a dramatic alternative to the current Democratic budget. It's an alternative that has no gasoline tax increase; it is an alternative which has dramatically better funding for Medicare; it's an alternative which, for the first time, touches the largest of sacred cows, or maybe it's a sacred pig—the Appropriations Committee. And actually has the temerity to freeze the Appropriations Committee for one year at last year's number, a sign that in this city will probably lead to some people having heart attacks, strokes, and other kinds of difficult personal responses to that kind of heresy.

What it does by freezing the Appropriations Committee is it liberates political money which can then be used, instead of being spent for pork barrel, can be used, for example, in Medicare, and it makes the clear argument that until you have put some discipline in the Appropriations Committee and on government spending in Washington, why would you punish the average American?

Now the Democrats will not like the package we're going to offer, and they will make an effort—I will predict this morning, they will make an effort to block us from bringing it to the Floor. Now, remember, this is a party which in the last two years, in this Congress, has waived the budget act 62 times. This is a party which has written bills which have never gone to committee, never had a hearing, which they brought straight to the Floor under a rule waiving all points of order.

So this is a Democratic party which could make an order of virtually anything they wanted to. If they wanted to declare Mars a state they could bring it to the floor today. The rules of the House are very flexible. But I will predict to you that the difference between a budget drawn starting with the American people and then changing Washington, rather than a budget drawn starting with Washington and then changing the American people, that difference will be so powerful that in fact in order to avoid allowing us to have a clean chance, the Democrats would write a rule that makes our budget not in order.

And what we'll do then frankly is make the rules vote count as a key, and we'll go to the American people. And we'll say here is a clear choice between two ways of doing business. If you want a gas tax increase, then you have exactly the right man chairing the Ways and Means Committee.

If you want more, deeper cuts in Medicare, in order to spend more money in the Appropriations Committee, then you ought to vote Democrat. But there is a real and fundamental difference. And I think a lot of moderate and conservative Democrats and a lot of Democrats from districts with a large number of senior citizens and a lot of Democrats from districts that are large, like rural, suburban, are going to find it very interesting to look at an alternative that doesn't raise the gas tax and to look at an alternative that freezes the Appropriations Committee and thereby enables us to do better by Medicare recipients. And I think it's a legitimate argument, and I think it will be very interesting to see how the next ten days work out.

Let me stop if I might and just throw it open to questions and comments.

Q: Congressman, I understand that Chairman Rostenkowski yesterday indicated that he would (inaudible) the Republican alternative to be brought to the floor (inaudible) Democratic alternative to be brought to the floor, as well as the summit agreement. Your comments on that and a question on the proposal that you just outlined, is President Bush on board?

Rep. GINGRICH: At the present moment, this is purely a House Republican proposal. We haven't seen the White House to go over it in detail. We've shared it with them, and we developed parts of it with technical help from the Office of Management and Budget.

But I think, frankly, you've got a process in both the House and Senate that's going to have to fight its way out.

Let me make this suggestion to you, though. The Democratic budget resolution prohibits any cuts in the Appropriations Committee from counting towards deficit reduction. Our budget is going to have cuts in the Appropriations Committee. And if any of you happen to know any of the leading Democrats you can go back and ask them, are they going to make that an order, are they going to count cuts in the Appropriations Committee, or are they only willing to count cuts that aren't in the political spending they control.

Because their budget resolution explicitly does not count any cuts in Appropriations Committee towards reconciliation.

Yes, sir.

Q: Republican Congressman Frenzel said earlier this week he thought Republican House members had shot themselves in the foot essentially last week by voting down the compromise, that that was their best shot at getting something out of the (inaudible) Democratic-controlled Congress. President Bush has apparently said he'd sure like to see something very similar to the thing that was voted down last week come up again for another vote.

That leads me to four related questions, which are, was it a mistake for you to——

Rep. GINGRICH: Why don't you ask them individually and let me——

Q: Well, I think they can actually be made into one.

Rep. GINGRICH: Four subplots of a major question.

Q: Was it a mistake for you and your colleagues to vote against the resolution last week because that really was your best shot? Would you consider voting for something similar to it now if it were offered again? How can, I guess, what could you come up with that you could really have a realistic chance of working out an agreement with or getting through a Democratic controlled Congress, and the fourth, I even forgot, which is if you can't even agree among yourselves as Republicans, how can you hope to reach some sort of compromise agreement with the Democrats?

Rep. GINGRICH: First of all I think that this is a city which all too often explains that while the thing I'm doing is not defendable, it's better than the thing I would have done.

I mean, I think you have to start and say was that good enough, did that fit the values of the American people. And I would come back to my initial point.

How can you seriously defend not cutting a dime out of Appropriations while raising taxes on the American people and cutting Medicare? It's just wrong. I mean, it doesn't make any sense.

How can you defend an ideal which may or may not have made sense in the spring to raise gasoline taxes, coming—in terms of being out of touch with normal America.

How can you propose a ten-cent a gallon gasoline tax right on the edge of people who are sitting out here at the margin who are worried about a recession who just had the average gasoline price go up 27 cents a gallon? In terms of a sense that Washington doesn't understand normal America, I think that is simply not correct. It's not valid, it's not a legitimate offer in that sense, from the American people's standpoint.

And it wasn't the House Republicans who defeated this. I mean, everybody reminds us we can't pass anything because we're a minority, and we're to blame because the budget summit failed.

Now if you think that sentence through, I mean it's obviously just not possible. The budget collapsed on both sides of the aisle because when the American people looked at it, they said no, they said no in overwhelming numbers.

And if they can't say no a month before the election then what's the point of being a democracy. I mean why have elections. So I'd come back and I'd say no I wouldn't vote for that package slightly modified. I think you need to rework it and rethink it. And I think there are ways (inaudible).

Second, what is the strength of the House Republican party? Well, obviously by ourselves we can't pass something. Let me point out to you the liberal Democratic leadership was deeply opposed to capital gains last year. The people who represented farming districts and people who represented timber areas and people who represented small business areas and people who represented senior citizens who had a lot of savings and who are the primary people who take capital gains, by the way, all those different groups came together last year and we had over 260 votes in favor of a proposal which the liberal Democratic leadership opposed.

So when you put together a coalition, it can work. In addition, any time the president wants to veto things, 146 of us can sustain. We looked pretty powerful on Saturday.

I mean the liberal Democrats couldn't override his veto. The president and the House Republicans on Saturday stopped the liberal Democrats in their tracks. And they could have done it again in my judgement on Monday.

So we have a veto base. If the Democrats insist on a gas tax increase, Medicare cut, no spending cuts in appropriations budget and that's their package, we'd probably urge the president to veto it. We'd go back and say we can now do better and we should do better. And we owe it to the American people to do better.

Lastly, it seems to me that we were told for four and a half months—I was in the summit. We were told don't go out here and worry all these guys developing budget options, because we have the summiteers. Now we're told since none of you developed budget options, you have no standing.

Well, which is it? I mean everybody was told to hang around for the summit to succeed, and when the summit failed they were blamed because they hung around.

Nobody asked Mickey Edwards and John Kasich and Carl Pursell to develop a budget option till Sunday. And Edwards got Bob Michel's approval around 2:00 Sunday afternoon, appointed him to the task force at 3:00, it met at 4:00, and at 8:00 that night was in the leadership meeting briefing us on the basic outline of a budget agreement.

Now I think that's reasonably fast. We passed it in policy yesterday with, I think, 40 votes to 2. But considering that we were told for five months don't do anything because the summit will solve it, now we're being told why didn't you do something, you no longer have legitimacy. That's nonsense.

And frankly, the average American, having repudiated the deal last week, wants to see some new ideas. They don't want to be told the best they can do is a warmed over version of what they just repudiated.

And I was astonished the other night on "Nightline" with Bill Gray to have him honestly admit that all the Democratic budget is is a slight variation on the document the American public repudiated.

I wouldn't want to go out to the country and say, hi, we really heard you. We're not going to raise your taxes 10 cents a gallon; the mark yesterday was nine. Boy, we really listened to you. And I'm sure that average American out there is grateful that it's only nine cents a gallon; they're going to say no, that's nuts. It's a sign that once again the politicians in Washington haven't heard.

Q: But where's the number compromised? That's the part (inaudible), between your position and the——

Rep. GINGRICH: Well, listen, I think if you have two-thirds of the American people, as Ronald Reagan proved over and over again, the goal may not be compromise. The goal may be to convince the Democrats at the margin that after two vetoes or three vetoes they ought to vote for a package that the American people want.

I mean, Ronald Reagan didn't compromise in three years of tax cuts by having a year and a half of tax increase and a year and a half of tax cuts. You know, he didn't compromise in the Gramm-Latta (phonetic) budget cuts, which were the most decisive budget cuts in the last 30 years, in the direction of saying, well, why don't we go ahead and increase this and decrease that. He in fact fought very hard for a package of cuts.

And he didn't compromise his military buildup by saying, I'll tell you what, we'll be weak on two fronts, but we'll be strong on two fronts. He fought to be strong everywhere so that in fact the Soviet empire would collapse, as it did.

And what I'm suggesting is, the American people are now angry. There are, I think, seven or nine tax limitation initiatives on ballots around this country. There are term limitations on the ballots in California and in Colorado that are ahead by over 70 percent in both states.

John Silver (phonetic) just came out for a six-year limitation for state legislatures in Massachusetts. I mean there's a tidal wave building out there of the American people, and I'm not sure that on behalf of the American people we have any great need to compromise.

I think we just ought to stand there and say, here are the values we believe the American people represent. We're prepared to sustain a veto if the budget deal doesn't fit those values. And then tell the Democrats, if you'd like to be here on Friday, Saturday and Sunday before the election fighting over whose values ought to exist, we're perfectly happy to have the country watch that and then let them decide who they want to shape things.

Yes, sir.

Q: You haven't said much about the entitlement programs, which is where a lot of the big money is. Could you comment on what you see happening there? And also, entitlement programs not being touched, is that really the American people talking or just the very large vocal recipients of these programs?

Rep. GINGRICH: Well, the very large vocal recipients of those programs are about 35 million people who are the most likely to vote this November. Senior citizens are more likely to vote than younger cares. Thirty-five million of them are an impressive number. If any of you doubt that, I suggest you go to your local congressional district and walk around for a half day, or go to any town hall meeting.

And they're not—let me say again, they are not any more selfish, they are not any more short-sighted, they are not any more venal, than any other American. They're just normal everyday folks. And what you've got to do is have an argument.

That's why I started by saying, when you have these mindless numbers games—$500 billion for fives years—remember, this is a budget which increased by $240 billion in the projected deficit this year. We have a magic number for five years. And so you go before your senior citizens and say, it's $500 billion over five years, and we're taking $196 out of you. And they go, tell me again why. And these people have been around awhile. You know, they've been around long enough to watch FDR and Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower and Jack Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon, you know, and Jerry Ford and Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan and now they're into George Bush.

And they're saying: Explain this to me again. Because they don't automatically buy whatever the latest gimmick is, or at latest nine-second sound bite. And they want to be convinced.

My experience is, that's the generation that lived through World War II. They're very patriotic. They'll do anything they are convinced is fair; they'll do anything they're convinced is reasonable; they'll sacrifice if the country needs them—they have all their lives.

But what they don't want to be told is that the boys in Washington cut a deal, and the boys in Washington get lots more money to play with, and by the way, you're going to get hit once again. Because their lifetime experience has been, that doesn't work for the country and it doesn't work for them; it just makes the politicians happier while the country gets weaker.

And so I think you've got to start. If you want to reform entitlements, you've got to have an argument about entitlements—not a budget number.

I'll give you an example: people talk about progressivity on the tax side, the Democrats who are the last stand of a Ligachev-level class warfare. You know, the Democrats are just totally into class warfare. And it's amazing to watch and listen to them. Fine, you want to talk about progressivity, let's talk about it on the spending side.

Explain to me why a person who's retirement income is $200,000 a year should have their Medicare insurance subsidized? Now, I can't find a single argument for that. I can go back home and say confidently to almost every group in my district, tell me why we should tax people who earn $20,000 a year to transfer from their family with two young children to subsidize a person whose retirement income is 200 grand, which we do right now.

And my district would say, that's a little irrational. They'd accept that change. But notice, you're now making an argument about a reform; you're not making an argument about a budget number. You're not trying to package 1,100 things in a budget deal, vote on it once, never explain any of it, and say, trust me—in a city which, by the way, has become profoundly untrustworthy in the country.

I mean the American people don't trust Washington. They've been through 25 years of being convinced this is not smart. And then they watch Marion Barry, who they probably thought was an appropriate mayor for the capital that they've watched over the years.

And then you show up and you say, hi, we've got this deal, you know, we're going to rush it through very quickly, trust us, and yes it's a little thick, but there's nothing in there really bad for you. And their attitude is a little bit like most of yours would be if it was a private contract and somebody rushed in and say, sign this, it's only the rest of your career.

And you'd say, oh, I'd like to read it awhile, like to get a few experts to read it awhile. Call you in a week.

And so I think you've got to—yes, you have to reform entitlements. Yes, I think we have to talk with (inaudible). I made a very bold speech on Social Security in 1986, in November, and I virtually got my brains beaten out last election because I talked openly about the need for the baby boomers to rethink it.

And yes, I think you ought to rethink parts of Medicare, but you ought to do it starting with the people who currently rely on it, understanding their fears and their concerns, and trying to have some appreciative understanding of what it's like to have $300-400 a month coming in, to live in a small apartment, to be terrified that you're going to lose all of your savings, and to have this sense that there's a large bureaucracy and a large political system who have no idea who you are as a human being, and for whom you're simply one of the folks to get nicked.

And I think that's why there's been such an anti feeling about Medicare—about the current Medicare cuts.

Yes, sir?

Q: If your wildest dreams come true, and all of that works as you talk, where'll these talks come from when you talk appropriations? Could you give us some sense of size, impact, program?

Rep. GINGRICH: Sure.

Q: Where will this money come from?

Rep. GINGRICH: I think it would come from—first of all, like most state legislatures, what would happen is you would squeeze the appropriations committee. And you would say to them, this is the most you get to spend. And they'd have to set priorities. And you'd have a very gruesome fight.

I'll just give you one example. I'm a fanatic about getting into space. I would really like to get into space; I think it's very important.

Given the current track record at NASA, can any of you make a serious argument that if we slip the space station a year, that you would notice it?

But it is such a sacred funding item, we can't deal with it except by getting all that money there, no matter what the cost?

Would any of you like to guess, if you were go through the latest list of appropriations projects, that if we were to set priorities, you couldn't find 10 or 15 or 20 projects per subcommittee that could either be postponed or foregone?

Now, whether you're talking about personal pet projects involving various members in appropriations to send money to the school of their choice, it's an alumni program; they tax all of us to send the check by the way of the government.

You know there are schools out there that have gotten $80 and $90 and $100 million not through peer review; not because they've got quality; but because of political access.

I don't know that we need to continue doing that.

You have all of the different opportunities. But okay, I'll give you a different step.

I helped found the military reform caucus in 1981. And I participated in the Center for Strategic and International Studies military reform panel in the mid-'80s which helped lead to the reform of the joint chiefs.

I would like to say to Cheney, tell us how you're going to cut 25 percent of the overhead in the defense department. Give us a proposal, show us how you're going to cut that money out next year, tell us how you're not going to have that amount of paperwork, show us how you're going to shorten the procurement rates by at least a third to half.

And there's no reason that we have to invent the Soviet civilian economy in defense procurement. But we have. It is now a centralized bureaucracy with too much planning, too little work, too little risk-taking, too much red tape. And it's a mess. And it means you maximize the cost of every weapon system.

Now, you're never going to change that until you force a crisis. Corporations in America change because they have recessions. The only large institution in America to get through the last 30 years without a recession is the federal government.

The federal government looks about like you'd expect a large institution—I'll give you one other challenge.

And I'm not trying to avoid the issue; I'm trying to give you a way of thinking that is different than the way this city works.

We have a personnel policy right now which makes it almost as hard to fire a federal employee as it is to fire a New York City school teacher. Now what if we had said, we're going to have a sequester this year, but by the way, the president can pick the 50,000 least affected federal employees.

Now, all the public employees unions would have gone nuts. All the Democratic politicians would have gone nuts. The government would have improved dramatically overnight as each employee tried to prove they weren't that one.

I mean, to give you an example of how radical the change could be, if we simply allowed the president to dismiss 100 employees for cause, and then set up an 800 number so you could call if you thought you'd found one of them, you would change the whole pattern of IRS behavior. You would change the whole way in which you were dealt with. Because suddenly you'd be a customer again, and not just a taxpayer to be milked.

So it's an attitudinal thing.

My last comment, and then I'll wrap up. All of you would doubt me, go down here and walk past the great buildings of bureaucracy. Do you truly believe if we were a private corporation that we couldn't go through those buildings and actually manage them? That we couldn't find paperwork that didn't need to be done, travel that didn't need to be made, conferences that didn't need to be held, employees that didn't need to be replaced?

If you simply governed by attrition for three years, and said the aggregate employment of the federal government will be no more than X, and you can cross-train people, you can transfer them from department to department; you can do what you have to; but we're going to limit you to only replacing one-third of the people and then make exceptions for things like cancer researchers and very sophisticated technical people.

Now, are there any of you who truly believe America would even notice if we shrank the clerical employment of the federal government by 10 percent and instead took that money and bought computers so that those who did work had modern facilities?

You wouldn't even notice it. In fact the quality of government would improve—the current federal employee wants to work hard. They're trapped in 1950 work rules, with 1960 office equipment, and an 1880 civil service law. And then we say, why—you know, I'm not anti-federal civil servant. You can't have a decent government unless you have good civil servants. And I'd rather pay them more and have rational work rules and have rational investment in technology and have fewer of them at higher salaries than have the kind of decay we've been under now for 15 years.

That's what a budget ought to be all about, is talking about what are our values—and I'll close with this, because I think this is the essence of the system. What we should be doing is starting with, what's our vision of America. What are the values we're prepared to fight for. What are the plans we're willing to finance? How do we explain it to the American people in language they understand about their lives? How do we rally a majority of the nation to manage their own government and to support rather than oppose the changes that are needed?

It seems to me this is the essence of what we're trying to teach Gorbachev and Yeltsin and all of the Soviet bloc. And then we ought to have the courage to go back home and explain what we're doing, and say we're proud of this.

And yes, certainly, you can argue about the details. But on balance this is our plan for a 21st century America worth giving your children.

And I'll leave you with this thought. Because a lot of people are saying, well, what's George Bush going to do? We had the question today.

Well, this is not George Bush's country. That's not George Bush's Congress. The genius of America is that each of you personally bear more responsibility for the future of your children and grandchildren. You get the Congress you deserve; you get the government you deserve; you get the politics you deserve.

And when you are prepared to spend the time, the money and the courage it takes to take your country back from the professional political class, you'll do it. And you see it beginning to happen in Oklahoma, you see it beginning to happen in Massachusetts, you see it beginning to happen in Colorado and California.

And in time, the American people will once again reclaim their government, and then they'll establish a new elite in Washington and a new establishment in Washington, and we'll actually think it's good to have the American people approve of something. It's good to have the American people understand something. It's legitimate to insist that we be able to talk candidly with the American people.

So I think we have a lot ahead of us. I think it's going to be a very exciting decade. And I strongly urge, whether you're Democrat or Republican, liberal or conservative, if you don't spend more on politics than you spend on your favorite hobby, you're not really being a responsible citizen.

If you don't spend more hours in politics than you spend on your favorite hobby, given the mess this country's in, you're not being a responsible citizen.

And if you aren't taking charge of giving your children and grandchildren a country and a government worth giving them, then you're not being responsible as a citizen.

So I came today to recruit you. This is your chance to create the America you want your grandchildren to have.

Thank you and God bless you.

TRIBUTE TO MOSES FLEETWOOD WALKER

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to honor a great man who in his time, broke many barriers. Moses Fleetwood Walker was the first black player in major league baseball. Born in Mt. Pleasant, OH, in 1857, Moses was the son of the first black physician in Ohio, Dr. Moses W. Walker. Dr. Walker later moved his family up the Ohio River, to my hometown of Steubenville.

Moses joined the varsity baseball team at Oberlin College in 1881 as a catcher. He left Oberlin temporarily to play for 2 years at the University of Michigan, where he earned two varsity letters.

Moses went professional in 1883 when he became a player in the Northwestern League with the Toledo Club. He became the first black major leaguer when Toledo entered the American Association and he went with the franchise. He later went on to play for other teams in the Western leagues.

After Moses finished his career in baseball, he went on to become a businessman, inventor, newspaper editor, and author. When he returned to Steubenville, he managed a hotel and later was manager and owner of several motion picture houses.

I take great pleasure in honoring Moses Fleetwood Walker, an outstanding, multitalented black American and Ohioan who has honored us with his talents and intellect.

TRIBUTE TO MARION UEHLINGER

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the leading public servants and genuine ladies in my district, Marion Uehlinger, Nueces County Clerk.

Marion has served Nueces County honorably for 42 years, and will retire after this election. She is a remarkable woman who is admired and respected by everyone. She will be commemorated in the form of a banquet Monday, October 22, for her many years of leadership and dedication to public service.

Marion is the County official who oversees birth certificates, death certificates, marriage licenses, voting and probate activities in the County. She is the County official who literally oversees citizens from birth to death, and all activities in between. She began her career in the Probate Office where a Corpus Christi attorney assures me that she knew a great deal more about the Probate laws than the young attorneys who dealt with them. I understand she practically taught probate law to young attorneys in Corpus Christi.

Let me take a minute to tell you about this special lady. Marion is easily one of the most popular people in the Corpus Christi area due to her love of people and her high energy level. Those who know her and have worked with her over the years attest to her friendship and tireless work schedule. She is constantly accessible to all the citizens of Nueces County, as well as her family. She takes her civic responsibility very seriously, making certain that she is available at all times for the operation of her duties.

But far and away, Marion's most valuable contribution has been her stewardship of the County Clerk's Office and the process of balloting in Nueces County. She instituted the upgrading of the political process from paper ballots, counted by hand, to voting machines which tabulate votes as they are cast. Where once paper ballots cast by absentee were also counted by hand, the office now has an optical scanner to verify the votes.

On Election Night, she ensures an accurate ballot count and works tirelessly until the last ballot has been counted and a winner has been declared. Marion Uehlinger has been a vigilant guard over the very essence of our democracy—the ballot. I offer Marion my personal thanks, and the thanks of the good citizens of Nueces County.

A TRIBUTE TO COLBY C. "PETE" CRIPPEN

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Colby C. "Pete" Crippen on his retirement.

Pete served with the Boilermakers Local 169 for 43 years. From 1947 to 1966, he was involved in field construction. Since 1966, he has been the business agent and safety director for the Boilermakers. Pete's outstanding contributions to the Boilermakers, labor, and society in general have been in the area of safety. During his illustrious career, he was a member of three crucial Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Administration Standard Advisory committees: heat stress, protective equipment, and confined space. In addition, he was a member of Boilermakers International Oversite Committee for a New Directions grant for safety and health education. Furthermore, Pete served three terms as vice president of Boilermakers Local 169 and one term as chair of the trustees.

Pete has worked diligently to ensure that workers are protected from unnecessary danger and health hazards on the job. He has successfully garnered support in the Michigan legislature for important programs, such as the right-to-know measure which allows workers access to information regarding the chemicals with which they work. Because of Pete's outstanding dedication to health and safety issues throughout his career, numerous lives have been saved.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in honoring Colby C. "Pete" Crippen for his years of service to Boilermakers Local 169 and extraordinary commitment to the well-being of his fellow workers.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE HENRY J. BRODERICK UPON HIS RETIREMENT AFTER 20 YEARS AS A MARIN SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and ask my colleagues to join me in honoring a fine jurist on the occasion of his retirement.

Henry J. Broderick is retiring after 20 years of distinguished service as a superior court judge in Marin County. Since Judge Broderick's appointment in 1970, he has enjoyed a well-earned reputation for toughness, fairness, and intellectual rigor.

The hundreds of individuals who have appeared before Judge Broderick seeking justice over the past two decades have had good reason to be impressed by his dedication to the highest principles of his profession. Hundreds of attorneys have had the privilege of appearing before a jurist who adhered to the most demanding standards of preparedness and professionalism.

I wish Judge Broderick the best in his retirement, and I add my voice to the chorus of congratulations.

HONORING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MARY LOUIS ACADEMY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize and congratulate the Mary Louis Academy of Jamaica Estates, Queens County, NY, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of its first graduating class.

While traveling on the Long Island Railroad, Mother Mary Louis, general superior of the Sisters of St. Joseph, admired one of the highest hills of Queens from a train window and selected it as the site for a school. She passed away shortly thereafter, and the new school was named the Mary Louis Academy after her. In September 1936, 57 students arrived. Since the new building was not completed, they began classes in the convent.

For half a century, the Mary Louis Academy has worked toward achieving its stated purpose: to educate young women to take their places in society and contribute to the world. To achieve this lofty goal, a demanding academic program has been pursued and spiritual development encouraged. From the very beginning, a variety of extracurricular activities extended the interests of the students. Mariel, the school paper, published its first issue in 1936. Glee Club and Orchestra, the Drama Club Genesians, and the language clubs fostered school talents. The athletic association sponsored field days and many intramural events and competitions.

The reputation of Mary Louis Academy for academic excellence has flourished since its foundation. During the 1960's and 1970's, the academy undertook many changes in the curriculum, in response to the educational climate of the times. In response to the needs of the 1980's, computer science was introduced and a computer room was outfitted. Most recently, the original board room has been renovated and designated as a chapel.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me now in congratulating principals, Sister Joan Petito, Sister Filippa Luciano, and Sister Eileen Gildea, all of the faculty, staff, students and parents of the Mary Louis Academy.

SER-JOBS FOR PROGRESS CELEBRATES 12 YEARS OF CULTIVATING AMERICA'S GREATEST RESOURCE: PEOPLE

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize today SER-Jobs for Progress which will be celebrating its 12th anniversary on October 30.

This successful nonprofit program has trained more than 10,000 educationally and economically disadvantaged persons in the Miami area for jobs in the clerical, data entry and nursing assistants fields since its beginning in 1978. SER-Jobs has given a fresh start to many in Miami by providing computer-assisted basic skills, job skills training, employment counseling, day care and summer/work study for school dropout prevention. According to School President Melvin Chaves, SER-Jobs successfully placed 767 students in jobs last year, and expects that over 70 percent of this year's students will complete programs and be placed in jobs.

The Miami SER-Jobs Program is part of a larger national program established in 1963. The Family Learning Centers established by SER were recently selected as one of the 10 most promising family literacy programs highlighted in First Teachers: A family literacy handbook for parents, policymakers, and literacy providers which will be published by the Barbara Bush Foundation for Family Literacy next month.

SER-Jobs has had such an excellent track record that it has attracted major support from private industry. Amigos de SER is an organization of local businessmen who have recognized the benefits that SER-Jobs brings to the community and supports its efforts. Amigos de SER is raising funds through a 12th anniversary banquet at the Port of Miami on October 30. Among the community leaders helping with this event are Banquet Co-chairmen Michael J. Randels of Ryders System, Inc. and H.R. Smith of Allstate Insurance. Federico Cosatles, Alicia Baro, Gilbert Carrillo, George Hernandez, Carlos Jilia, Eddie Barbosa, Hervin A. Romney, Tony Ojeda, and Robert K. Lowell serve on Amigos de Ser Board of Directors.

As Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Dole has commented on this program, "active involvement and support from the business community are essential if this program is to work well and achieve its highly commendable goals and objectives." I wish to commend the work of the Amigos de SER and the SER-Jobs Program which has done so much to develop America's greatest resource: its people.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF SERVICE BY NEW HOPE COMMUNITY, INC.

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this month the New Hope Community in Loch Sheldrake, NY, will celebrate its 15th anniversary.

Throughout those years, New Hope has become known throughout the Catskill and Hudson Valley area of New York for quality care of developmentally disabled persons. It has indeed offered new hope to individuals and their families, and has provided a supportive, educational environment to foster the growth and well-being of those who are among the most vulnerable in our society.

I am sure my colleagues join me in saluting the service provided by the dedicated staff and administration of New Hope Community, and in wishing the facility continued success in serving its clients, their families, and the community.

IN HONOR OF ROBERT SCHREIBER, VOLUNTEER BUSINESSMAN TO UNITED CARBON, BANGKOK, THAILAND

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the efforts of Robert Schreiber, from St. Mary's in my 23d Congressional District in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Schreiber served as a technical manager to United Carbon Co. in Bangkok, Thailand. He was recruited by International Executive Service Corps, a not-for-profit organization devoted to assisting developing countries by providing skilled volunteers from American business. In a few months Mr. Schreiber will be returning to United Carbon to observe the progress he helped initiate.

Mr. Speaker, I salute Robert Schreiber and others like him, who have that special volunteer spirit so indicative of America. Through their efforts and the IESC program, developing nations can benefit from knowledgeable businessmen like Mr. Schreiber, who have helped make our country great.

IRAQI AGGRESSION TAX OF 1990

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to offer a tax that I believe all Americans, Republicans and Democrats alike, will strongly support.

Today, I am proposing an Iraqi aggression tax which would levy a 100-percent withholding tax on interest income earned on frozen Iraqi Government assets in the United States.

At a time when 200,000 American troops are preparing to lay their lives on the line to oppose Iraqi aggression, and when millions of Americans face the very real prospect of increased taxes, Saddam Hussein does not deserve any United States tax breaks.

This tax will help correct a serious anomaly in the tax code that allows Iraq to continue earning interest on its frozen assets while they continue to violate international law in their attempt to annex Kuwait.

It is ludicrous that while the United States is financing an international effort to deter Iraqi aggression, Saddam Hussein is earning free interest on Iraqi accounts in the United States. Americans do not get such a good deal; why should Saddam?

The withholding tax would affect all income of the Government of Iraq derived from investments or from deposits in banks in the United States. In particular, the measure would be levied on all interest accrued from August 2, the day of the invasion, until Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait or the President negotiates an appropriate settlement.

The bill will be written to make sure after the crisis is over that Iraq cannot file a tax return and get a refund for these specific taxes. And, of course, the law would be repealed immediately upon Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait.

Although the U.S. Treasury Department is not currently releasing figures on the amount of Iraqi Government assets in the United States, unofficial estimates put the figure at a minimum of $300 to $400 million. Experts estimate that we would raise $2.5 to $3 million a month minimum from the tax.

I am certain my colleagues would agree that this generous tax break to Saddam is deeply embarrassing in light of the fact that American taxpayers are spending millions a day to keep Saddam in check, while Iraq is receiving free interest paid by United States banks.

I urge my colleagues to support and pass this measure this year.

H.R. 5835, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 18, 1990

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the reconciliation package put together by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I voted for the budet resolution that failed on October 5. In voting for that resolution, I said that I did not like the budget summit package and that I would seek to change some aspects of it. As one Member who was not present at the summit negotiations, I felt that we could put together a package that was cleaner and fairer.

Eighty percent of the revenues in this package are identical to the provisions of the summit package the Pesident urged all Americans to support. The remainder of the package simply asks those Americans who have profited so handsomely from the policies of the past 10 years to do their share to help us avoid another shutdown of the Government, another fall in the stock market, and a further erosion of confidence of the American people in their Government. Ten days after the defeat of the resolution which would have given us the summit package, we do have a better version.

It is a shame that the vote to pass this bill be a vote along party lines. I understand the frustration of many members of the Republican party because of their indecision over how to continue to shelter the incomes of the wealthiest Americans from the Tax Code. There is also uncertainty on the minority side as to which faction is running the White House on a day-to-day basis. But I cannot accept the criticism of this package when there is nothing to compare it to. Just as no one offered President George Bush's budget on the floor of the House in June, no one from the Republican Party has managed to put on the table any plan which achieves $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years.

This bill, like its predecessors, is far from perfect. For instance, I am not convinced that we need any captial gains exclusion, but if that is the price of compromise, fine. More importantly, this bill saves Medicare beneficiaries $20 billion over the cuts proposes by the summit agreement. That is a plain fact.

Of all the versions of the budget enforcement legislation circulating around Washington these days, this one does the most to help those who are most vulnerable in our society. It increases earned income tax credits for the working poor. This bill will protect rural hospitals as the summit plan did not. It will increase payments to rural hospitals by $240 million for each of the next 5 years. Under this plan, institutions like the hospitals in Van Horn, Kermit, Monahans, and Pecos, TX, will see the differential in their annual reimbursement rates lowered, so that they will no longer have to face the prospect of cutting back on their services to at-risk populations, or closing down altogether. If the cost of doing that is the elimination of the bubble whereby those with hundreds of thousands of dollars in income paid lower rates than the middle class, I will take that trade. If we can avoid driving a wedge between the young and the elderly, or between urban and rural Americans by imposing a surcharge on taxable income above $1 million, then I think that my constituents will accept that.

The passage of this bill does not conclude the budget process, it simply moves it forward. This allows us to move to a conference with the Senate and to make further refinements. What is the alternative—to vote "no" on everything that anyone proposes and then to try to con voters into thinking that the financial catastrophe which follows is someone else's fault? That sort of logic is what exasperates the American people—they are sick and tired of bickering and they are insulted by politicians telling them they can have it all for free.

I urge support for this package in the name of bringing back some progressivity and fairness to our tax system.

H.R. 3789

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 17, 1990

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3789, as it relates to assistance to, and rehabilitation of, homeless veterans. Title VI of the bill would allow the Department of Veterans Affairs to continue its fine efforts to assist homeless veterans who make up as much as one-third of the Nation's homeless population.

On any given night, up to 200,000 veterans are without shelter. And, twice that number who live with relatives or in cheap hotels on a day-by-day basis are at risk of becoming homeless at any time. These are the men and women who served this country in its time of need. And now, many of these same men and women, buffeted by the inconsistencies and incongruities of life are themselves in need.

The Veterans' Affairs Committee recognized that need and authorized two special programs built on the foundation of existing VA programs. The Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill Program utilizes the extensive expertise of the VA in the treatment of mental illness. The Domiciliary Care for Homeless Veterans Program is part of VA's program to address unmet clinical needs of eligible veterans while reducing medically unnecessary use of expensive hospitals and nursing homes.

VA itself has performed impressively in implementing this congressional authority. It has made outreach contact with and initial evaluations of more than 30,000 homeless veterans. It has provided residential care for approximately 18,000 homeless veterans.

Under the Homeless Chronically Mentally Ill Program, 45 of VA's 172 hospitals maintain contracts with more than 200 community-based residential facilities nationwide. Teams of outreach workers visit shelters and urban parks seeking homeless veterans. Assistance is offered when they are found. This assistance consists of six components: Outreach; the offering of services and, if accepted, assessment of the veteran's problems and immediate health care needs; psychiatric and medical evaluation; treatment; and care and rehabilitation in community-based residential treatment facilities. Under this program, more than 4,500 homeless veterans have been provided with medical and psychiatric treatment and placed in residential rehabilitation programs.

Twenty-seven VA medical centers operate domiciliaries for the homeless under the second program, the Domiciliary Care for Homeless Veterans. The historical roots of this program are deep—the Civil War has once again captured this Nation's attention thanks to the splendid program recently broadcast by the public broadcasting system. This Domiciliary Program is an expansion of an effort first initiated following the Civil War to care for disabled homeless veterans of that terrible war. The Domiciliary Care for Homeless Veterans Program consists of five components: Community outreach and referral; admission screening and assessment; medical and psychiatric evaluation and treatment; vocational counseling and rehabilitation; and post-discharge community support. The program has provided medical treatment, counseling and rehabilitation services to more than 8,000 homeless veterans.

Aside from these two special, legislatively mandated programs, VA has utilized existing benefits and offered other services to assist the homeless veteran. Each VA regional office has a designated staff member who serves as coordinator and point of contact for homeless veterans. The staff member visits shelters and works with community-based groups assisting the homeless. Aside from the personal touch, the regional offices help administer two services geared to the plight of the homeless veterans. The Homeless Eligibility Clarification Act enables eligible veterans without a fixed address to receive benefits checks. The shelter for homeless veterans through acquired property sales enables VA to sell acquired properties at discounted prices to State and local agencies and nonprofit organizations, to provide shelters for the homeless.

VA with its network of medical facilities is active in providing health care to homeless veterans. VA domiciliaries, aside from those set up for the homeless, provide treatment to eligible ambulatory veterans disabled by medical and psychiatric disorders who do not need hospitalization or nursing home care. Outpatient services are offered in mental health clinics, day-treatment centers, day hospital programs, as well as alcohol-dependence and drug-dependence treatment programs. VA also support contract care in community-based facilities for veterans with substance abuse disorders and a community residential care program in private homes for eligible veterans unable to live independently.

VA's readjustment counseling service has a network of almost 200 Vietnam veteran outreach centers offering counseling to veterans on a variety of problems. Each vet center, as they are commonly called, has a homeless veterans' coordinator who works with the VA regional offices and medical centers, and private and public sector homeless groups, as well as conducting outreach in shelters and in the streets.

Each VA medical center has a staff member who coordinates activities for homeless veterans and works with community groups that assist the homeless. Before a veteran is discharged from inpatient care, he or she receives assistance from social work services.

In addition, selected community-based shelters under VA contract meet special needs for certain categories of the homeless. There is one shelter dedicated to homeless AIDS veterans and another geared toward sobriety.

VA is constantly seeking ways to further assist the homeless veteran. It is right now working on a joint initiative with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, still in the proposal stage, to use section 8 housing through a voucher system for the homeless. The idea is to use this as a stepping stone program for those veterans who need some additional support and clinical services before rejoining the community as nonhomeless.

Programs such as those under VA should be applauded and provided with additional financial incentive to continue the work already being accomplished. H.R. 3789 would help make that possible.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, October 18, 1990, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Thursday, October 18, 1990

(Legislative day of Tuesday, October 2, 1990)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, in these crucial days help us all, government and people, to hear and heed the wisdom of Moses as he prepared the people of God for nationhood:

*Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God * * *. Lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied; Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God * * *. And thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth. * * * And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish.*—Deuteronomy 8:11-14, 17-19.

Forgive us, patient Father, when we allow prosperity to cause us to forget Thee and allow it to destroy us. For the glory of God and the strength of our Nation. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 18, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the time of the two leaders is reserved.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3209) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1991.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, as Senators know this reconciliation bill has been prepared under a very short deadline. In order to avoid delay, we brought the bill to the floor without printing a formal report. So in an effort to complete the legislative record I send to the desk at this time the report language that the various committees submitted to the Budget Committee and ask unanimous consent that this language be printed in the RECORD at the beginning of debate on the reconciliation bill today so as not to interrupt any debate on the bill itself.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Senator JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SASSER: On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry of the Senate, we submit the following recommendations necessary to meet the budget reconciliation instructions for the Committee.

These recommendations include adoption of a 15 percent triple base system for the 1992 through 1995 crops of feed grains, rice, cotton and wheat. Deficiency payments for rice, wheat and feed grains will be calculated on a 12-month basis. Other cost saving items will bring the total savings to more than $13.6 billion during the period of 1991 through 1995.

We also would like to raise the issue of the establishment of Acreage Reduction Program (ARP) percentages for the 1992 through 1995 crop years. The Committee is concerned with the methodology used by the Congressional Budget Office to adjust the level of the ARP percentages. There are occasions when the Congressional Budget Office will make as little as a 0.1 percent adjustment in the ARP. This seriously affects the scoring, while it does not reflect actions one would expect the Secretary of Agriculture to take. ARP percentages are not adjusted in the real world in increments of less than 2.5 to 5 percent. We will continue to work with the Congressional Budget Office on this issue as we work through Conference.

Sincerely,

RICHARD G. LUGAR,
Ranking Member.
PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING,
HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS.
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to transmit the Banking Committee's recommendations for this year's budget reconciliation bill in accordance with the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget and section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act.

Sincerely,

DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.,
Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER, Chairman.
Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI, Ranking Member.
Committee on the Budget,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM AND PETE: Under the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1991, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation was instructed to achieve $232 million in unspecified deficit reduction for fiscal year (FY) 1991 and a total of $1.335 billion for FY 1991 through FY 1995.

On October 10, 1990, the Committee approved a package of legislative changes, in programs within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee, which meets these instructions. The package includes the following:

1. Coast Guard user fees;
2. Rail safety user fees;
3. Tourism user fees; and
4. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration fees.

In addition, the Committee approved a slightly amended version of S. 3094 for inclusion in the Committee's reconciliation package. Enclosed are legislative provisions and explanatory language for each of these proposals.

If you need anything else, please let us know.

With warmest personal regards, we are

Sincerely,

JOHN C. DANFORTH,
Ranking Member.
ERNEST F. HOLLINGS,
Chairman.

TITLE III—COMMERCE COMMITTEE

SUBTITLE A—USER FEES

Section 301. Coast Guard user fees

This section directs the establishment of Coast Guard user fees. Specifically, it directs the Coast Guard to implement a user fee system for direct and indirect services to collect $200 million dollars in each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995. The amount collected over the five years, FY 1991 through FY 1995, with inflation included, totals $1.077 billion. Further, the legislation limits the use of indirect fees established under this section to apply only to vessels operating in navigable waters where the Coast Guard has a presence.

Section 302. Railroad safety user fees

This section amends the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 to establish a system of fees for the regulatory oversight of railroad safety provided by the Federal Railroad Administration, comparable to those previously authorized by Congress for the provision of federal pipeline safety regulation. The Secretary of Transportation is to establish a schedule of fees to be assessed the railroads based on such criteria as revenue ton-miles, track miles, passenger miles, revenues, other relevant factors, or an appropriate combination of these.

This program is expected to raise $20 million in FY 1991, $37 million in FY 1992 and FY 1993, and $38 million in FY 1994 and FY 1995. The fees collected shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts. The fees assessed shall at least equal the appropriations made for the rail safety program but in no event shall the fees collected exceed 105 percent of the appropriations level.

Section 303. Tourism user fees

This section directs the collection of a tourism "user fee" on commercial airlines and passenger ship lines which carry passengers to and from the United States. The argument in support of this fee is that these entities receive a direct benefit from the activities of the United States Travel and Tourism Administration (USTTA).

This section would amend the International Travel Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 21246) to provide that:

(A) the Secretary of Commerce shall charge each commercial air carrier and passenger ship an amount equal to one dollar—multiplied by the number of non-excluded passengers arriving at points-of-entry;

(B) passengers excluded from the fee are:

(1) those arriving only for immediate and continuous passage through the United States;

(2) those whose journey originates in Canada, Mexico, or a territory or possession of the United States.

For FY 1991, the fee is expected to generate $7 million. For FY 1992 through FY 1995, it is estimated that the fee would generate at least $14 million. The fees collected shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as offsetting receipts. The fees assessed shall at least equal the appropriations made for the USTTA but in no event shall they exceed 105 percent of the appropriations level.

Section 304. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration user fees

This section authorizes the establishment of user fees for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), estimated to raise $5 million annually by assessing a fee based on "fair market value" to recipients of NOAA data and information. Currently, section 409 of Public Law No. 100-685 (15 U.S.C. 1534) authorizes the Secretary of Commerce, on behalf of NOAA, to assess fees based on fair market value for data provided only by the NOAA National Environmental Satellite, Data and Information Service (NESDIS). This section amends section 409 to extend the authority of the Secretary, on behalf of NOAA, to charge fees based upon fair market value to all commercial users of NOAA data, information and products.

This amendment is necessary due to current statutes which prohibit Federal entities from establishing fees in excess of the total costs (direct and indirect) to the Government of rendering a special service or thing of value to a beneficiary. In support of this proposal, it is argued that oceanic and atmospheric data produced by NOAA have considerable value to relevant industries which use these products to make a profit. The proposal would waive fees as necessary to continue to provide weather warnings, forecasts and other essential NOAA services. Fees for nautical and aeronautical products have separate statutory authority (44 U.S.C. 1007) and would not be affected by this legislation.

SUBTITLE B—AIRPORT CAPACITY

National noise policy

This legislation requires the Secretary of Transportation to promulgate a national noise policy by January 1992. This policy is to include:

A phase-out date for Stage 2 aircraft;

Review of existing or proposed local airport noise restrictions by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA);

No restrictions for operation of Stage 3 aircraft; and

A prohibition against a Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) being imposed at an airport unless the airport has conducted a noise compatibility study.

Passenger facility charge

PFCs may be authorized after a National Noise Policy is in place and when the balance in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund is $4 billion. The PFC authority shall be terminated any time appropriations for FAA Trust Fund programs, including Essential Air Service, fall below 95% during the fiscal year.

An airport sponsor must consult with users and local entities before applying to the Secretary of Transportation (Secretary) for PFC authority. If there is no disagreement, the PFC shall be approved. If there is disagreement, the Secretary shall not approve the PFC unless it would benefit significantly airport security, safety, noise mitigation or capacity.

PFCs may be used only for projects eligible under the Airport Improvement Program (AIP) and for gates.

Slots

The provisions included are those of S. 2851 (except for the treatment of Washington National Airport with respect to the High Density Rule and new entrants) which was reported favorably by the Commerce Committee in July 31, 1990.

Under these provisions, as of July 12, 1990, carriers may no longer buy, sell, or lease slots at the High Density Airports (LaGuardia, Kennedy, O'Hare, Washington National). Certain exemptions apply to existing leases, slots involved in the sale of a carrier, and commuter slots.

The legislation also directs the FAA to increase capacity for new entrants (i.e. carriers holding less than 12 slots) at the LaGuardia, Kennedy, and O'Hare airports by 5% for 18 months before abolition of the High Density Rule. With respect to Washington National Airport, it directs the FAA to create a pool of 30 daily air carrier special authorizations at that airport which will not exceed the total number of authorized daily operations under the High Density Rule. These authorizations are only for air carriers with fewer than 12 existing slots at Washington National and are to be allocated by lottery.

The High Density Rule is to be repealed 18 months after enactment, except as it applies to Washington National Airport. On January 1, 1994, the FAA shall initiate a review of the method of controlling operations at Washington National Airport to determine the impact on safety, competition, congestion, and capacity, among other things, and shall report not later than January 1, 1995, to Congress with findings and recommendations.

The Administrator of the FAA must certify to Congress that restrictions are required for safety considerations before the Administrator can reimpose a rule restricting operations at any airport.

The Secretary must do a study of the public interest significance of shuttle operations in the northeast United States, and report to Congress with any appropriate recommendations within 12 months.

Military airports

This legislation establishes a set-aside in the AIP for converting former military airports to civil use. It further provides that .5% of the airport program funds are to be used for grants for five such airports to be named by the Secretary.

Labor protection provisions

The legislation protects seniority rights of flight deck crew members in mergers and acquisitions.

Other provisions

The legislation includes the following:

It establishes an Auxiliary Flight Service Station program.

It authorizes the FAA to make grants for an air transportation center to one or more schools in each of 10 federal regions.

It transfers safety functions from the Secretary back to the FAA Administrator.

The FAA is to do a study within 6 months on the environmental impact of the air traffic East Coast plan for the New Jersey area.

Hawaii provision

The legislation directs the FAA Administrator to issue regulations to prohibit aircraft overflights of national disaster areas in the State of Hawaii. This prohibition is not to apply in the case of scientific need or emergency.

Atlantic City airport

The legislation would strike as no longer necessary an existing provision in the Airport and Airway Safety and Capacity Act of 1987 relating to the Atlantic City airport.

FAA technical changes

The legislation discontinues a report required by the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 and clarifies language regarding sensitive security information and disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act.

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The enclosed legislation and report are submitted in accordance with the reconciliation instruction contained in H. Con. Res. 310, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal year 1991. The recommendations of the Committee include changes in existing laws within its jurisdiction to achieve reductions in outlays required for fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

The Committee ordered reported legislation incorporating language from two bills previously reported: the Tongass Timber Reform Act (H.R. 987, as amended and passed by the Senate on June 13, 1990) and the Uranium Enrichment Act of 1989 (S. 83, as amended and passed by the Senate on July 29, 1989). The Tongass bill is incorporated exactly as it passed the Senate. The Uranium Enrichment Act of 1989 has been modified to provide for the following: 1) preclusion of payments in lieu of taxes by the Uranium Enrichment Corporation until fiscal year 1996; 2) restrictions on the expenditures of the Corporation and requirements to pay dividends during fiscal years 1991-1995; and 3) establishment of a fee of two-tenths of a mill per kilowatt hour on net generation of electricity by each civilian nuclear power reactor during fiscal years 1991-1995.

Our discussions with Budget Committee staff and CBO staff indicate that approval of these two measures will more than meet our reconciliation instructions of $36 million in fiscal year 1991 and $364 million for fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

JAMES A. MCCLURE,
Ranking minority member,
J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
Chairman.

TITLE V—REPORT LANGUAGE

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY FEES

Section 1 requires the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to collect $154,000,000 in fees for services provided by the Agency over the five year period fiscal years 1991-1995. A rulemaking is required for any fee or charge assessed under the programs administered by the Agency.

The President's budget for FY91 includes an EPA user fee proposal based on pesticide registrations, toxic chemical notifications, radon mitigation, water permits, and motor vehicle testing. This provision gives the Agency the flexibility to assess these fees, as well as to consider others in the programs it administers. However, the Agency should relate fees directly to the cost to the Agency for the services provided.

There is one specific fee that merits comment. If the Agency proceeds with the imposition of Sec. 402 National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) permit fees, the Agency should not assess such fees on municipal dischargers. Since municipal wastewater treatment facilities are partially Federal funded, they should not be required to pay a Federal permit fee. This exclusion is specified in the legislation.

To enable the Agency and Congress to account for the receipts that accrue through user fees and charges, a provision is included to require that fees be deposited in a special fund at the Department of the Treasury, for appropriation to the Agency and to the program for which the fee was collected. This provision is consistent with the proposal contained in the President's FY91 budget.

NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION USER FEES AND ANNUAL CHARGES

Section 2 amends the Atomic Energy Act to require the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) to recover 100 percent of its budget for fiscal years 1991 through 1995 from the collection of annual charges from NRC licensees.

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (P.L. 99-272) established permanent fee collection authority for the NRC at a maximum level equal to 33 percent of the Commission's annual estimated costs. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (P.L. 100-203) authorized a fee collection increase to 45 percent of the Commission's budget for fiscal years 1988 and 1989, as did the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. Without additional legislation, the user fee recovery level for fiscal year 1991 would revert to the 33 percent level.

The present standard for the collection of these charges is increased to 100 percent for each of the next five years. In fiscal year 1996, the NRC would still be required to collect fees for services provided or things of value received from the Commission, but would no longer be required to assess annual charges.

To the maximum extent practicable, the annual charges shall be assessed of all licensees, shall be reasonably related to the regulatory service provided by the Commission to the licensee, and shall fairly reflect the cost to the Commission of providing such services.

RECREATION USER FEES

The Department of the Army, through the Army Corps of Engineers, administers one of the largest systems for outdoor recreation in the entire Federal Government. Currently, the bulk of the cost of operating and maintaining this program is borne by the general taxpayer even though an easily identifiable group—those who actually visit Corps recreation sites—derive a benefit at little or no direct cost.

The purpose of this proposal is to authorize the collection of recreation user fees for use of specialized recreation sites and facilities, including but not limited to, improved campsites, swimming beaches, and boat launching ramps at water development areas administered by the Department of the Army. Enactment of this legislation would remove existing restrictions on the authority of the Department of the Army to impose charges for use of certain developed recreation areas under its administration and would eliminate the requirement to provide one free campground at each project where camping is permitted. The legislation, however, is not intended to authorize the imposition of fees for general public access to water development projects. In addition, it is not intended to mandate that the Corps charge fees at all recreation sites, regardless of the cost of collecting such fees.

It is estimated that the imposition of recreation user fees will generate $20 million annually in new revenue, all of which would be utilized to off-set recreation maintenance costs.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I hereby submit the statutory language implementing the recommendations of the Committee on Finance for purposes of the reconciliation bill provided for in H. Con. Res. 310, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1991. Also enclosed are materials which explain these provisions along with a recommendation of the Committee concerning the budgetary treatment of the Social Security program.

These statutory provisions will reduce outlays for programs within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance by $4.2 billion in fiscal year 1991 and by $52.7 billion over fiscal years 1991-1995. The revenue provisions will increase Federal receipts by $17.3 billion in fiscal year 1991 and by $142.1 over the five year period. As directed by the budget resolution, the Committee on Finance is also submitting statutory language which will provide additional borrowing authority under the statutory debt limit in an amount not to exceed $1,900 billion.

Sincerely,

LLOYD BENTSEN,
Chairman.

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with the requirements of Sec. 310(b) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, enclosed is draft legislation to the Environment and Public Works Committee contained in H. Con. Res. 310. This legislation should result in savings of $329 million in fiscal year 1991, and will total $1,808 billion over the next five years.

We have also enclosed report language to accompany the legislation and provided 10 copies as you requested.

Sincerely,

JOHN H. CHAFEE.
QUENTIN N. BURDICK.

TITLE IV—COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

SUBTITLE A—TONGASS TIMBER REFORM

Subtitle A of the reconciliation language of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources includes, with certain conforming changes, the provisions of H.R. 987 as passed by the Senate. The Committee report accompanying H.R. 987 (S. Rpt. 101-261) is incorporated herein by reference. Among other things, Subtitle A would permanently repeal the $40 million direct appropriation to the Tongass National Forest Timber Supply Fund as called for in the Budget Summit Agreement. It also provides certain fisheries and forest protection, modifies long-term timber sale contracts, and provides for certain land exchanges.

Subtitle A contains the following provisions not described in S. Rept. 101-261 which were contained in floor amendments to the bill.

During consideration of H.R. 987, the Senate adopted several amendments which were not addressed in the Committee report. As reported from the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, section 103 of H.R. 987 directed the Secretary of Agriculture to maintain 100-foot buffer zones on all Class I streams and the first 300 feet of Class II streams which flow directly into Class I streams. The Senate amended the language to provide protection for all Class II streams in the Tongass.

Section 201 of the Committee reported bill was amended to correct a mapping error in the Yakutat Forelands LUD II Management Area. Section 402 was added to H.R. 987 during floor consideration and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare a study regarding recommendations on the need to standarize riparian management practices within the Tongass. The Senate also added Title V during floor consideration which provides for the United States to exchange 1,151 acres in the Echo Cove area of the Tongass for approximately 2,600 acres of land in the Hobart Bay area of Tongass.

In addition, the Senate added Title VI to H.R. 987 which directs the Secretary of Agriculture to engage in expedited negotiations regarding two proposed land exchanges within the Tongass.

SUBTITLE B—URANIUM ENRICHMENT ACT

Subtitle B of the Committee's reconciliation language includes, with certain modifications and conforming changes, the provisions of S. 83 which establishes the United States Enrichment Corporation. The report accompanying S. 83 (S. Rpt. 101-60) is incorporated herein by reference.

The principal modifications to S. 83 made by the reconciliation language are: (1) preclusion of payments in lieu of taxes by the Corporation until fiscal year 1996; (2) restrictions on the expenditures of the Corporation and requirements to pay dividends during fiscal years 1991 through 1995; and (3) establishment of a fee of two-tenths of a mill per kilowatt hour on net generation of electricity by each civilian nuclear power reactor during fiscal years 1991 through 1995: "for purposes of reimbursing the Corporation for the costs of decontaminating and decommissioning uranium enrichment facilities of the Corporation which costs are attributable to the provision of separative work and other enrichment services to commercial customers prior to the enactment of this title."

For purposes of the fee, "net generation of electricity" shall not include electricity generated by a reactor but consumed by internal loads. In addition, it is intended that each licensee of a civilian nuclear power reactor allocate a proportionate share of the fee to all users of electricity from such reactor.

TITLE VI—NON-REVENUE PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE
SUBTITLE A—INCOME SECURITY
Part I—Child Support Enforcement
1. Extension of IRS Intercept for Non-AFDC Families (Section 6001)

Present law

States may collect child support arrearages of at least $500 owed to non-AFDC families through the Federal income tax refund offset mechanism. This provision expires at the end of 1990. A similar mechanism is authorized permanently for AFDC families, but the limit on arrearages is set at $150 by regulations. The arrearages must be owed to a "minor child." Spousal support is excluded from the definition of support that can be collected through this offset.

Proposed change

The provision permanently extends the present law provision that allows States to ask the IRS to collect child support arrearages of at least $500 out of income tax refunds otherwise due to non-custodial parents. The minor child restriction would be eliminated for adults with a current support order who are disabled, as defined under OASDI or SSI. In addition, the offset could be used for spousal support when spousal and child support are included in the same support order.

The provision would take effect on January 1, 1991.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, $1; 1992, $1; 1993, $2; 1994, $2; 1995, $3; 5-year, $9.

2. EXTENSION OF INTERSTATE CHILD SUPPORT COMMISSION (SECTION 6002)

Present law

The Family Support Act of 1988 established the Interstate Child Support Commission to report to Congress no later than May 1, 1991 on recommendations for improvements in the child support enforcement system and the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. The Commission expires on July 1, 1991.

Proposed change

The provision would extend the life of the Commission to July 1, 1992 and would require it to submit its report no later than May 1, 1992. Also, the provision would authorize the Commission to hire its own staff.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 0; 1992, 0; 1993, 0; 1994, 0; 1995, 0; 5-year, 0.

Part II—Supplemental Security Income

1. Work Incentives

(a) Eliminate the Age Limit on Section 1619 Eligibility (Section 6010)

Present law

To be eligible for the Medicaid-only benefit under the section 1619 work incentive provisions an individual must be under 65 years old.

Proposed change

The provision would eliminate this age limit and would be effective in the eighteenth month after the date of enactment.

(b) Treatment of Impairment-Related Work Expenses (Section 6011)

Present law

Impairment-related work expenses (IRWE) are excluded from a disabled individual's earnings for determinations of: (1) whether earnings constitute "substantial gainful activity;" (2) the benefit amount of an eligible disabled individual; and (3) continuing eligibility on the basis of income.

Proposed change

The proposal would exclude impairment-related work expenses from income in determining initial eligibility and reeligibility for SSI benefits, and in determining State supplementary payments.

The provision would take effect for months following the month of enactment.

(c) Treat Certain Royalties and Honoraria as Earned Income (Section 6012)

Present law

Under present law, royalties received are considered unearned income under the SSI program unless they are from self-employment in a royalty-related trade or business. Honoraria are also considered unearned income. This results in a dollar-for-dollar loss of SSI benefits.

Proposed change

Any royalty which is earned in connection with the publication of an individual's work, or any honorarium which is received for services rendered would be treated as earned income for purposes of SSI eligibility and benefit determination. This would mean that income from these sources would be disregarded to the same extent that income from other types of earnings is disregarded (i.e., the first $65 of monthly earnings plus 50 percent of additional earnings).

The effective date for the provision would be the eighteenth month beginning after the date of enactment.

2. Evaluation of Child's Disability By Pediatricians (Section 6013)

Present law

Present law does not require that a pediatrician or other qualified specialist be involved in the evaluation of a child's disability case.

Proposed change

The provision would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make reasonable efforts to ensure that a qualified pediatrician or other specialist in a field of medicine appropriate to the disability of the child evaluate the child's disability for purposes of determining eligibility for SSI.

The provision would take effect in the month beginning 6 months after the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, *; 1992, 2; 1993, 2; 1994, 2; 1995, 2; 5-year, 8.

3. Concurrent Applications for SSI and Food Stamps (Section 6014)

Present law

Public Law 99-570, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, amended the Social Security Act to require the Secretaries of HHS and Agriculture to develop a procedure to allow institutionalized individuals who are about to be released to make a single application for both SSI and food stamp benefits.

Proposed change

The provision would permit the Secretary of HHS to: (1) use a single application form for the food stamp and SSI programs; or (2) take concurrent applications for the SSI and food stamp programs.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, *; 1992, *; 1993, *; 1994, *; 1995, *; 5-year, *.

4. Reimbursement for Vocational Rehabilitation Services (Section 6015)

Present law

The Secretary of HHS is required to refer blind and disabled individuals who are receiving SSI benefits to State vocational rehabilitation agencies and is authorized to reimburse these agencies for the reasonable and necessary costs of the vocational rehabilitation services that are provided to recipients under certain specified conditions. Reimbursement is not allowable with respect to services provided to individuals who are not receiving cash benefits but who are eligible for Medicaid benefits because they are in "special status" under 1619(b), are in suspended benefit status, or are receiving Federally-administered State supplementary payments but not Federal SSI benefits.

Proposed change

The provision would implement a recommendation of the Disability Advisory Council to authorize reimbursement for vocational rehabilitation services provided to individuals who are not currently receiving Federal SSI benefits but who are in "special status" under section 1619(b), are in suspended benefit status, or are receiving Federally—administered State supplementary payments. The provision would apply to claims for reimbursement pending on or after the date of enactment.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, *; 1992, *; 1993, *; 1994, *; 1995, *; 5-year, *.

5. Disregard of Trust Contributions (Sections 6016-6018)

Present law

The term "trust" is not defined in either SSI law or regulations. SSI policy, as expressed in the program's operating manual, is to treat a trust as a resource when an individual owns the assets in the trust and, acting on his own behalf or through an agent (such as a representative payee for SSI benefits), has the legal right to use them for his own food, clothing, or shelter. If, however, the individual does not have the legal authority to access trust assets for his own food, clothing, or shelter (e.g., there is an intervening trustee), the trust is not considered a resource.

Cash payments made to an individual, including those from a trust (regardless of whether the trust is considered a resource), are considered income in the month received. Noncash payments (i.e., actual food, clothing, or shelter) are also considered income. However, there are special rules under which noncash payments are presumed to have a maximum value of one-third of the Federal SSI monthly benefit amount, plus a $20-a-month income exclusion. If a person can show that any in-kind support and maintenance provided is less than the "presumed value," the lesser amount is considered income. Thus, any cash payments or noncash income for food, clothing, or shelter affects SSI benefits and eligibility status.

Proposed change

The SSI statute would be amended to specify that a trust established for an SSI recipient to which the recipient does not have legal access would not be counted as a resource, and certain non-cash contributions to a recipient would not be counted as income. In addition, the Secretary of HHS would be required to inform the family of a child who is awarded a retroactive payment as the result of the decision of the Supreme Court in Sullivan v. Zebley that the family may be able to place the payment in a trust for the benefit of the child. This information need not be provided in the form of a separate notice, but may be included in the notice of award of the retroactive payment.

Part III—Aid to Families with Dependent Children

1. State Option to Require Monthly Reporting and Retrospective Budgeting (Section 6020)

Present law

Under section 402(a)(14) of the Social Security Act, States must require families with earned income or a recent work history to provide a monthly report on: (1) income and family composition during the prior month; and (2) estimates of the income and resources anticipated in the current or future months. With the approval of the Secretary, a State may select categories of these families to report at less frequent intervals, if monthly reporting is not cost effective.

AFDC eligibility and benefits are determined monthly. Generally, a family's eligibility for and amount of aid for a month are based on the family's income, composition and resources in that month. However, under section 402(a)(13) of the Social Security Act, for families who are subject to monthly reporting requirements, States are required to calculate benefits based upon retrospective budgeting. Under retrospective budgeting, although eligibility is based on the family's circumstances in the current month, payment amounts are based on the family's income in the first or second month preceding the current month.

Proposed change

The provision would give States the option of specifying from which categories of families, if any, monthly reports will be required. If the State exercises the option, it must describe in its State plan the categories subject to the reporting requirement. Further, the State may choose to apply the retrospective budgeting technique to any one or more of the categories to whom the reporting requirement applies.

The provision would take effect with respect to reports pertaining to, or aid payable for, months after September 1990.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, *; 1992, *; 1993, *; 1994, *; 1995, *; 5-year, *;

2. Treatment of Foster Care Maintenance Payments and Adoption Assistance (Section 6021)

Present law

Prior to October 1, 1984, a child receiving State or Federal foster care maintenance payments or adoption assistance did not have to be included in the AFDC family unit, and the income and resources of the child did not count as the income and resources of the AFDC family. A family unit rule implemented as part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, however, required that any parent or sibling of a dependent child be included in the AFDC unit. This rule applied to any sibling receiving foster care or adoption assistance.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 amended AFDC law retroactively to October 1, 1984 to provide that, in determining a family's eligibility for or amount of AFDC benefits, a child receiving foster care maintenance payments under title IV-E would not be regarded as a member of the family, and the income and resources of the child would not be counted as the income and resources of the family (Section 478 of the Social Security Act).

Proposed change

A child receiving State and/or local foster care maintenance payments would not be regarded as a member of an AFDC family for purposes of determining a family's eligibility for or amount of AFDC benefits, and the child's income and resources would not be counted as the income and resources of the family.

Further, a child receiving adoption assistance payments under title IV-E, or State and/or local adoption assistance payments would not be regarded as a member of an AFDC family for the purposes of determining a family's eligibility for or amount of AFDC benefits, and the child's income and resources would not be counted as the income and resources of the family unless this would result in lower benefits for the family.

The provision would also move the section 478 provision, as amended, from title VI-E of the Social Security Act to title IV-A.

The provision would take effect in the month beginning six months after the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, *; 1992, 1; 1993, 1; 1994, 1; 1995, 1; 5-year, 4.

3. Eliminating the Use of the Term "Legal Guardian" (Section 6022)

Present law

Section 402(a)(39) of the Social Security Act requires that, in determining AFDC benefits for a dependent child whose parent or legal guardian is under the age of 18, the State agency must include the income of the minor parent's own parents or legal guardian who are living in the same home.

Proposed change

The provision would delete all references to legal guardians.

Legal guardianship is not relevant to eligibility determination or the deeming of income under the AFDC program. For example, the use of the term "legal guardian" in the first instance is irrelevant since, even if such a guardian were appointed, the child would not be eligible for AFDC unless living with a relative specified in section 406 of the Social Security Act.

The use of the term "legal guardian" in the second instance is also inappropriate in the context of the AFDC statute. Unlike the parent-child relationship, legal guardianship has not been a basis for attributing income to AFDC beneficiaries. Using legal guardianship as a source of attributed income in three-generation families creates unequal treatment under the program. For example, if a minor child is living with an aunt who is her legal guardian, the aunt's income is not automatically attributed to the AFDC beneficiary; however, if the minor has a child, the guardian's income is included in the AFDC determination for the minor and her child.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 0; 1992, 0; 1993, 0; 1994, 0; 1995, 0; 5-year, 0.

4. Reporting of Child Abuse and Neglect (Section 6023)

Present law

Under current law, both the title IV-A (AFDC) and title IV-E (foster care and adoption assistance) State plan requirements stipulate that State agencies must report to appropriate court or law enforcement agencies instances of a child receiving program aid who is residing in a home that is unsuitable because the child is subject to abuse, neglect or exploitation (Sections 402(a)(16) and 471(a)(9) of the Social Security Act).

Proposed change

The provision would amend the AFDC, foster care and adoption assistance State plan requirements to require that each State agency report, to an appropriate agency or official, known or suspected instances of child abuse and neglect of a child receiving program aid. This would include instances of physical or mental injury, sexual abuse or exploitation, or negligent treatment or maltreatment under circumstances which indicate that the child's health or welfare is threatened. The State agency would also be required to provide such information with respect to the situation as it may have.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions); 1991* 1992* 1993* 1994* 1995* 5-year,*.

5. Permissible Uses of AFDC Information (Section 6024)

Present law

Section 402(a)(9) of the Social Security Act restricts the use of disclosure of information about AFDC applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with: (1) the administration of the AFDC program or several other specified Social Security Act programs; (2) any investigation, prosecution, or criminal or civil proceeding conducted in connection with such programs; (3) the administration of any other Federal or Federally-assisted program providing assistance or services to individuals on the basis of need; and (4) any audit of such programs.

Proposed change

The provision would add an explicit reference to title IV-E, the foster care and adoption assistance programs, to the list of programs for which information about AFDC applicants and recipients may be made available.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millins): 1991, 0; 1992, 0; 1993, 0; 1994, 0; 1995, 0; 5-year, 0.

6. Repatriation (Section 6025)

Present law

Section 1113 of the Social Security Act authorizes the Secretary to provide temporary assistance to U.S. citizens and their dependents if they: (1) have returned or been brought from a foreign country to the U.S. because of destitution or illness, or war, threat of war, invasion or similar crisis; and (2) are without resources.

Prior to June, 1990, the maximum amount of temporary assistance that could be provided in one fiscal year equaled $300,000. In June, 1990, the Secretary requested that the $300,000 limit be increased to $1 million, to accommodate the repatriation of several hundred Americans from Liberia. This increase was enacted in P.L. 101-382. According to the Secretary, the subsequent Iraqi invasion of Kuwait has placed new and unpredictable demands on the repatriation program. The Secretary expects the resulting program costs to exceed $1 million.

Proposed change

The provision temporarily repeals the $1 million spending cap for the repatriation program for fiscal year 1990 and 1991, and permits HHS to receive gifts from those wishing to contribute assistance to repatriated Americans through the repatriation program.

7. Technical Amendment to Allow Good Cause Exception (Section 6026)

Present law

Under current law, as a condition of eligibility for AFDC, a parent must cooperate with the child support enforcement (IV-D) agency in establishing paternity, and in obtaining and enforcing a support order unless there is "good cause" for refusal. "Good cause" includes such factors as reasonable belief that cooperation could result in physical or emotional harm to the child or caretaker relative, and other factors established by regulation. The Family Support Act of 1988 established a similar requirement for cooperation with the IV-D agency in order for a family to be eligible to receive child care transition benefits. However, the "good cause" exception was omitted.

Proposed change

The good cause exception from cooperation with the IV-D agency would be made applicable to transitional child care benefits to make it consistent with the exception that applies to AFDC cash benefits.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 0; 1992, 0; 1993, 0; 1994, 0; 1995, 0; 5-year, 0.

8. JOBS Technical Correction Regarding Penalty for Failure to Participate (Section 6027)

Present law

The Family Support Act of 1988 added a penalty provision to the AFDC statute (section 402(a)(19)(G)) that provides that if the principal earner (in the case of a family eligible on the basis of the unemployment of the principal earner (AFDC-UP) fails to participate in the JOBS program as required, the needs of that individual will not be taken into account in determining the amount of the family's AFDC benefit. If the spouse is not participating, the needs of the spouse will also not be taken into account. The penalty does not apply to benefits on behalf of any child in the family. When this new penalty language was added, however, the language contained in section 407 imposing a penalty for any child in the family if the principal earner failed to meet employment and training participation requirements was not repealed.

Proposed change

The statute would be clarified by repealing the penalty language in section 407 that requires a reduction in AFDC benefits on behalf of a child in an AFDC-UP family if the principal earner fails to participate in the JOBS program.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

9. Technical Correction Regarding AFDC-UP Eligiblity Requirements (Section 6028)

Present law

Prior to October 1, 1990, participation in the Work Incentive (WIN) and Community Work Experience (CWEP) programs counted in the definition of "quarter of work" for purposes of qualifying a family for AFDC-UP. Title IV of the Family Support Act of 1988 amended the definition of "quarter of work" to include participation in JOBS, but deleted references to WIN and CWEP. The result is that beginning October 1, 1990, prior participation in WIN or CWEP will not count toward the "quarter of work" requirement for purposes of establishing eligibility for AFDC-UP.

Proposed change

Section 407(d) would be amended to allow participation in WIN and CWEP prior to October 1990 to count toward the "quarter of work" requirement for purposes of AFDC-UP eligiblity.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

10. Children's Commission Reporting Date (Section 6029)

Present law

The National Commission on Children is directed to study and recommend to the President and the Congress ways to improve the well-being of children. P.L. 101-239 included an amendment to the original legislation that was intended to establish a final reporting date for the Commission of March 31, 1991. The Amendment as enacted, however, includes a technical error.

Proposed change

The statute would be corrected to clarify that the final reporting date for the Commission is March 31, 1991.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 0; 1992, 0; 1993, 0; 1994, 0; 1995, 0; 5-year, 0.

11. Community Development Demonstration Technical Correction (Section 6030)

Present law

The Family Support Act of 1988 authorized the Secretary of HHS to enter into agreements with up to 10 nonprofit organizations (including community development corporations) for the purpose of conducting demonstration projects to create employment opportunities for certain low income individuals. The authorization for the demonstrations is $6.5 million for each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992.

Proposed change

The statute would be clarified to specify that the Secretary could enter into agreements with up to 10 nonprofit organizations each year. There would be no increase in the authorization.

12. GAO Study of JOBS Funding for Indian Tribes (Section 6031)

Present law

Under the Family Support Act of 1988, Indian tribes (or Alaska Native organizations) may apply to operate JOBS programs. The statute required that, in order to be considered by the Secretary, an application for Federal funding must be made within six months after enactment of the Family Support Act.

If an application is approved, the Secretary may grant funds to the tribe or Alaska Native organization (without a non-Federal matching requirement) to operate a JOBS program. The amount of funds is based on the ratio of adult recipients in the tribe relative to the adult recipients in the State. (The State's cap is appropriately reduced.) Requirements of the JOBS program may be waived if the Secretary determines that they are inappropriate.

Proposed change

The bill would direct the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of how the provisions with respect to Indian tribes and Alaska Native organizations have been implemented by the Secretary and by such tribes and organizations, to describe any problems that may have been experienced in implementing the provisions, to determine to the extent possible the effectiveness of JOBS programs that are being operated by Indian tribes and Alsaka Native organizations, and to make recommendations as to any legislative or administrative changes that could be made to improve the effectiveness of such programs.

13. Moratorium on Final Reguations for Emergency Assistance (Section 6032)

Present law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (P.L. 101-239) included a provision stating that any final regulation which would change any policy in effect immediately before the date of the enactment of that Act with respect to the use of emergency assistance or special needs funds under the AFDC program could not take effect before October 1, 1990.

Proposed change

The date on prohibition of issuance of final regulations would be extended to October 1, 1991.

Part IV—Child Welfare, Foster Care, and Child Care

1. Accounting for Administrative Costs (Section 6040)

Present law

States are entitled to Federal reimbursement at a rate of 50 percent for expenditures made for the proper and efficient administration of the State title IV-E plan.

Under current law and regulation, Federal matching for administrative costs includes matching for activities that involve placement of the child in foster care, as well as what are ordinarily considered administrative "overhead" costs. These include activities related to child protections mandated by the Child Welfare and Adoption Assistance Amendments of 1980, such as: referral to services at time of intake; preparation for, and participation in, judicial determinations; development of a case plan for the child; periodic reviews of the child's case plan; and case management and supervision.

Although there are no official program data showing what portion of administrative costs go for child placement activities as opposed to ordinary administrative overhead, the Inspector General has estimated that only about 20 percent of foster care administrative costs represent what are traditionally considered administrative overhead expenses.

Proposed change

Title IV-E would be amended to specifically add "child placement services" as activities for which States are entitled to receive Federal reimbursement. This is not intended in any way to change the type of activities for which States are currently allowed to claim Federal reimbursement as an administrative cost under title IV-E. In order to provide the Congress with more specific information on how these child placement and administrative matching funds are being spent, the Congress expects that the Secretary will develop and establish uniform definitions for the activities reimbursable as child placement services and administration, and will require the States to account for expenditures according to these activities.

The provision would take effect on the date of enactment.

2. Section 427 Triennial Reviews (Section 6041)

Present law

Public Law 96-272, the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Amendments of 1980, was designed to provide financial incentives to the States to implement and operate a set of services and procedures to prevent the unnecessary removal of children from their home, prevent extended stays in foster care, and ensure that efforts are made to reunify children with their families or place them for adoption. The services and procedures are outlined in section 427 of the Social Security Act.

According to the HHS Section 427 Review Handbook, to verify compliance with section 427 requirements, HHS conducts a two-stage review. The first stage is an administrative review which determines whether States have developed policy and procedures to implement the section 427 requirements for all children in foster care under the responsibility of the State. The second stage of the review is the case record survey which confirms that the policies are being implemented throughout the State.

An initial review is conducted for the fiscal year in which the State first certifies its eligibility. If a State meets the initial review, a subsequent review is conducted for the following fiscal year. States that meet the requirements of this subsequent review will be reviewed for the third fiscal year following the fiscal year for which the subsequent review was conducted, and every third year thereafter. This is known as the triennial review. The case record survey must confirm that the section 427 foster care protections are provided for at least 66% of the children in the initial review, 80% in the subsequent review, and 90% in the triennial review. If a State does not meet the established standards for the year under review, the review is conducted each succeeding year until eligibility is established.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 included a provision which prohibited the Secretary from, before October 1, 1990, reducing payments to, seeking repayment from, or withholding any payments for any State as a result of a disallowance determination made in connection with a triennial review of State compliance with the section 427 foster care protections, for any fiscal year proceding fiscal year 1991.

HHS has convened a department-wide task force to review and revise the current section 427 review process. Draft regulations are expected during calendar year 1991.

Proposed change

The provison would extend the current prohibition on reducing payments to, seeking repayment from, or withholding payments from States to October 1, 1991, to apply to any determinations made in conection with a triennial review for any Federal fiscal year preceding fiscal year 1992.

The provision would take effect on October 1, 1990.

3. Independent Living to Age 21 at State Option (Section 6042)

Present law

The Independent Living Initiatives Program is a State entitlement program under title IV-E designed to help ease the transition of foster children age 16 and older to independent living. Independent living services may include school and vocational training, living skills training, housing location and career planning assistance, counseling service coordination, outreach, and the development of plans for independent living as part of the case plan.

Proposed change

The statute would be amended to allow States to include youths who have been "discharged" from the foster care system in services provided under the indepenedent living program, up to age 21.

The provision would take effect on October 1, 1990.

4. Grants to States for child care (Section 6043)

Present law

Federal matching is available to States on an entitlement basis to provide child care for AFDC parents who are participating in the JOBS program, and to provide child care for a period of 12 month after the family loses eligibility for AFDC as a result of increased hours of, or increased income from, employment.

Proposed change

Funding for the existing title IV child care program would be increased to provide $65 million for each of fiscal years 1991-1995 to enable States to provide child care to low income non-AFDC families that the State determines (1) need such care in order to work, and (2) would otherwise be at risk of becoming dependent upon AFDC. Capped entitlement funds would be allocated on the basis of child population. Rules relating to Federal matching rates, standards, reimbursement, and fee schedules would remain the same as in current law. States would be required to report annually to the Secretary on child care activities carried out with funds under this entitlement. It is the Committee's intent that States will have maximum flexibility in determining how these funds are used.

In addition, the authorization for grants (enacted in the Family Support Act of 1988) to enable States to improve their child care licensing and registration requirements and procedures, and to monitor child care provided to children receiving AFDC, would be extended to provide $35 million for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994 for these purposes.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 39; 1992, 57; 1993, 65; 1994, 65; 1995, 65; 5-year, 291.

Part V—Old-age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance

1. Make Permanent the Continuation of Disability Benefits During Appeal (Section 6050)

Present law

A disability insurance (DI) beneficiary who is determined to be no longer disabled may appeal the determination sequentially through three appellate levels within the Social Security Administration (SSA): a reconsideration, usually conducted by the State Disability Determination Service that rendered the initial unfavorable determination; a hearing before an SSA administrative law judge (ALJ); and a review by a member of SSA's Appeals Council.

The beneficiary has the option of having his or her benefits continued through the hearing stage of appeal. If the earlier unfavorable determinations are upheld by the ALJ, the benefits are subject to recovery by the agency. (If an appeal is made in good faith, benefit recovery may be waived.) Medicare eligibility is also continued, but medicare benefits are not subject to recovery.

The Disability Reform Amendments of 1984 (P.L. 98-460) provided benefits through the hearing stage on a temporary basis. This provision was subsequently extended, most recently by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (P.L. 101-239). That Act extends the provision to appeals of termination decisions made on or before December 31, 1990. Under this latest extension, payments may continue through June 30, 1991 (i.e., through the July 1991 check).

Proposed change

The provision would make the temporary provision permanent. Thus, on a permanent basis, beneficiaries would have the option of having their DI and medicare benefits continued through the hearing stage of appeal. As under current law, DI benefits would be subject to recovery where the ALJ upheld the earlier unfavorable decision, while medicare benefits would not be subject to subsequent recovery.

The provision would be effective upon enactment.

Budget Impact (in millions); 1991, 9; 1992, 40; 1993, 53; 1994, 62; 1995, 71; 5-year, 235.

2. Improvement of the Definition of Disability Applied to Disabled Widow(er)s (Section 6051)

Present law

A widow(er) or surviving divorced spouse of a worker may be entitled to widow(er)'s benefits if he or she is age 60, or at any age if he or she is caring for the worker's child who is under age 16. A widow(er) or surviving divorced spouse with no child in care and who is under age 60 but is at least age 50 may be eligible for widow(er)'s benefits as a disabled widow(er).

Generally, disability is defined as an inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity (defined in regulations as earnings of $500 per month, effective January 1, 1990) by reason of a physical or mental impairment. The impairment must be medically determinable and expected to last for not less than 12 months or to result in death. A person (other than a disabled widow(er)) may be determined to be disabled only if, due to this impairment, he or she is unable to engage in any kind of substantial gainful work, considering his or her age, education and work experience, which exists in the national economy.

The definition of disability which is applied to widow(er)s, however, is stricter than that which is applied to workers and to Supplemental Security Income (SSI) disability applicants. First, a widow(er) must have a disability severe enough to prevent him or her from engaging in "any gainful activity" (little or no earnings at all) rather than substantial gainful activity (ordinarily, earnings of more than $500 per month). Second, for a disabled widow(er) the three vocational factors used in determining a worker's disability—age, education, and work experience—are not considered. Therefore, the disability must be established based on medical evidence alone.

Once SSA determines that an individual is disabled, there is a five-month waiting period before disability benefits are payable. Once disability benefits begin, there is a 24-month waiting period for entitlement to medicare benefits.

The stricter test of disability for disabled widow(er)s was established in the Social Security Amendments of 1967, which created this new entitlement to benefits. In explaining the reasons for the more restrictive rules, Chairman Wilbur Mills stated on the House floor, "We wrote this provision of the bill very narrowly, because it represents a step into an unexplored area where cost potentials are an important consideration."

Proposed change

The provision of benefits to widow(er)s on the basis of disability has been found not to be a significant cost to the trust fund. Therefore, the provision would repeal the stricter defintion of disability that must be met by a disabled widow(er) age 50-59 in order to qualify for widow(er)'s benefits and instead apply the definition of disability used for workers. Widow(er)s who had been receiving SSI disability benefits or social security disability benefits on their own work records prior to becoming eligible for disabled widow(er)'s benefits would be able to count the months beginning with the month they first received these benefits toward satisfying the five-month waiting period for disability benefits and the 24-month waiting period for medicare benefits. In addition, widow(er)s who receive SSI disability benefits prior to becoming entitled to disabled widow(er)'s benefits would not lose medicaid eligibility as a result of receiving a higher social security benefit, but only for so long as they are not entitled to medicare benefits.

The provision would be effective for benefits payable for months after December, 1990, but only on the basis of applications filed on or after January 1, 1991. The Secretary would not be required to make a new determination of disability for widow(er)s receiving SSI or disabled worker's benefits prior to becoming entitled to disabled widow(er)'s benefits. SSA would be required, to the extent possible, to notify such individuals of their eligibility for disabled widow(er)'s benefits.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 21; 1992, 51; 1993, 83; 1994, 103; 1995, 128; 5-year, 385.

3. Payment of Benefits to a Child Adopted by a Surviving Spouse (Section 6052)

Present law

A child adopted by the surviving spouse of a deceased worker must meet two tests in order to the entitled to benefits as a surviving child. First, adoption proceedings must have been initiated prior to the worker's death, or the adoption must have been completed within two years of the worker's death. Second, the child must have been living in the worker's home and cannot have been receiving support from any source other than the worker or the spouse (e.g., a foster care program) in the year prior to the worker's death.

Proposed change

A child adopted by the surviving spouse of a deceased worker would be entitled to survivor's benefits if the child either lived with the worker or received one-half support from the worker in the year prior to death. The requirements relating to the timing of the adoption would not be changed.

The provision would be effective with respect to benefits payable for months after December 1990, but only on the basis of applications filed on or after January 1, 1991.

4. Improvements in the Representative Payee System (Section 6053)

Present law

Under current law, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may appoint a relative or some other person (known as a "representative payee") to receive social security or SSI benefit payments on behalf of a beneficiary whenever it appears to the Secretary that the appointment of a representative payee would be in the best interest of the beneficiary.

The Secretary is required to investigate each individual applying to be a representative payee either prior to, or within 45 days after, the Secretary certifies payment of benefits to that individual. Present law does not specify what shall be included in the investigation.

The Secretary is required to maintain a system of accountability monitoring under which each representative payee is required to report not less than anually regarding the use of the payments. The Secretary is required to review the reports and identify instances where payments are not being properly used.

Any individual convicted of a felony under section 208 or section 1632 of the Social Security Act may not be certified as a representative payee.

Proposed change

a. Investigations of representative payee applicants

During the investigation of the representative payee applicant, the Secretary would be required to: (1) require the representative payee applicant to submit documented proof of identity; (2) conduct a face-to-face interview with the representative payee applicant when practicable; (3) verify the social security account number or employer identification number of the representative payee applicant; (4) determine whether the representative payee applicant has been convicted of a social security felony under section 208 or section 1632 of the Social Security Act; and (5) determine whether the representative payee applicant had ever been dismissed as a representative payee for misuse of a beneficiary's funds. An individual who had been convicted of a felony under section 208 or section 1632, or dismissed as a representative payee for misuse of the benefit payment, would not be permitted to be certified as a representative payee on or after January 1, 1991. The Secretary would be permitted to issue regulations under which an exemption from the prohibition against certification in the case of misuse would be granted on a case-by-case basis, if the exemption would be in the best interest of the beneficiary. The Committee intends that the exemption would be granted only in rare instances.

The Secretary would be required to: (1) terminate payments to a representative payee where the Secretary or court of law found that the representative payee and misused the benefit payments; (2) maintain a list of those terminated for misuse on or after January 1, 1991; and (3) provide such a list to local field offices. If the computer program necessary to maintain such a list is not developed by January 1, 1991, the list should be maintained manually. Under current SSA policy, misuse is defined as converting benefit payments for personal use, or otherwise diverting the payments in bad faith with a reckless indifference to the welfare and interests of the beneficiary. The Committee expects the Secretary to apply this definition under this provision.

The Secretary would be required to maintain a centralized, current file readily retrievable by all local SSA offices of: (1) the address and social security account number (or employer identification number) of each representative payee; and (2) the address and social security account number of each beneficiary for whom each representative payee is providing services as representative payee. In addition, local service offices would be required to maintain a list of all public agencies and community-based nonprofit social service agencies qualified to serve as a representative payee in the area served by such office.

Current law prohibits any individual convicted of a felony under section 208 or section 1632 of the Social Security Act from serving as representative payee. The provision would require SSA to maintain a list of those convicted and make it readily available to local field offices.

b. Withholding of benefits

In cases where the Secretary is unable to fine a representative payee, and the Secretary determines that it would cause the social security beneficiary or SSI recipient substantial harm to make direct payment, the Secretary would be permitted to withhold payment for up to one month. Not later than the expiration of the one month period, the Secretary would be required to begin direct payment to the beneficiary starting with the current months' benefit unless the beneficiary had been declared legally incompetent or was under age 15. Retroactive benefits would be withheld until a representative payee has been appointed or the Secretary determines a suitable representative payee could not be found. Retroactive benefits would be paid over such period as the Secretary determines is in the best interest of the beneficiary.

It is not the intention of the Committee to encourage SSA to withhold benefits from a beneficiary whom the Secretary has determined to need a representative payee. The beneficiary should be paid directly if at all possible, especially if the beneficiary had been using the benefit payment to meet immediate needs such as shelter, food and clothing.

The Committee does not wish SSA to view the one month withholding period as a routinely acceptable length of time in which to find a representative payee. The Committee expects SSA to make every effort to find a qualified representative payee for an individual as quickly as possible.

The Committee recognizes that in some cases (such as an unreported change of address) SSA may not be officially notified of the need to change a representative payee. The Committee intends that the 1-month period of suspension shall be measured from the point the Secretary first becomes aware that a representative payee issue exists, and shall consider the objective of this provision met so long as the Secretary takes prompt action to minimize interruption of benefits.

c. Limitations on the appointment of representative payee

An individual who is a creditor providing goods and services to an OASDI or SSI beneficiary for consideration would be precluded from serving as the beneficiary's representative payee with certain exceptions. The exceptions would include: (1) a relative who resides in the same household as the beneficiary; (2) a legal guardian or representative; (3) a facility licensed or certified under State or local law; (4) an administrator, owner, or employee of such facility if the beneficiary resides in the facility and the local social security office has made a good faith effort to locate an alternative representative payee; and (5) an individual whom the Secretary determines to be acceptable based on a written finding reached under established rules that require the individual to show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he or she poses no risk to the beneficiary, that the individual's financial relationship with the beneficiary poses no substantial conflict of interest, and no other more suitable representative payee exists.

d. Appeal rights and notices

The beneficiary would have the right to: (1) appeal the Secretary's determination of the need for a representative payee; and (2) appeal the designation of a particular person to serve as representative payee. In appealing either the determination or the designation, the beneficiary (or the applicant in cases of initial entitlement) would have a right to review the evidence upon which the determination was based and to submit additional evidence to support the appeal.

The Secretary would be required to send a written notice of the determination of the need for a representative payee to the beneficiary (Other than a child under age 18 living with his parents), and each person authorized to act on behalf of an individual who is legally incompetent or is a minor.

The provision would require that the notices be provided in advance of any benefits being paid to a representative payee. In addition, the notice must be clearly written and explain the beneficiary's rights in an easily understandable manner.

e. High-risk representative payees

The Secretary would be required to study and provide recommendations as to the feasibility and desirability of formulating stricter accounting requirements for all high-risk representative payees and providing for more stringent review of all accounting from such representative payees. The Secretary would be required to define as high-risk representative payees: (1) non-relative representative payees who do not live with the beneficiary; (2) those who serve as a representative payee for five or more beneficiaries (under title II, title XVI or a combination thereof) and who are not related to them; (3) creditors of the beneficiary; and (4) any other group determined by the Secretary to be high-risk.

The purpose of the provision is to identify groups or individuals serving as representative payee who may be likely to misuse or improperly use benefit payments. At a minimum, the Committee expects SSA to examine board and care operators, nursing homes, and individuals who are not related to the beneficiary. The proposal does not apply to Federal or State governmental institutions.

f. Underpayment of benefits

In cases where the negligent failure of the Secretary to investigate or monitor a representative payee result in misused benefits, the Secretary would be required to make repayment to the beneficiary. In addition, the Secretary would be required to make a good faith effort to obtain restitution of any misused funds.

g. Fee for representative payee services

Community-based non-profit social service agencies, in existence on October 1, 1988, which are bonded or licensed by their states and regularly serve as representative payees for five or more beneficiaries would be allowed to collect a monthly fee for representative payee services. The fee would be collected from the beneficiary's social security or SSI payment not to exceed the lesser of ten percent of the monthly benefit due or $25.

The provision would sunset after three years. The Secretary would be required to keep track of the number and type of groups who participated under this provision and report back to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance at the end of two years.

In general, the provision would prohibit an agency which is a creditor of the beneficiary from serving as a representative payee but would require the Secretary to develop regulations whereby exceptions would be granted on a case by case basis if the exception is in the best interest of the beneficiary.

The term "community-based, non-profit, social service agencies" means non-profit social service agencies which are representative of communities or significant segments of communities and that regularly provide services for those in need. Guardian, Inc., of Calhoun County, Michigan, is an example of a non-profit organization which regularly provides representative payee services. The Salvation Army, Catholic Charities, and Lutheran Social Services are examples of agencies providing social services to the needy.

Qualified organizations which charge or collect, or make arrangements to charge or collect, a fee in excess of the maximum fee would be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000.

Currently, SSA permits an individual serving as a representative payee to be reimbursed from the beneficiary's check for actual out-of-pocket expenses incurred on behalf of the beneficiary. These expenses include items such as stamps, envelopes, cab fare, or long-distance phone calls. It is the intention of the Committee that such individual representative payees would continue to be reimbursed in this manner. The Committee does not intend these representative payees to receive any additional fee for services.

The General Accounting Office would be directed to conduct a study of the advantages and disadvantages of allowing qualified organizations that charge fees to serve as representative payees to individuals who receive social security and SSI benefits, and to report its finding to the Finance and Ways and Means Committee by January 1, 1993.

h. Studies and demonstration projects

(i) The Secretary would be required to enter into demonstration arrangements with not fewer than two states under which the Secretary would send to such states a list of all addresses where OASDI and SSI benefit payments are received by five or more unrelated beneficiaries. The Secretary would be required to send the information to the state agencies primarily responsible for regulating care facilities or for providing adult or child protective services in the participating states.

The purpose of this demonstration project is to determine whether providing such information to the state protective service agencies would be useful in locating unlicensed board and care homes.

(ii) The Secretary would be required to study the feasibility of determining the type of representative payee applicant most likely to have a felony or misdemeanor conviction, the suitability of individuals with prior convictions to serve as representative payees, and the circumstances under which such applicants could be allowed to serve as representative payee.

The information obtained from this study would assist the Committee in determining whether there are circumstances under which an individual with a conviction should be permitted to serve as a representative payee.

(iii) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, would be required to study the feasibility of establishing and maintaining a list of the names and social security account numbers of those who have been convicted of social security or SSI check fraud violations under section 495 of title 18 of the U.S. Code. As part of the study, the Secretary would be required to consider the feasibility of providing such a list to social security field offices in order to assist claims representatives in the investigation of representative payee applicants. The Secretary would be required to report the results of the study, together with any recommendations, to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance no later than July 1, 1992.

Law enforcement agencies do not report violations under section 495 of title 18 of the U.S. Code to either SSA or the Department of Health and Human Services Inspector General. As a result, SSA is often unaware of arrests and convictions of individuals for violations under this section and therefore fails to obtain restitution or to prevent those convicted of such violations from serving as representative payee.

(iv) The Secretary would be required to conduct a study with the Department of Veterans' Affairs of the feasibility of designating the Department of Veterans' Affairs as the lead agency for administering a representative payee program for dual recipients of Old Age Survivors and Disability Insurance or Supplemental Security Income benefits and veterans' benefits. The Secretary would be required to report to Congress on the feasibility of this arrangement within six months after enactment.

In general, the provision would be effective July 1, 1991.

Budget impact (in millions): 1991, 17; 1992, 4; 1993, 5; 1994, 5; 1995, 5; 5-year, 36.

5. Streamlining of the Attorney Fee Payment Process (Section 6054)

Present law

Attorneys and other persons who represent claimants before the Social Security Administration (SSA) are permitted to collect fees for their services, subject to approval and limits set by SSA. By regulation, the representative must submit a fee petition detailing the number of hours spent on the case and requesting a specific fee. The Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) who heard the case is required to review the fee petition. If the fee requested is less than $3,000, the ALJ has authority to approve or modify it. If the amount requested exceeds $3,000, it must be reviewed and approved or modified by the regional Chief ALJ. Where the claimant is represented by an attorney and a favorable determination is made, SSA by statute may withhold up to 25 percent of the claimant's past-due social security benefits and pay the attorney directly. In cases where the claimant is concurrently entitled to both retroactive social security and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits and the SSI benefits are paid first, the amount of past-due social security benefits payable is reduced by the amount of SSI benefits that would not have been paid if the social security benefits had been paid monthly when due rather than retroactively. In many such cases, this leaves little or no past-due social security benefits out of which to pay the attorney the approved fee.

Proposed change

The provision would generally replace the fee petition process with a streamlined process in which SSA would approve any fee agreement jointly submitted in writing and signed by the representative and the claimant if the Secretary's determination with respect to a claim for past-due benefits was favorable and if the agreed-upon fee did not exceed a limit of 25 percent of the claimant's past-due benefits up to $4,000. The $4,000 limit could be increased periodically for inflation at the Secretary's discretion. If a fee was requested for a claim which did not meet the conditions for the streamlined approval process, it would be reviewed under the regular fee petition process.

A representative who is an attorney would be paid the approved fee out of the claimant's past-due social security benefits, prior to any reduction for previously-paid SSI benefits. However, if the attorney were awarded a fee in excess of 25 percent of the claimant's past-due social security benefits, the amount payable to the attorney out of the attorney out of the past-due social security benefits could not exceed 25 percent of these benefits.

The representative, the claimant, or the ALJ that heard the case would have the right to protest the approved fee. However, the ALJ could protest the approved fee only on the basis of evidence of the failure of the person representing the claimant to represent adequately the claimant's interest, or on the basis of evidence that the fee is clearly excessive for the services rendered. SSA would review any protested fee and approve, modify, or disallow it. If the ALJ that heard the case filed the protest, a different ALJ would review the fee.

It is not the Committee's intent that this process be used to establish regular review of fees at the ALJ level. The Committee wishes to emphasize that the protest of a fee amount by an ALJ is to be made only in cases where there is evidence that the fee is clearly excessive in light of the services rendered.

In addition, with respect to reinbursement for travel expenses of individuals who represent claimants, such reimbursement could not exceed the maximum amount that would be payable for travel to the site of the reconsideration interview or proceeding before an ALJ from a point within the geographical area served by the office having jurisdiction over the interview or proceeding.

With the exception of the provisions relating to direct payment of an attorney's fee out of past-due benefits, conforming changes would be made with respect to representation of SSI applicants.

The provision would be effective for determinations made on or after January 1, 1991, and reimbursement for travel costs incurred on or after January 1, 1991.

6. Improvements in Social Security Administration Services and Beneficiary Protections (Sections 6055-6056)

Present law

a. SSA Telephone Accountability Demonstration Projects: The Social Security Act is silent regarding telephone service provided by SSA. In practice, SSA currently operates 37 teleservice centers (TSCs) that respond to inquiries from the public. In addition to providing general program information, these TSCs can schedule appointments at local offices and provide individual service, including discussing a person's eligibility and taking specific actions regarding his or her benefits. In October 1988, the TSCs were integrated into a toll-free telephone network that covered 60 percent of the population. In October 1989, toll-free service was extended via the TSCs and four new mega-TSCs to the entire country. At the same time, direct telephone access to SSA's local field offices was terminated, so that the public can no longer call most of these offices directly.

Since October 1989, there have been many complaints from the public about SSA's telephone service. These complaints focus on high 800 number busy rates, on problems with the accuracy and completeness of information provided to callers, and on difficulties caused by the elimination of telephone access to local offices.

b. Appeal Versus Reapplication: If a claimant for social security disability benefits successfully appeals an adverse determination by the Secretary, benefits can be paid retroactively for up to 12 months prior to the date of the original application.

If, however, instead of appealing, the claimant reapplies and is subsequently found to be disabled as of the date originally alleged, there are circumstances where retroactive benefits would be limited to 12 months prior to the date of the subsequent application (rather than prior to the date of the first application). This occurs when SSA's "reopening rules" do not permit the original application to be reopened. (SSA's administrative policy permits a case to be reopened within 12 months of an initial determination for any reason; and within four years if there is new and material evidence or the original evidence clearly shows on its face that an error was made in the original decision.)

A reapplication, in lieu of an appeal, also could result in an outright denial of social security or Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits without consideration of an individual's medical condition. This occurs in the case of social security when (i) the claimant's insured status runs out before the date of the original denial, and (ii) there is no new and material evidence and no facts or issues that were not considered in making the prior decision. In the case of SSI, this occurs when (ii) applies. In these situations, SSA applies the legal principle of res judicata to deny the subsequent claim. Under this principle—the use of which is prescribed by SSA regulations—SSA will not consider the same claim again and again.

Prior to May 1989, SSA's standard denial notice informed claimants that they could reapply at any time but did not explain the potential adverse consequences of reapplying versus appealing a denial. A May 1989 modification of this notice informs claimants that reapplying may result in a loss of benefits but does not mention the second problem described above, i.e., an outright denial of eligibility without further consideration of the evidence.

Proposed change

The provision would establish an additional set of protections for claimants and beneficiaries.

a. SSA Telephone Accountability Demonstration Projects: The Secretary would be required to carry out demonstration projects testing a set of accountability procedures in at least three teleservice centers. These procedures are intended to assure that individuals who conduct business with the agency via telephone concerning title II, title XVI, or title XVIII benefits are not disadvantaged, either as a result of receiving incorrect information or from their inability to document their own actions and requests. Under these procedures, callers who provide adequate identifying information would be given a written confirmation of the date and nature of their telephone communication with the agency. This confirmation would include the name of the SSA employee with whom the caller spoke, a description of any action that the employee said would be taken in response to the call, and any advice that the caller was given. SSA would be required to maintain a copy of this confirmation for a minimum of five years following the termination of the demonstration projects.

Routine telephone communication would be excluded from these requirements. Thus, callers making inquiries that do not relate to potential or current entitlement or eligibility for title II, title XVI or title XVIII benefits—i.e., questions about the location or hours of operation of local offices—would not be subject to the accountability procedures described above.

The Secretary would be required to issue a report to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance on the demonstration projects. This report would:

(i) assess the costs and benefits of the accountability procedures;

(ii) identify any major difficulties encountered in implementing the demonstration projects; and

(iii) assess the feasibility of implementing the accountability procedures nationally.

The telephone demonstration projects would be required to be initiated within six months of the enactment of this Act, and would continue for one to three years. The report would be submitted 90 days after the termination of the projects.

b. Appeal Versus Reapplication: When a claimant for social security or SSI benefits can demonstrate that he or she failed to appeal an adverse decision because of reliance on incorrect, incomplete, or misleading information provided by SSA, his or her failure to appeal could not serve as the basis for denial by the Secretary of a second application for any payment under title II or title XVI. This protection would apply to both initial denials and reconsiderations by the Secretary. The Secretary also would be required to include in all notices of denial a clear, simple description of the effect on possible entitlement to benefits of reapplying rather than filing an appeal.

The provision would apply to adverse determinations made on or after January 1, 1991.

7. Restoration of Telephone Access to the Local Offices of the Social Security Administration (Section 6057)

Present law

The Social Security Act is silent regarding telephone service provided by the Social Security Administration (SSA). In practice, SSA currently operates 37 teleservice centers (TSCs) that respond to inquiries from the public. In addition to providing general program information, these TSCs can schedule appointments at local offices and provide individual service, including discussing a person's eligibility and taking specific actions regarding his or her benefits. In October 1988, the TSCs were integrated into a toll-free telephone network that covered 60 percent of the population. In October 1989, toll-free service was extended via the TSCs and four new mega-TSCs to the entire country. At the same time, direct telephone access to SSA's local field offices was terminated, so that the public can no longer call most of these offices directly.

Proposed change

The provision would require the Secretary to reestablish telephone access to local SSA offices at the level generally available on September 30, 1989 (the date just prior to the cut-off of direct telephone access to most local offices). The Secretary would also be required to re-list these local office numbers in local telephone directories (as well as in the directories used by public telephone operators in providing callers with information). The required telephone listings could include a brief instruction to the public to call SSA's 800 number for general information.

In addition, by January 1, 1993, the Secretary would be required to submit to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means a report which: (i) assesses the impact of the requirements established by this provision on SSA's allocation of resources, workload levels, and service to the public, and (ii) presents a plan for using new, innovative technologies to enhance access to the Social Security Administration, including access to local offices. If the Secretary's plan provides for maintaining or enhancing public access to local offices by individuals in need of assistance from a local SSA representative, it is the Committee's intent to reconsider the need for a statutory requirement governing telephone access. Ninety days after the enactment of this provision, the General Accounting Office would be required to report to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means on the level of public telephone access to the local offices of the Social Security Administration.

The provision would require restoration of SSA's local telephone service by April 1, 1991.

8. Improvement in Earnings and Benefit Statements (Section 6058)

Present law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 required the Social Security Administration to establish a program under which covered workers receive periodic statements concerning their earnings and the potential benefits payable on the basis of those earnings. Under that legislation, these statements are to be provided on a biennial basis starting October 1, 1999.

Proposed change

The requirement that earnings and benefit statements be provided biennially starting in 1999 would be modified to require annual statements beginning at that time. In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to disclose to the Commissioner of Social Security the mailing address of any taxpayer who is entitled to receive an earnings and benefit statement.

The provision would be effective upon enactment.

9. Provide a Rolling Five-Year Trial Work Period for All Disabled Beneficiaries (Section 6059)

Present law

Under present law, disability beneficiaries who are still disabled but who want to return to work despite their disabling condition are entitled to a nine-month trial work period. (The months need not be consecutive.) During this period, disabled beneficiaries may test their ability to work without affecting their entitlement to disability benefits. Any work and earnings are disregarded in determining whether the beneficiary's disability has ceased.

Only one trial work period is allowed in any one period of disability. In addition, an individual who is entitled to disabled worker's benefits for which he has qualified without serving a waiting period (i.e., the worker was previously entitled to disabled worker's benefits within five years before the month he again becomes disabled) is not entitled to a trial work period.

Proposed changes

All beneficiaries would be given an opportunity to test their capacity to engage in substantial gainful activity over a sustained period of time before their benefits would be stopped by providing that a disabled beneficiary would exhaust his nine-month trial work period only if he performed services in any nine months within a rolling 60-month period (that is, within any period of 60 consecutive months) and repealing the provision which precludes a reentitled disabled worker from being eligible for a trial work period.

The provision would be effective January 1, 1992.

10. Continuation of Benefits on Account of Participation in a Non-State Vocational Rehabilitation Program (Section 6060)

Present law

Social security disability insurance (DI) benefits or Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits based on disability that are paid to a beneficiary who has medically recovered may not be terminated or suspended because the disability has ceased if: (1) the individual is participating in an approved State vocational rehabilitation program, and (2) the Commissioner of Social Security determines that completion of the program, or its continuation for a specified period of time, will increase the likelihood that the individual may be permanently removed from the benefit rolls. The 1988 Disability Advisory Council recommended that the same benefit continuation provisions be extended to beneficiaries who medically recover while participating in other approved vocational rehabilitation programs.

Proposed change

The provision would extend to those DI or SSI beneficiaries who medically recover while participating in an approved non-State vocational rehabilitation program the same benefit continuation rights as those who medically recover while participating in a State vocational rehabilitation program.

The provision would be effective with respect to benefits payable for months after the eleventh month following the month of enactment and would apply with respect to individuals whose disability ceased after such eleventh month.

11. Limitation on New Entitlement to Special Age-72 Payments (Section 6061)

Present law

Special age-72 benefits (so-called "Prouty benefits" after Senator Winston Prouty of Vermont) were enacted in 1966 to provide some payment to individuals who, when the social security program began or when coverage was extended to their jobs, were too old to earn enough quarters of coverage to become fully insured for regular retirement benefits.

When the benefits were created in 1966, it was expected that new entitlement under this provision would not be possible for anyone reaching age 72 after 1971. This is because individuals age 72 after 1971 who met the quarters-of-coverage requirements for Prouty benefits would also have enough quarters of coverage to be fully insured, and because the amount of the Prouty benefits was less than the amount of the minimum benefit payable at age 62. However, due to subsequent changes in the law, it is now theoretically possible for certain people who will reach age 72 after 1990 and who receive the frozen minimum benefit (due to a change in the law in 1977) or who receive less than the minimum benefit (due to its elimination in 1982) to become newly eligible for Prouty benefits. In 1990, the Prouty benefit amount is $159 per month.

Proposed change

The provision would preclude the unintended payment of Prouty benefits (due to the interaction of the Prouty benefit provision with subsequent changes in the law affecting the minimum benefit) by providing that Prouty benefits would not be payable to any individual reaching age 72 after 1971 who files an application for Prouty benefits after December 31, 1990. This change would not affect any current beneficiaries.

The provision would be effective upon enactment.

12. Elimination of Advance Tax Transfer (Section 6062)

Present law

Because of the threatened insolvency of the social security trust funds, the Social Security Amendments of 1983 changed the rules for crediting the trust funds with social security tax receipts. Prior to 1983, the trust funds were credited with the receipts as they were collected throughout each month. Under the 1983 amendments, the trust funds are credited at the start of each month with the full amount of social security tax receipts which are expected to be collected throughout the month. These receipts are invested in interest bearing Treasury securities; however, an interest adjustment is made later to leave the trust funds with the same interest earnings that they would have had if the taxes had been credited on an "as received basis." When the debt subject to limit approaches the level of the debt limit, the present crediting rules frequently present Treasury with a situation in which trust fund assets cannot be invested because the debt limit has been reached.

Proposed change

The advance tax transfer provisions would be repealed, returning to the prior procedure of crediting the trust funds as tax receipts are received. However, the advanced tax transfer mechanism would be retained as a contingency to be exercised only to the extent that the Secretary of the Treasury determines is necessary to assure sufficient funds to meet current benefit obligations. This would give the social security program the same level of protection that it enjoys under present law without continuing the routine use of the advance transfer mechanism.

The provision would be effective after December 1990.

13. Repeal of Retroactive Benefits for Certain Categories of Individuals (Section 6063)

Present law

Social security retirement and survivor benefits can be paid for up to six months prior to the month of application if the applicant were otherwise eligible for benefits during that period.

In general, retroactive benefits cannot be paid if doing so would cause a reduction in future monthly benefits (i.e., it would effectively mean that an individual would be filing for "early retirement," in which case an actuarial reduction in benefits is required.) For example, if a retroactive application for retirement benefits were to cause a retiree's initial entitlement month to fall before the individual reached age 65, no retroactive benefits could be paid for the months prior to age 65. However, there are four exceptions to this rule which permit payment of retroactive benefits even though it causes an actuarial reduction in benefits.

Proposed change

The provision would eliminate eligibility for retroactive benefits for two categories of individuals eligible for actuarially reduced benefits: (1) individuals who have dependents who would be entitled to unreduced benefits during the retroactive period (e.g., a retiree under age 65 who has a spouse age 65 or over); and (2) individuals who have pre-retirement earnings over the amount allowed under the social security retirement test that could be charged off against benefits for months prior to the month of application, thus permitting an early retiree to receive benefits for months prior to actual retirement.

The provision would be effective with respect to applications for benefits filed on or after January 1, 1991.

14. Consolidation of Old Computation Methods (Section 6064)

Present law

A number of old, rarely-used benefit computation methods remain in the Social Security Act. They apply only to claims in which the worker filed for benefits or died before 1967 and are used only if they provide a higher benefit than newer computation methods.

Such computations must be done manually. The Social Security Administration (SSA) estimates it would cost more to develop computer programs for these computation methods than would be paid in cumulative added benefits when the benefits payable under these computation methods are compared to newer computation methods.

Proposed change

The provision would eliminate all old computation methods which require manual intervention. It would substitute newer computation methods which may be fully processed by computer.

The provision would apply only to new claims for benefits, virtually all of which are for survivor's benefits, and to recomputations for retired workers now on the rolls who have recent earnings. However, it is unlikely that there are many individuals who are over 85 and are working at a wage high enough to result in an increase in benefits after a recomputation using a computation method to be eliminated under this provision. No benefits paid to individuals already on the rolls would be reduced.

The provision would be effective 18 months after the month of enactment.

15. Suspension of Dependent's Benefits When a Disabled Worker Is in an Extended Period of Eligibility (Section 6065)

Present law

A disability insurance beneficiary who successfuly completes a nine-month trial work period has an extended period of eligibility during which he or she continues to receive medicare benefits and is eligible to receive disability benefits if earnings fall below $500 a month. The law is silent regarding the payment of benefits to dependents during this extended period. However, current Social Security Administration (SSA) policy provides that dependent's benefits are suspended during this period if the disabled worker's benefits are suspended.

Proposed change

The provision would codify current SSA policy which links the disabled worker's entitlement to monthly benefits and the dependent's entitlement to benefits for the same month. Thus, a dependent could receive benefits for a month only if the disabled worker received benefits for that month.

The proposal would be effective upon enactment.

16. Recommendation of the Committee Concerning the Budgetary Treatment of Social Security

The Committee recommends that the income and outgo of the social security tax revenues and other elements of trust fund income such as interest, transfers of receipts from the income taxation of benefits, and other payments to the trust fund, be excluded from any calculations of the surplus or deficit of the general government including the deficit totals used for purposes of applying the sequestration provisions of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act ("Gramm-Rudman").

MEDICARE PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL CAPITAL

Present law

Capital-related costs (including depreciation, leases, rentals and interest) are excluded from Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS), for cost reporting periods beginning before October 1, 1991, and are reimbursed on a reasonable cost basis. The Secretary of HHS is required to implement a prospective payment system for inpatient hospital capital beginning on October 1, 1991.

Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, Medicare payments for inpatient hospital capital were reduced by 15% during FY1990, so that Medicare is paying 85% of reasonable costs for capital. Sole community hospitals are exempt from these reductions. In FY1991, under present law, Medicare payments for inpatient hospital capital are scheduled to revert to 100% of reasonable costs.

The President's Budget proposes setting Medicare's payment for inpatient hospital costs at 75% of reasonable costs for urban hospitals and 85% of reasonable costs for rural hospitals. These reductions would be made permanent.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would reimburse Medicare capital at costs minus 15% for fiscal year 1991, and costs minus 10% for 1992 through 1995. It is the expectation of the Committee that the Secretary will implement a policy by which capital-related costs will be paid on a prospective basis as scheduled beginning on October 1, 1991.

The provision would also modify the requirement that the Secretary implement a prospective payment system for inpatient hospital capital beginning in fiscal year 1992 in two ways. First, it would require that payments for capital-related costs in fiscal year 1992 be no greater or no less than what they would have been had all capital payments be made on the basis of 90% of reasonable costs. Second, it would allow the Secretary to adopt a new capital payment policy that continues to make payments for fixed capital/costs on a reasonable cost basis.

PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT SYSTEM (PPS) UPDATE

Present law

Under Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS) hospitals are paid a fixed amount per discharge, adjusted from geographic wage variation, teaching or disproportionate share status, and other factors. When PPS was created in 1983, separate fixed rates were developed for hospitals located in urban and rural areas to reflect the best available data about the relative cost of caring for Medicare patients. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA 1987), a further distinction was made between hospitals located in large urban areas (over 1 million population) and hospitals in other urban areas, with the result that there are now three basic Medicare PPS rates. Taking into account more generous increases for hospitals in rural and large urban areas legislated in recent years, the basic payment rate for rural hospitals in 1990 is 8%-9% lower than the two urban rates.

Under current law, the increase in payment rates for fiscal year 1991 is set to equal 5.2%, which is the projected increase in the hospital market basket, a specialized measure of the increase in the prices of goods and services purchased by hospitals.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would update the PPS rates by market basket minus 2% for fiscal year 1991 (for an increase of 3.2%), market basket minus 1.5% for fiscal year 1992, market basket minus 1.4% for fiscal year 1993, and the full market basket increase for fiscal years 1994 and thereafter. The fiscal year 1991 update provision would be effective for discharges occurring on or after January 1, 1991. For discharges occurring during the first three months of fiscal year 1991, hospitals would receive an update factor equal to the projected market basket rate of increase.

PHASE OUT OF URBAN/RURAL DIFFERENTIAL

Present law

Under the Medicare Prospective Payment system (PPS), payments to hospitals are made using a basic PPS rate, adjusted for to reflect geographic differences in wages, variation in teaching and disproportionate share status and other factors. When PPS was created in 1983, separate fixed rates were developed for hospitals located in urban and rural areas to reflect the best available data about the relative cost of caring for Medicare patients. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA 1987), a further distinction was made between hospitals located in large urban areas (over 1 million population) and hospitals in other urban areas, with the result that there are now three basic Medicare PPS rates. Taking into account more generous increases for hospitals in rural and large urban areas legislated in recent years, the basic payment rate for rural hospitals in 1990 is 8 percent-9 percent lower than the two urban rates. OBRA 89 requires that the Secretary of HHS develop by October 1, 1990 a legislative proposal to eliminate the differential by fiscal year 1995, including recommendations, where appropriate, for modifying or maintaining other payment adjustments, including those for teaching hospitals, referral centers disproportionate share hospitals and outlier cases.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would phase out the differential between the standardized amounts for hospitals in rural and other urban areas (those with a population of less than 1 million people) by the beginning of fiscal year 1995. This would be achieved through modifications in the update factor for rural hospitals. Rural hospitals would receive the full market basket update in fiscal years 1991 through 1993 (as opposed to the update reductions specified for all hospitals); the remaining differential would be eliminated by fiscal year 1995. The separate standardized amounts for hospitals in large urban areas (those with 1 million people or more) would be continued.

With regard to the report mandated by OBRA 1989, the Committee intends to carefully review and consider any proposals the Secretary may make for modifying or maintaining the separate rate for large urban areas or for changes to other payment adjustments that may be appropriate once the differential is eliminated.

HOSPITAL WAGE INDEX

Present law

Under Medicare's hospital prospective payment system, the fixed payment for each patient is adjusted by a wage index which reflects the relative level of hospital wages in the particular geographic area compared to national average hospital wages. The wage index is based on a survey of hospital wages conducted by the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA). In FY90, the hospital wage index is based on data from FY84. Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, HCFA is required to update the wage index for fiscal years 1991 and 1994, and every year after that, in a budget neutral fashion. In keeping with the statutory requirement for updating the wage index for 1991, HCFA has published a regulation adopting a wage index for 1991 based on a survey of 1988 hospital wages. H.J. Res. 666 delayed implementation of the new wage index.

To the extent determined feasible by the Secretary, the hospital wage survey conducted to compute the wage index shall measure earnings by occupational category. In its March 1990 report, the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission recommended that the Secretary of HHS begin immediately to collect data on employee compensation and paid hours of employment for hospital workers in each occupational category, then carefully evaluate the effect of adjusting the area wage index for differences in the occupational mix of employment.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would require that for discharges occurring during fiscal year 1991, the hospital wage index be based on a blend of 75% of the wage index based on 1988 hospital survey data and 25% of the wage index based on 1984 hospital survey data.

The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission would be required to examine State-level and other available data measuring hospital wages by occupational category. In its annual report due March 1, 1991, the Commission would report the results of its analysis and make recommendations regarding the feasibility and desirability of modifying the wage index to take into account occupational mix. In considering alternative computations or adjustments to the wage index, ProPAC would examine and take into account variation in occupational mix resulting from differences, in State codes and requirements.

INDIRECT MEDICAL EDUCATION

Present law

Medicare pays teaching hospitals an additional percentage amount for each discharge to reflect the indirect costs of medical education. The add-on percentage is computed for each hospital using a formula based on the hospital's ratio of interns and residents to beds. The formula reflects an average adjustment of 7.65% for each 0.1 increase in the hospital's ratio of interns and residents to beds. The adjustment is scheduled to increase to 8.29% in FY1996, when Medicare's disproportionate share adjustment is scheduled to expire. Under the current formula, a hospital with 5 residents for every 100 beds receives an adjustment of 3.8 percent; a hospital with 25 residents per 100 beds receives an adjustment of 17.9 percent. In FY1991, about 20%, or about 1,200 of the nation's 5700 prospective payment system hospitals will receive indirect medical education payments totalling $2.5 billion.

Medicare first recognized the indirect costs of medical education in 1980, when limits on hospital payment per day were adjusted upward by 4.7% for teaching hospitals. In 1982, limits on payment per case were increased by 6.06% for teaching hospitals. When the prospective payment system was created in 1983, the adjustment was increased to 11.59% to account for severity of illness. The adjustment was reduced to 8.1% by the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 and to 7.65% by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

Numerous studies have analyzed the relationship between the level of a hospital's teaching activity and the hospital's Medicare cost per case. Conclusions about the appropriate level of the adjustment depend on which factors known to affect hospital costs are explicitly taken into account, as well as on the age of the data analyzed. Reductions in the indirect medical education adjustment have been recommended by the General Accounting Office (GAO) and the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (ProPAC). GAO estimates that an adjustment factor of between 3.73% and 6.26% would be justified, depending on which factors affecting Medicare costs are taken into account, and recommends an adjustment of 5.09% as most appropriate. ProPAC analysis supports an adjustment as low as 3.2%, but the Commission recommended lowering the adjustment only to 6.8% in 1991 out of concern for the overall financial health of teaching hospitals.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would reduce the indirect medical education adjustment factor from 7.7% to 6.8%, effective for discharges occurring on or after January 1, 1991.

EXCEPTIONS AND ADJUSTMENTS FOR PPS-EXEMPT HOSPITALS

Present law

Four types of specialty hospitals—psychiatric, rehabilitation, childrens', and long-term, are exempt from Medicare's prospective payment system and are paid reasonable costs, subject to an annual limit on the increase in the individual hospital's average cost per case. (Hospitals with increases below the limit receive bonus payments). These cost per case figures are generally based on FY 1982 data indexed forward. The Secretary is directed to provide an exemption from, or an adjustment to a hospital's target rate if events beyond the hospital's control, or extraordinary circumstances, including changes in case mix, cause a distortion in the hospital's cost per case. OBRA 89 explicitly authorized the Secretary to adjust a hospital's base year as one method of providing an adjustment.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would amend the Contractor Performance and Evaluation standards to require fiscal intermediaries to forward applications to HCFA within 60 days of receiving a completed application. The Secretary would be required to act on the application within 180 days of receiving a completed application from the fiscal intermediary. The provision would also clarify the grounds on which appeals can be granted by instructing the Secretary to take into consideration changes in technologies, medical practices or case mix severity, relatively high increases in wages, and other factors the Secretary considers appropriate. The Health Care Financing Administration would be required to provide assistance to fiscal intermediaries and providers with regard to filing applications for exemption, exception and adjustment. It is the intent of the Committee to make improvements in the timeliness with which the decisions are made, and to give guidance with regard to criteria that may be applied as part of the Secretary's deliberations. The decision to grant an exemption, exception or adjustment is clearly at the discretion of the Secretary.

ELIMINATE 210 DAY LIMIT ON HOSPICE SERVICES

Present law

Medicare beneficiaries may elect to receive hospice benefits if a physician certifies that they are terminally ill, (defined as having a life expectancy of 6 months or less). Beneficiaries electing hospice benefits are entitled to up to 210 days of services elected by two 90-day periods of service and one subsequent period of 30 days, so long as they are re-certified as terminally ill. When electing hospice benefits, beneficiaries must waive eligibility for most other Medicare benefits.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would allow for election of an additional benefit period without time limit so that Medicare beneficiaries suffering from a terminal illness would be allowed to continue receiving hospice services until their death. Effective January 1, 1990. In imposing this effective date, it is the expectation of the Committee that providers will be responsible for the identification of individuals who would have been eligible for additional days of hospice care during 1990.

WAIVER OF LIABILITY FOR HOME HEALTH, SNF, AND HOSPICE

Present law

Under part A of Medicare, providers are allowed to collect payment from intermediaries after a claim has been denied if a finding is made that neither the beneficiary nor the provider knew or could reasonably have been expected to know that the items or services were not covered. However, certain providers can earn a presumption, or "waiver of liability", that allows them not to be held liable for uncovered services they provided if they meet certain criteria. By meeting the criteria, providers are essentially presumed not to have known that the service would not be covered and their liability for paying for that service therefore can be waived. The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 required the Secretary of Health and Human Services to continue what was then the current adminstrative standards for skilled nursing facilities and home health agencies. Under these provisions, a skilled nursing facility is eligible for a presumption of waiver if the percentage of days billed that are later determined to be uncovered is less than 5 percent and a home health agency is eligible if the percentage of visits denied is less than 2.5 percent. The Omnibus Reconcilation Act of 1986 extended the waiver of liability to hospices in a manner similar to home health agencies.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would extend the waiver of liability provisions for home health agencies, hospices, and skilled nursing facilities through 1995.

ESSENTIAL ACCESS COMMUNITY HOSPITAL PROGRAM

Present law

The Essential Access Community Hospital program authorizes up to $10 million for grants to up to 7 states to develop a rural health plan that creates rural health networks, promotes regionalization of rural health services in the state, improves access to hospital and other health services for rural residents in the state and enhances the provision of emergency and other transportation services related to health care. A participating state may designate a facility as an Essential Access Community Hospital (EACH) if it is located in a rural area, is more than 35 miles from another facility that is designated as an EACH or a referral center, has at least 75 beds, or is located more than 35 miles from any other hospital. An EACH must also agree to provide emergency and medical back up services to hospitals participating in the rural health network that are designated as Rural Primary Care Hospitals (RPCH). A State may designate a facility as an PRCH if it is located in a rural area, is in compliance with Medicare conditions of hospital participation at the time it applies for designation, provides 24 hour emergency care, provides no more than 6 inpatient beds for providing inpatient care for up to 72 hours to patients requiring stabilization before discharge or transfer to another hospital. The Secretary is authorized to waive certain requirements in designating EACHs and PRCHs. The Secretary is also authorized to designate up to 15 facilities as RPCHs that are not in states receiving grants. Authorizes $15 million in grants to hospitals, facilities, and consortia for the purposes of converting to EACH or RPCH status, or in becoming part of a rural health network in a State.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would modify criteria for designation of rural primary care hospitals by (1) requiring the Secretary to give perference to facilities that have entered into an agreement to be part of a rural health network in a state receiving a grant, (2) allowing hospitals that have closed within the past 12 months could qualify as a RPCHs, and (3) allowing States to designate as RPCHs facilities that do not meet the 6 bed and 72 hour inpatient treatment criteria if they meet alternative criteria imposed by the State that limit the number of inpatient beds and the duration of inpatient treatment.

It is the expectation of the Committee that the Secretary, when appropriate, will use existing authority to waive certain requirements in designating facilities as EACHs and RPCHs. In particular, the Committee encourages the Secretary to waive criteria in the case of facilities that are not more than 35 miles from another hospital but meet the travel time criteria established by the Secretary in designating hospitals as sole community hospitals under section 1886(d)(5)(D)(iii)(II).

PROPAC RESPONSIBILITIES

Present law

The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (ProPAC) recommends to the Secretary by March 1st each year the appropriate percentage change in payment for hospital inpatient discharges. ProPAC also recommends to the Secretary needed changes in the classification and weighting factors of the diagnosis-related groups (DRGs), based on its evaluation of scientific evidence with respect to new practices, and reports to the Congress with respect to its evaluation of any adjustments made by the Secretary. The Commission consists of 17 individuals appointed by the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment. The Office shall report annually to the Congress on the functioning and progress of the Commission.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would clarify and expand the responsibilities of the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission in several ways. ProPAC would be required to report to the Congress by June 1st of each year on issues facing the American health care system, including trends in health care costs; hospital financial conditions under the Medicare program and in general, trends in the use of health care services; and innovative strategies used by employers and private insurers to constrain growth in health care costs. The Commission would be required to conduct analyses and make recommendations each year regarding major revisions to the DRGs and other aspects of Medicare's hospital payment system, prospective payment or other modifications to Medicare payment policy for hospital outpatient services, hospitals exempt from PPS, skilled nursing services, and home health services. ProPAC would submit its March 1st report to both the Secretary and the Congress. The requirement for the Office of Technology Assessment to report annually on the functioning and progress of the Commission would be eliminated, as would the requirement for the Commission to report to the Congress on its evaluation of the DRG adjustments made by the Secretary.

ProPAC would be required to conduct a study of hospital payment rates under State Medicaid programs. The study would specifically examine the level of hospital reimbursement under these programs, the relationship between payments to hospitals under the Medicare and Medicaid programs, with particular attention to hospitals in urban areas which treat large numbers of Medicaid recipients and other low-income individuals. ProPAC would report the results of such study to the Congress by October 1, 1991.

The Committee continues to be concerned about the financial difficulties faced by urban and rural hospitals for which Medicare patients constitute a high proportion of discharges or days of care. Having completed the study of Medicare-dependent hospitals required under Section 6014 of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1989, it is the expectation of the Committee that ProPAC will further examine the factors responsible for relatively low Medicare margins in these hospitals and other facilities that have shown a consistent pattern of relatively high or low profit margins under Medicare. In particular, this analysis should examine the extent to which the construction of the prospective payment system and other factors beyond the control of hospitals have contributed to these patterns.

SNF LIMITS

Present law

Medicare law authorizes the Secretary of HHS to set limits on skilled nursing facility (SNF) routine service costs that will be recognized as reasonable and reimbursed under the program. The Secretary is required to establish separate per diem limits for freestanding and hospitals-based SNFs as follows: for freestanding SNFs in urban and rural areas, the limits are set at 112 percent of the mean routine service costs of urban and rural freestanding facilities, respectively. Limits for urban and rural hospital-based facilities are set at the appropriate freestanding limit, plus 50 percent of the difference between the freestanding limit and 112 percent of the mean routine service costs for hospital based b-facilities. An amount is added to the hospital based facility limit to account for cost differences between hospital based and freestanding SNFs that are attributable to excess overhead allocations resulting from Medicare reimbursement principles. The current schedule of Medicare cost limits is based on cost reports submitted by SNFs for cost reporting period ending between October 1, 1982 and September 30, 1983. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 requires the Secretary to use for SNF limits cost reports submitted by SNFs for cost reporting periods ending September 30, 1986.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the Secretary, for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1989, to base SNF limits on data from cost reporting periods ending not earlier than January 31, 1988 and not later than December 31, 1988. Future updates of SNF limits would be required every two years.

CLARIFY WAIVER AUTHORITY

Present law

The Secretary has authority to waive requirements of Title XVIII in order to conduct demonstrations for limited purposes described under Section 402 of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 and Section 222 of the Social Security Amendments of 1972.

OBRA 1989 authorized the Secretary of HHS to waive survey and certification requirements to the extent the Secretary determines necessary in order to carry out a pilot demonstration project in Wisconsin which tests an approved alternative survey and certification process for nursing homes. The waiver applies for one year beginning on the date of implementation of the project.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would clarify that the Secretary is authorized to waive Medicare requirements in order to conduct any demonstration project for limited service rural hospitals with respect to which the Secretary entered into an agreement prior to enactment of OBRA '89. It would also allow for states in addition to Wisconsin to participate in the nursing home case-mix and quality assurance demonstration project.

GEOGRAPHIC CLASSIFICATION REVIEW BOARD

Present law

OBRA '89 requires the Secretary to appoint a five-person Geographic Classification Review Board to review applications by hospitals for a change in classification from rural to urban or from one urban area to another. The Secretary was required to publish guidelines to be utilized by the Board in rendering decisions by July 1, 1990. The guidelines were published September 6, 1990. Hospitals must apply for a change in geographic classification for a given year by the first day of the preceding fiscal year.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would, for 1990 only, extend the deadline for hospitals to apply to the Geographic Classification Review Board from October 1st to 60 days after publication of the guidelines. In addition, the provision includes technical changes regarding the appointment of Board members and the operation of the Board. The Committee is aware of the need for timely Board decisions in order to ensure that these decisions are taken into account in the annual regulation affecting the prospective payment system for inpatient hospital services. Accordingly, although the technical correction made would strike the explicit statutory language indicating that hospitals have only 15 days to file an appeal of a Board decision, the Committee expects that the Secretary would continue to impose a 15 day limit for hospitals to file such appeals.

STUDY OF REGULATIONS AFFECTING RURAL HOSPITALS

Present law

Any notice of proposed rulemaking or final regulation published by the Secretary of Health and Human Services that may have a significant impact on the operations of a substantial number of small rural hospitals, the Secretary must make include a regulatory impact analysis describing the effects on small rural hospitals.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the HHS Secretary to conduct a review of Medicare regulations affecting hospitals participating in the prospective payment system to determine which requirements could be made less administratively and economically burdensome on rural hospitals, without diminishing the quality of care provided to Medicare beneficiaries. The Secretary would report to the Congress by April 1, 1991 on the results of the review, including any recommendations on modifications of regulations for rural hospitals.

REDUCTIONS FOR OVERVALUED PROCEDURES

Present law

The prevailing charge levels for some physicians' services exceed the estimated payment amounts for those services under a national fee schedule derived from a resource-based relative value scale. OBRA '89 provides for a transition to such a fee schedule beginning in 1992.

As part of this transition, OBRA '89 reduced the prevailing charges of 245 "overvalued" physicians' services by one-third of the difference between the 1989 prevailing charge and the estimated fee schedule amount for the service, subject to a 15 percent maximum reduction. A procedure was classified as overvalued if its prevailing charge exceeded the estimated fee schedule amount by 10 percent or more.

The estimated fee schedule amount for a service was obtained by reducing the national average prevailing charge for the service by the percent it was estimated to be overvalued, and then adjusting the reduced national average prevailing charge by the appropriate geographic practice cost index value for the locality involved.

The geographic practice cost index value applied under OBRA '89 reflected only variations in overhead costs. Under the resource-based fee schedule that becomes effective in 1992, payments will be adjusted to reflect not only variations in overhead costs but also one quarter of the variations in the cost of physician work (cost of living).

Committee provision

The Committee provision would continue the transition for services designated as overvalued in OBRA '89, reducing their prevailing charges for 1991 by one-third of the difference between the 1990 prevailing charge and the estimated fee schedule amount for the service, subject to a 15 percent limit.

The estimated fee schedule amount would be derived from the 1989 weighted national average prevailing charge, standardized for geographic variation, and reduced by the percentage the particular procedure is estimated to be overvalued.

Under the Committee provision, the geographic index to be applied in determining the estimated fee schedule amount is an index that fully reflects variations in overhead costs as well as one-quarter of the variations in the cost of physician work.

Effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

UNSURVEYED OVERVALUED PROCEDURES

Present law

The prevailing charge levels for some physicians' services exceed the estimated payment amounts for those services under a national fee schedule derived from a resource-based relative value scale. OBRA '89 provides for a transition to such a fee schedule beginning in 1992.

As part of this transition, OBRA '89 reduced the prevailing charges of 245 "overvalued" physicians' services by one-third of the difference between the 1989 prevailing charge and the estimated fee schedule amount for the service, subject to a 15 percent maximum reduction. A procedure was classified as overvalued if its prevailing charge exceeded the estimated fee schedule amount by 10 percent or more.

The OBRA '89 overvalued procedure reductions were limited to procedures for which relative values were available based upon phase I of the survey of relative values for physicians' services conducted by Dr. William Hsiao of the Harvard School of Public Health. Some of the relative values were obtained directly from the Hsiao survey and others were extrapolated on the basis of charge data.

Legislative reductions in payments for radiology, anesthesiology, and pathology services—for which average payments are also likely to decrease under a resource-based fee schedule—have been effected separately.

Payments for evaluation and management services are expected to increase (on average) under the new fee schedule.

In a September 18, 1990, letter to the Committee on Finance, the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) has recommended that the prevailing charges for unsurveyed overvalued procedures be reduced by a uniform percentage as part of the transition to a national, resource-based fee schedule.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would reduce by 4 percent the prevailing charges for all physicians' services other than OBRA '89 overvalued procedures, radiology, anesthesiology, and pathology services, and "evaluation and management" and other undervalued services. Effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

PAYMENT FOR RADIOLOGY SERVICES

Present law

Most radiology services currently are paid under a fee schedule based on a relative value scale. Under this fee schedule, payments are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, or (2) a fee schedule amount determined by multiplying a conversion factor by the relative value for the particular service. A conversion factor is the dollar amount that, when multiplied by the relative value of a service, produces the payment amount.

Payment is made for both the physician's professional services (the "professional component") and the equipment, technical resources, and supplies needed to furnish the service (the "technical component").

While the relative value of a service does not vary geographically under the radiology fee schedule, each locality currently has a separate conversion factor that is based on the historical level of prevailing charges for covered services in that locality, rather than on variations in the costs of furnishing the service.

As a result, there is wide variation in the conversion factors for different localities. For example, southern Illinois has a conversion factor of $18.10, while northeast Iowa has one of $9.34.

Radiology services furnished by non-specialists currently are reimbursed under the reasonable charge methodology applied to other physicians' services.

In 1989, both the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) and the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) estimated that payments for radiology services would be reduced by about 21 percent from 1988 levels under a national, resource-based fee schedule for all physicians' services.

As part of the transition to such a fee schedule, local radiology conversion factors were reduced by 3 percent in 1989. OBRA '89 continued this transition with reductions of 4 percent in 1990.

OBRA '89 provided special treatment for portable X-ray services, nuclear medicine services, and interventional radiology services furnished in 1990.

Committee provision

The committee provision would reduce local conversion factors under the radiology fee schedule by the lesser of 8 percent or the amount (if any) by which they exceed a national average conversion factor that has been standardized, reduced by 12 percent, and adjusted by the appropriate geographic practice cost and work index values for the locality involved.

Current estimates vary about the percent by which services subject to the radiology fee schedule are overvalued (after taking into account prior legislative reductions). Preliminary analyses by the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) and the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) indicate that these services are overvalued by approximately 15 percent, while the American College of Radiology (ACR) indicates that these services are overvalued by about 10 percent.

While the committee provision would assume an ultimate average reduction of 12 percent, this should not be construed as a final judgment on this issue. Rather it is a working assumption, which will be adjusted as additional information becomes available in the future.

The geographic index to be applied under the committee provision is an index that fully reflects variations in overhead costs as well as one-quarter of the variations in the cost of physician work (cost of living).

For the professional component of a service, the geographic adjustment factor is 80 percent of the physician work index value and 20 percent of the overhead cost index value.

For the technical component of a service, the geographic adjustment factor is 35 percent of the physician work index value and 65 percent of the overhead cost index value.

These percentages are based upon current estimates and should not be construed as limiting the Secretary's discretion in implementing the new fee schedule for physicians' services in 1992.

Payment for a service that is not subject to the radiology fee schedule would be limited to the amount payable for the service under the fee schedule.

The special rules established for portable X-ray services, nuclear medicine services, and interventional radiology services would be continued in 1991 on the same basis as in 1990.

Effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

PORTABLE X-RAY SERVICES

Present law

OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology.

The fee schedule applies to services furnished by or under the supervision of a physician who is a board-certified or board-eligible radiologist, or who bills at least 50 percent of his or her Medicare part B charges for radiology services.

Portable X-ray services are radiology services usually furnished by non-physician technologists who bring X-ray equipment to the home of the patient. These services are covered by the fee schedule if they are furnished by or under the supervision of a physician to whom the fee schedule applies.

Although portable X-ray services are billing under the same procedure codes as other radiology services, they involve special equipment and additional time to perform. In recognition of this fact, HCFA has established a separate conversion factor for these services.

OBRA '89 exempted portable X-ray services from the reductions mandated for radiology services in 1990, and required the Secretary to report on appropriate treatment of these services in the future.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would exclude portable X-ray services subject to the radiology fee schedule from any reductions in the fee schedule amounts for 1991.

CARDIOVASCULAR AND INTERVENTIONAL RADIOLOGISTS

Present law

OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology (ACR).

Cardiovascular and interventional radiologists furnish services, such as angiographies, that involve more than one procedure. Typically, these procedures include injection of a contrast medium and supervision and interpretation of the image obtained.

If the two procedures are performed by different physicians, they may be billed separately, using both a surgery code and a radiology code. The radiology fee schedule requires a cardiovascular or international radiologist who performs both procedures to bill for them under a single "common procedure" code.

Although ACR included charge data drawn from some surgery codes in calculating the relative values for "complete procedures" under the fee schedule, the data that was used may include lower charges billed by other physicians using the same codes. In addition, charge data for the relevant surgery codes may not have been used in calculating the conversion factor under the fee schedule.

Before the establishment of the fee schedule, many cardiovascular and interventional radiologists billed separately for each procedure. In recognition of this fact, HCFA has permitted these physicians to continue this practice during 1989.

OBRA '89 extended this special treatment through 1990.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would authorize those cardiovascular and interventional radiologists who have billed separately for related procedures during 1990 to continue the practice during 1991.

NUCLEAR MEDICINE

Present law

OBRA 1987 provided for establishment of a fee schedule for radiology services based on a relative value scale, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1989. The relative value scale adopted for this purpose was developed by the American College of Radiology.

Nuclear medicine is a medical specialty in which radioactive materials are administered to patients to diagnose and sometimes treat disease. While nuclear medicine procedures are billed under radiology codes and are subject to the fee schedule, most physicians who specialize in nuclear medicine are not radiologists.

Some radiologists perform a few types of nuclear medicine procedures. ACR apparently used charges for these procedures in establishing relative values under the fee schedule.

Physicians specializing in nuclear medicine perform a wider range of services, however, and handle more complex cases. Thus, they maintain that the fee schedule does not reflect the differences in the practice of nuclear medicine by specialists and non-specialist radiologists.

OBRA '89 established a special payment rule for nuclear medicine specialists for the 1990-1991 period. In 1990, payments are a blend of 2/3 of the radiology fee schedule amount and 1/3 of 101 percent of the 1988 prevailing charge for the service involved. In 1991, the relative proportions of the blend are reversed.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would extend through 1991 the special payment rules applicable to nuclear medicine specialists during 1990 and clarify that relative values developed through the consensus process, rather than relative values developed by the American College of Radiology, will be applied to nuclear medicine services under the resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992.

FLOOR ON RADIOLOGY CONVERSION FACTORS

Present law

Most radiology services currently are paid under a fee schedule based on a relative value scale. Under this fee schedule, payments are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, or (2) a fee schedule amount determined by multiplying a conversion factor by the relative value for the particular service. A conversion factor is the dollar amount that, when multiplied by the relative value of a service, produces the payment amount.

While the relative value of a service does not vary geographically under the radiology fee schedule, each locality currently has a separate conversion factor that is based on the hsitorical level of prevailing charges for covered services in that locality, rather than on variations in the costs of furnishing the service.

As a result, there is wide variation in the conversion factors for different localities. For example, southern Illinois has a conversion factor of $18.10, while northeast Iowa has one of $9.34.

Under the new, national fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992, these low conversion factors will gradually increase to the national average conversion factor, adjusterd to reflect geographic variations in cost.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would establish a "floor" on radiology conversion factors at 80% of the standardized 1990 national average conversion factor, adjusted to reflect geographic variations in costs.

PAYMENT FOR ANESTHESIA SERVICES

Present law

Anesthesia services currently are paid under a fee schedule that is based upon a relative value guide. Under the fee schedule, payments are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, (2) the customary charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units for a particular service, or (3) the prevailing charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units.

Base units correspond to the relative value of the service, while time units are assigned on the basis of time required to perform the service.

Under the provision added by OBRA '87, reductions are made in the number of base units assigned for concurrent medical direction of more than one certified registered nurse anesthetist (CRNA). This provision expires at the end of 1990.

While the relative value of a service does not vary geographically under the fee schedule for anesthesia services, each locality currently has a separate conversion factor that is based on the historical level of prevailing and customary charges for covered services in that locality, rather than on variations in the costs of furnishing the service.

As a result, there is wide variation in the conversion factors for different localities. For example, Las Vegas, Nevada, has a conversion factor of $35.80, while Wausau, Wisconsin, has one of $12.39.

HCFA and PPRC estimate that payments for anesthesia services will be reduced by appropriately 18 percent under a national, resource-based fee schedule for all physicians' services.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would reduce local conversion factors under the fee schedule for anesthesia services by the amount (if any) by which they exceed a national average conversion factor that has been standardized, reduced by 4 percent, and adjusted by the appropriate geographic practice cost and work index values for the locality involved. In addition, the Committee provision would extend expiring current law reductions for concurrent medical supervision of certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNAs) through 1995. Effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

FLOOR ON ANESTHESIOLOGY CONVERSION FACTORS

Present law

Anesthesia services currently are paid under a fee schedule that is based upon a relative value guide. Under the fee schedule, payments are based on the lesser of (1) actual charges, (2) the customary charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units for a particular service, or (3) the prevailing charge conversion factor multiplied by the total number of base units and time units.

Base units correspond to the relative value of the service, while time units are assigned on the basis of time required to perform the service.

While the relative value of a service does not vary geographically under the fee schedule for anesthesia services, each locality currently has a separate conversion factor that is based on the historical level of prevailing and customary charges for covered services in that locality, rather than on variations in the costs of furnishing the service.

As a result, there is wide variation in the conversion factors for different localities. For example, Las Vegas, Nevada, has a conversion factor of $35.80, while Wausau, Wisconsin, has one of $12.39.

Under the new, national fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992, these low conversion factors will gradually increase to the national average conversion factor, adjusted to reflect geographic variations in cost.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would establish a "floor" on anesthesia conversion factors at 75% of the standardized 1990 national average conversion factor, adjusted to reflect geographic variations in costs.

PAYMENT FOR PHYSICIAN PATHOLOGY SERVICES

Present law

Medicare currently pays for physician pathology services based on the lowest of the physician's actual charge, the physician's customary charge, or the prevailing charge level in the area. As with other services paid under the reasonable charge method, payments for these services are substantially higher in some areas than in others, even after adjustment for variations in practice costs.

These services, as a class, were estimated to be overvalued by about 25 percent on the basis of a survey conducted by Dr. William Hsiao of Harvard, and many of them were initially included in the list of overvalued procedures recommended for payment reductions by the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) in 1989. Because of uncertainty about some of the Hsiao results, however, they were ultimately excluded from the PPRC list.

In a July 5, 1990, letter to the Committee on Finance, PPRC indicated that payments for these services will decrease substantially under the national, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services due to be implemented in 1992, and suggested that a moderate reduction in payment levels in 1991 would be consistent with a transition to the new fee schedule.

OBRA '89 requires implementation of a separate fee schedule for physician pathology services in 1991 and incorporation of them in the national, resource-based fee schedule for all physicians's services in 1992.

In addition, OBRA '89 (section 6102(d)(5)(F)) requires PPRC to take into account the special circumstances of independent laboratories serving rural areas in conducting its study of appropriate adjustments to reflect the practice costs associated with furnishing physicians' services.

Although the PPRC study is not due until July 1, 1991, the Commission has indicated that its recommendations will be included in its 1991 annual report, which is due by April 1, 1991.

In its annual report for 1990, PPRC indicates that "an independent pathology laboratory separate from a hospital and owned by or employing a pathologist provides the professional service and incurs the costs of the technical component as well, so it should be paid the global fee for a [physician] pathology service.".

The College of American Pathologists has also commissioned a study of practice costs for physician pathology services. In its Model Fee Schedule for Physicians' Services, the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) has indicated that it is considering imputing a technical component for physician pathology services equal to 10–15% of the global payment in its Model Fee Schedule for Physicians' Services.

Committee provision

The committee provision would reduce by 4% the prevailing charge for all physician pathology services furnished on or after January 1, 1991. The prevailing charge for the professional component of a service furnished through an independent laboratory could not be reduced below 115 percent of the prevailing charge for the professional and technical components for the same service furnished by a hospital-based physician.

In addition, the committee provision would repeal the requirement that a separate fee schedule for physician pathology services be implemented in 1991.

Finally, the committee provision would require the Secretary to provide for an appropriate adjustment (under the fee schedule established under section 1848 of the Social Security Act) to reflect the overhead costs associated with physician pathology services furnished through an independent laboratory on or after January 1, 1992. The Secretary would be free to modify this adjustment as better data becomes available about the overhead costs associated with these services.

MEI ADJUSTMENT FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

Present law

Medicare currently pays for most physicians' services based on the lowest of the physician's actual charge, the physician's customary charge, or the prevailing charge level in the area. Some services are paid under a separate fee schedule.

Current law provides for an annual adjustment in the prevailing charge level for a service (or the fee schedule conversion factor) to reflect changes in the Medicare Economic Index (MEI).

In recent years, the increase in the MEI has been legislatively determined, with primary care services receiving higher updates as part of a transition to a resource-based payment system.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA '87) established the increase in the MEI at 3.6 percent for primary care services and 1 percent for other physician services for 1988, and at 3.0 and 1 percent for those services, respectively, for 1989.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) froze customary and prevailing charges for all physicians' services at 1989 levels for the first three months of 1990 and established the increase in the MEI for the remainder of 1990 at 4.2 percent for primary care services, 0 percent for radiology services, anesthesia services, and overvalued procedures, and 2.0 percent for all other physicians' services.

Primary care services include office medical services, emergency department services, home medical services, nursing home services, and two eye-care visits.

The MEI increase for 1991 is currently estimated to be 3.5 percent.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would limit the MEI increase for primary care services to 2.0 percent for 1991, and freeze customary and prevailing charges for all other physicians' services for 1991. Customary charges of new physicians would be permitted to increase in accordance with the limits specified in current law. Effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

FISCAL YEAR 1991 MEDICARE VOLUME PERFORMANCE STANDARDS FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

Present law

Section 6102 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) provides for the establishment of a national, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services under Medicare beginning in 1992.

As a part of this reform of physician payment under Medicare, the law provides for the establishment of a Medicare volume performance standard (MVPS) rate of increase in expenditures for physicians' and related services for each fiscal year.

If the actual rate of increase in expenditures for these services exceeds (or falls below) the MVPS rate for the fiscal year involved, the annual inflation update for physicians' services is adjusted in a subsequent year.

The law sets limits on the extent to which annual inflation adjustment for may be reduced if expenditures exceed the MVPS rate. For fiscal years 1992 and 1993, the limit is 2 percentage points. For fiscal years 1994 and 1995, it is 2½ percentage points. For fiscal years 1996 and thereafter, it is 3 percentage points.

These limits apply only to reductions under the automatic MVPS mechanism, not to reductions effected through the legislative process.

There is no upper limit on the extent to which the annual inflation update may be increased if expenditures fall below the MVPS rate.

The law contemplates that the MVPS rate will be set in legislation, but specifies a formula for the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to follow in establishing a "default" MVPS if legislation is not enacted by October 15 of the fiscal year involved.

The formula for the default MVPS requires the Secretary to take into account the weighted average percentage increase in physicians' fees for the fiscal year involved, changes in beneficiary population, a 5-year rolling average of the growth in volume and intensity of physicians' services, and legislative and regulatory changes (such as benefit expansions and deficit reduction measures) affecting expenditures for physicians' services.

It also provides for a gradual reduction in the rate of growth of expenditures for physicians' services. The rate computed under the formula is reduced by 1 percentage point for fiscal year 1991, 1½ percentage points for fiscal year 1992, and 2 percentage points for each succeeding year.

The law requires the Secretary to recommend an MVPS rate of increase by April 15 of the year in which the fiscal year begins. It also requires the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) to review the Secretary's submission and make its own recommendations by May 15 of the same year.

Because deficit reduction legislation for fiscal year 1991 was not enacted at the time these recommendations were made, neither report took into account the projected effects of such legislation on the rate of growth in expenditures for physicians' services during that period.

At the present time, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimates that, in the absence of any legislation, expenditures for physicians' and related services will grow at a rate of 14.1% in fiscal year 1991. The Secretary projects a growth rate of 13.4% for these expenditures for the same period.

The most recent CBO estimate assumes that the "default" MVPS for fiscal year 1991 will be 11.8%, while preliminary estimates of the Secretary indicate that it will be approximately 11.6%.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would set the fiscal year (FY) 1991 Medicare volume performance standard at 2 percentage points below the baseline rate of growth in expenditures for physicians' services, adjusted to reflect the impact of any legislative changes increasing or decreasing these expenditures.

The Committee provision would establish separate volume standards for surgery and all other physicians' services, with the only variation in the two standards being the differential effects of the impact of legislative actions on the two categories of services.

The Committee provision would establish a specific percentage volume standard in the law for each of these two categories of services for FY 1991, with those percentages being determined on the basis of final estimates of the impact of the other provisions of the FY 1991 budget reconciliation legislation.

SERVICES FURNISHED BY NEW PHYSICIANS

Present law

Medicare currently pays for physicians' services based on the lowest of the physician's actual charge, the physician's customary charge, or the prevailing charge level in the area.

The customary charge of a physician is the amount most frequently charged by the physician for the service. The prevailing charge for a service is the amount that will cover 75 percent of the customary charges for the service in the area.

Under current law, the customary charge of a new physician for a service under Medicare is limited to a specified percentage of the prevailing charge for that service in the area. The percentage is 80 percent in the case of first-year physicians and 85 percent in the case of second-year physicians.

Regulations implementing those provisions specify the manner in which a new physician's initial period of practice (and subsequent periods) are determined.

Beginning in 1992, Medicare will pay for physicians' services under a national, resource-based fee schedule.

Committee provision

The commitee provision would extend and make permanent the limits on payments to new physicians, with payment being limited to 90 and 95 percent of the allowable amount for third- and fourth-year physicians.

Until 1992, these limits would be computed as a percentage of the prevailing charge. For 1992 and thereafter, they would be computed as a percentage of the fee schedule amount determined under the resource-based relative value scale mandated by the physician payment reforms enacted in 1989.

Current law exceptions for primary care services care services and services furnished in a rural health manpower shortage area would be retained.

PAYMENT FOR THE SERVICES OF AN ASSISTANT-AT-SURGERY

Present law

Surgical services may be furnished by a surgeon without assistance or with the assistance of another physician, a physician assistant, or hospital-employed personnel (such as operating room registered nurses, interns, or residents).

Medicare has different reimbursement rules for different types of assistants-at-surgery.

In the cae of the physician serving as an assistant at surgery, payment is limited to 20% of the prevailing charge for the global surgical service, which includes pre- and post-hospital visits, the surgical procedure itself, and other services related to the surgery.

The 20% limit, which was established by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) pursuant to the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA), was a codification of the approach taken by many Medicare carriers at the time.

In the case of a physician assistant, payment is limited to 65% of the amount that would apply if a physician served as an assistant-at-surgery (i.e. 13% of the prevailing charge for the global surgical service).

Some carriers currently limit payment to a surgeon who is involved only in the surgical portion of a global surgical service to 80% of the global fee, based upon their appraisal of the relationship between intra-operative services and other services, such as visits, that are bundled into the global service.

Data from phase I of Hsiao, et al., "A National Survey of Resource-Based Relative Value Scales for Physicians' Services" (table 101) indicates that intraoperative work accounts for about 50 to 60 percent of the work for a surgical global service. These figures may be conservative in light of the fact that Hsiao did not include post-hospital visits within the definition of a surgical global service.

Under the national, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services that will become effective in 1992, the portion of a global surgical fee that is attributable to visits is expected to increase, while the portion attributable to intraoperative services will decrease.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would apply the 20 percent rule to the intraoperative portion of a global surgical service, effective for services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

The Committee would limit the amount paid by Medicare for the services of a physician serving as an assistant-at-surgery to 16% of the amount paid for the surgical global service (i.e. 20% of the portion of the global service (80%) that is estimated to cover intraoperative services).

ADVANCE DETERMINATIONS BY CARRIERS

Present law

Claims submitted under part B of the Medicare program are processed and paid by organizations that are known as "carriers". Carriers review claims in order to determine whether the item or service involved is covered by Medicare and whether or not it is medically necessary. In most cases, the review is conducted after the care has been provided.

Under current law, peer review organizations (PROs) may require advance determinations for hospital admissions and certain surgical procedures. Carriers currently have no authority to make advance determinations of this sort.

Committee provision

The committee provision would require carriers to make advance determinations for expensive procedures specified by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. It would also authorize carriers to make advance determinations for items and services ordered or furnished by a physician for whom a substantial number of items and services have been disallowed or for whom a pattern of overutilization exists.

This authority would not extend to items and services that are subject to prior review by a PRO or to emergency services.

1991 BALANCE BILLING LIMITS

Present law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (OBRA '86) established limits on actual charges of nonparticipating physicians. These limitations, known as MAAC (maximum allowable actual charge) limits, vary from physician to physician, and from service to service, based upon how much a physician's actual charges for a particular service exceeded the Medicare-allowable amount during a base period.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) included legislation reforming physician payment under the Medicare program. This legislation mandates a new national fee schedule for physicians' services beginning in 1992, under which the amount Medicare pays for office visits and other "cognitive" (or evaluation and management services) will increase, while reimbursement for surgery and other "interventional" services will decrease.

Physician payment reform also replaced MAACS with simpler, more uniform limits on beneficiary liability, effective for services furnished in 1991 and thereafter.

In 1991, the limit on actual charges is the lesser of 125 percent of the Medicare-allowable amount (prevailing charge) for nonparticipating physicians or the physician's 1990 MAAC, updated to 1991.

In 1992, the limit on actual charges for a service is equal to 120 percent of the amount payable to nonparticipating physicians for the service under the new payment system.

In 1993, and thereafter, the limit on actual charges for a service is equal to 115 percent of the amount payable to nonparticipating physicians for the service under the new payment system.

Because the new limits become effective a year before the national fee schedule for physicians' services goes into effect, the total allowed charges for some services for which payments will increase under the new payment system—primarily evaluation and management services—will be lower in 1991 than in 1990 or 1992.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would establish the limits on actual charges for evaluation and management services for 1991 at the lesser of the physician's 1990 MAAC, updated to 1991, or 150 percent of the prevailing charge for the service in the physician's payment locality. The actual charge limits on these services for 1992 and thereafter would be unaffected.

The Committee provision is not intended to affect in any way any State law requiring a physician to accept assignment on Medicare claims as a condition of licensure in the State.

STATE-WIDE PAYMENT LOCALITIES FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

Present law

Claims submitted to Medicare by physicians are processed and paid by organizations (commonly referred to as "carriers") under contract with the program. Carriers are nongovernmental entities, such as private insurers, with experience in administering health benefit programs.

The geographic area served by a carrier may be subdivided into different payment localities, with payments for the same service varying from one locality to another.

Under the current, reasonable charge payment system for physicians' services, a different set of payment limits is established for each locality in a carrier service area, based upon the actual and customery charges for services in that locality.

Under the national, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992, a different geographic practice cost index (GPCI) value will be applied to determine payments in each locality.

At the present time, there is great variation across the country in the size and configuration of these localities, with some localities including a whole State and others being limited to a single city. Although current law permits modification of payment localities by administrative action, it is often not possible to do so in a budget-neutral manner.

The physician payment reform legislation enacted in 1989 did not disturb existing payment localities (or the discretion to alter them by administrative action). It did, however, require the Physician Payment Review Commission (PPRC) to report to the Congress not later than July 1, 1991, on the feasibility and desirability of establishing a uniform national definition of payment localities.

Physicians in two States (Oklahoma and Nebraska) have expressed interest in consolidating the existing payment areas in their State into a single, State-wide locality by 1992, when the new national fee schedule for physician's services becomes effective. They have indicated a willingness to do so in a budget-neutral manner.

It is possible that other States may seek the same treatment before 1992.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to establish a State-wide payment locality for physicians' services furnished on or after January 1, 1992, for any State that meets requirements designed to ensure that there is widespread agreement among physicians in the State that consolidation of existing payment localities is appropriate.

Although the establishment of such requirements would ordinarily be left to the Secretary's discretion, the Committee provision spells them out in detail in this case.

This approach has been adopted in order to dispense with the administrative procedures that ordinarily would govern the establishment of such requirements by the Secretary. This is necessary because of the relatively short period of time during which the provision would be implemented and the Secretary's many other responsibilities during the same period in connection with the implementation of a national, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services in 1992.

The requirements specified in the Committee provision have been developed in consultation with the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA).

Because of the complexities of implementing a new, national fee schedule for physicians' services in 1992, the provision also establishes an April 1, 1991, deadline by which the requirements must be met.

The Committee provision would authorize the Secretary to implement any change in localities pursuant to the provision in a budget-neutral manner.

It would also clarify that consolidation of the payment localities in a State pursuant to the provision does not preclude subsequent modifications to the locality structure in the State through available administrative mechanisms.

The Committee wishes to stress the highly unusual nature of legislative intervention in matters such as this and to emphasize that such intervention was justified in this case only because of the unanimous support of the Congressional delegations of the States involved, the willingness of physicians in those States to agree to a budget-neutral implementation of the desired changes, and the desirability of effectuating those changes at the same time as the new national fee schedule for physicians' services is implemented.

BILLING FOR THE SERVICES OF A SUBSTITUTE PHYSICIAN

Present law

Sections 1842(b)(6) and 1902(a)(32) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(6) and 42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(32)) provide that, except under limited circumstances, the Medicare and Medicaid programs may make payments for services rendered only to the physician or other person who actually provides the services.

The purpose of these provisions is to prevent "factoring"—the sale of claims receivable at a discount to third parties—which might increase program costs and cause administrative difficulties.

These provisions, read literally, prohibit a variety of arrangements under which one physician substitutes for another during his or her absence, with claims for services being billed in the absent physician's name.

Under one type of arrangement, two (or more) physicians agree to "cover"patients when one of the physicians is absent. Typically, the substitute physician continues to practice in his or her own office, and remuneration consists of reciprocal coverage privileges rather than financial compensation.

Another type of arrangement involves a more formal agreement under which one physician staffs the office of another during his or her absence in return for a per diem or other fee-for-time compensation. Frequently referred to as a locum tenens arrangement, this type of agreement usually involves a longer absence.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would establish an exemption from the anti-factoring prohibitions for short-term reciprocal arrangements and longer-term locum tenens arrangements.

Substitute billing under a reciprocal arrangement would be limited to a period of 14 consecutive days, with at least one day elapsing between 14-day periods.

Substitute billing under a locum tenens arrangement would be limited to a period of 90 consecutive days, with at least 30 days elapsing between 90-day periods.

The identity of the substitute physician must be included on any claim for services furnished under such an arrangement (in a manner specified by the Secretary).

The Secretary would be given discretion to permit locum tenens arrangements of longer than 90 days. It is expection that this would be done only in unusual circumstances, as when, for example, a physician becomes seriously ill or receives a fellowship or other award that involves a substantial absence from his or her practice.

STUDY OF PREPAYMENT MEDICAL REVIEW SCREENS

Present law

Medicare carriers, the organizations that process and pay part B claims, are required to review claims in order to assure that they are for covered services and are medically necessary. As a part of the review process, carriers frequently apply prepayment screens that determine whether a claim will be paid or subjected to more stringent review. These screens are not available to practitioners or providers.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to conduct a study to determine whether the release of prepayment medical review screen parameters influences physician billing. The study will be conducted at a minimum of six Medicare carrier sites. The Secretary would be required to report the results of the study to the Congress on or before October 1, 1992.

UTILIZATION SCREENS FOR PHYSICIAN VISITS IN REHABILITATION HOSPITALS

Present law

Carriers are required to institute utilization safeguards to assure that payments are made only for covered services that are medically necessary. Carriers employ utilization screens to check for possible overutilization of services. If services are provided in excess of a specified level, the case is targeted for further review.

The screen for physician visits to hospital inpatients does not distinguish between visits to patients in acute care settings and those in rehabilitation hospitals and units. As a result, a patient who has been transferred to a rehabilitation facility after discharge from an acute care hospital will often reach the screen parameter that triggers more stringent review.

In an attempt to correct this problem, section 4085(h) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA '87) required the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to establish "a separate utilization screen for physician visits to patients in rehabilitation hospitals and units".

Rather than establishing a screen that recognizes the special circumstances rehabilitation inpatients (and applies to all physician visits at such a site as the statutory language clearly requires), the Secretary has established a screen that applies to inpatient visits made by physiatrists regardless of site.

This approach was apparently adopted because claims for inpatient visits do not include information about the type of hospital involved. Unfortunately, it has led to development of an unduly restrictive screen and to discrimination against physiatrists.

In addition, different carriers are applying varying levels of scrutiny to claims for visits in excess of the screen's parameters.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the Secretary to revise the screen establish under section 4085(h) of OBRA '87 to apply to all physician visits to inpatients of a rehabilitation hospital or unit and to base the revised screen on a standard of care comparable to that for inpatients of acute care hospitals, particularly with reference to the frequency of visits.

STUDY OF PAYMENT ADJUSTMENT FOR PHYSICIANS FURNISHING A HIGH VOLUME OF A PARTICULAR PROCEDURE

Present law

Payments for physicians' services under Medicare are not adjusted to reflect the economies of scale that are realized when a physician performs a high volume of a particular procedure.

Under the new, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992, payment for a service will be based in part upon the relative value of the service involved, which in turn is based upon the time and intensity of effort expended, on average, by physicians furnishing the service.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) is required to update the relative values under the new fee schedule at least every five years in order to reflect changes in the time and effort expended by physicians in furnishing a service. These changes may be due to new technology or other factors.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to report to the Congress not later than July 1, 1992, on the feasibility and desirability of adjusting payments to physicians performing a high volume of a particular procedure.

Taking into account the potential impact of such an adjustment on program costs and patient access to services, the Secretary would make recommendations on procedures for which such an adjustment would be appropriate, options for implementing such an adjustment, appropriate exceptions to such a policy, and safeguards to ensure patient access.

PAYMENTS FOR HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT SERVICES

Present law

Medicare generally pays the reasonable costs of services provided in the hospital outpatient department, although a variety of fee schedules, limits or prospective rates apply to many of the services typically provided to outpatients (surgery, radiology, clinical lab services, dialysis). In the case of surgery and radiology, payments are directly linked in part to the individual hospital's reasonable cost of those services.

Capital costs incurred by hospitals are allocated between the inpatient and outpatient departments, and among outpatient services, in proportion to the use of these services by Medicare enrollees. Capital costs allocated to activities in the outpatient department are built into each of the reimbursement methodologies used for these services. Thus, capital costs are reflected in the reasonable costs of services to the degree that the service is reimbursed on that basis.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 reduced payments for outpatient capital to reasonable costs minus 15% for portions of cost reporting periods occurring during FY90.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would establish payment at 85% of outpatient capital costs for portions of cost reporting periods occurring during fiscal year 1991, and at 90% of costs in 1992 through 1995, to be parallel with the treatment of inpatient capital. The Committee bill would also reduce hospital outpatient payments by 5% for certain services furnished during fiscal years 1991 through 1995. The reduction would apply to those hospital outpatient services that are reimbursed on a cost basis, other than capital-related costs.

EYE AND EAR HOSPITALS

Present law

Medicare pays for surgery provided in a hospital outpatient department on the basis of a blended rate. 50 percent of the payment is based on the hospital's costs; 50 percent is based on the fixed payment rate paid for the same surgery provided in a free-standing ambulatory surgery center (ASC). Hospitals designated as eye and ear specialty hospitals are paid 75 percent based on costs and 25 percent based on the ASC rate.

Committee Provision

The Committee provision would extend the special treatment of eye and ear hospitals through fiscal year 1993.

PAYMENT FOR CLINICAL LABORATORY SERVICES

Present law

Clinical laboratory services are paid for by Medicare under state-wide or carrier-wide fee schedules. The fee for a particular service under a fee schedule is subject to a national limitation amount, currently set at 93 percent of the national median for all fee schedules for that service. Fee schedule amounts are updated annually by the percentage change in the consumer price index (CPI) during the preceding calendar year.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would lower the national limitation amount to 90 percent of the national median. It would limit inflation update for 1991 to 2 percent, and apply it only to fees that are below the national limit.

As in the past, the new national limit would be calculated after determining updated fee schedule amounts.

PAYMENTS FOR DURABLE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT

Present law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA '87) provided for the establishment of fee schedules for durable medical equipment (DME).

DME was divided into six categories, and local fee schedules were established for each item in a category. The amount payable for an item is the lesser of the actual charge or the fee schedule amount.

The fee schedule amounts for most categories of DME are based upon the average reasonable charge (Medicare-allowable amount) for an item in a particular locality during a base period, increased annually by the increase in the consumer price index (CPI).

Because fee schedule payments are based upon the amount historically paid by Medicare in a particular locality, there is considerable geographic variation in the fees Medicare pays for the same or similar items.

Beginning in 1991, limits are to be imposed on the range of prices in the same geographic region; under these limits, payments may not be less than 85% nor more than 125% of the national average. In 1992 and thereafter, these limits would move to 90% and 120%, respectively.

In the case of "capped rental" items (primarily hospital beds, patient lifts, and wheelchairs), the fee schedule rental amount is derived from the average purchase price on assigned claims for the item, rather than on the average Medicare allowable amount.

Committee provision

The committee provision would phase in, over three years, national limits on the geographic variation in the fees paid by Medicare for DME. At the end of the transition, the fee for an item of DME in a particular locality could not exceed 100% of the weighted national average of all local fees in the nation for that item, nor could they be less than 85% of the average.

In 1991, fees would be based ⅔ on the local payment amounts for 1990 (updated by the applicable inflation adjustment for 1991) and ⅓ on those amounts as constrained by the 85% and 100% limits.

In 1992, the blend woud be reversed, with ⅓ being based on local payment amounts for 1990 (updated by the applicable inflation adjustments for 1991 and 1992), and ⅔ on these amounts as constrained by the 85% and 100% limits.

Beginning in 1993, DME fees would be based entirely on the local payment amounts updated for inflation, as constrained by the 85% and 100% limits.

In addition, the committee provision would base fees for capped rental items on 110 percent of the Medicare-allowed charges rather than submitted charges, and total rental payments would be limited to 120% of the purchase price (rather than the current 150%).

The committee provision would also require periodic retesting of certain patients receiving oxygen at home to ensure that they continue to need it over time.

Fee schedule amounts for parenteral and enteral nutrients would be frozen for 1991.

PAYMENTS FOR ORTHOTICS AND PROSTHETICS

Present law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (OBRA '87) provided for the establishment of fee schedules for durable medical equipment (DME). Orthotic and prosthetic devices were included within the durable medical equipment benefit.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would establish a separate fee schedule for orthotic and prosthetic devices, and would freeze the update for these items for 1991. It would also clarify that one pair of eye glasses is covered as a prosthetic device after cataract surgery and prohibit the Secretary from removing coverage for this item.

COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH CENTERS

Present law

Partial hospitalization services include therapy by physicians, mental health professionals, and other health professionals, as well as other items and services reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis or active treatment of the patient's condition.

Medicare covers "partial hospitalization" service prescribed by a physician and furnished by a hospital in a distinct and organized intensive ambulatory treatment setting offering less than 24-hour care.

While community mental health centers are not currently Medicare providers, they are recognized under section 1916(c)(4) of the Public Health Service Act. Until OBRA '89 extended direct reimbursement for pyschologist services in all settings, coverage was limited to services furnished on-site at a community mental health center.

Services furnished by psychiatric nurses and marriage and family therapists are not currently reimbursable under Medicare.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would extend Medicare coverage to partial hospitalization services furnished by a community mental health center that is recognized under 1916(c)(4) of the Public Health service Act and that meets applicable State licensing or certification requirements. Reimbursement would be made on a reasonable cost basis.

The Committee provision would extend Medicare reimbursement to services furnished by a psychiatric nurse and marriage and family therapist in a community mental health center.

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Present law

The Secretary of Health and Human Service (Secretary) has established eight alzheimer's disease demonstration projects pursuant to section 9342 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (OBRA '86). Their purpose is to determine the effectiveness, cost, and impact on health status and functioning or providing comprehensive services for Medicare beneficiaries with Alzheimer's disease or a related disorder.

The eight sites are located in Florida, Illinois-Indiana, Minnesota, New York, Ohio-Kentucky, Oregon, Tennessee, and West Virginia-Ohio.

OBRA '86 limits the duration of these demonstration projects to three years. As presently designed, the projects will be in full-scale operation for a period of only 12 months, with the rest of the three years being used for planning, enrollment, and phase down.

A longer period of full-scale operations is desirable because of the long-term nature of alzheimer's disease.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would extend the duration of the demonstration projects to five years.

CRNA FEE SCHEDULE

Present law

Effective January 1, 1989, the services of a certified registered nurse anesthetist (CRNA) are paid for under a fee schedule. This fee schedule provides for separate conversion factors depending upon whether the CRNA is medically directed by a supervising physician. The conversion factors also vary by geographic area. The current conversion factor for medically directed services averages approximately $8.10 for medically directed services and $18.00 for services that are not medically directed. CRNAs must accept assignment for their services.

Committee provision

During the period between 1991 and 1995, the conversion factor for non-medically directed CRNAs would be phased in to a level that is consistent with the anticipated conversion factor for physician anesthesia services at the end of the transition to the new, resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services established under section 1848 of the Social Security Act.

Since physician anesthesia services are estimated to be, on average, 18% overvalued, the conversion factor for physician anesthesia services at the end of the transition should be approximately 82 percent of the 1990 weighted national average conversion factor for these services. With an average conversion factor of $20.42 in 1990, this would produce an ultimate conversion factor of approximately $16.75.

The committee provision would set the conversion factor for medically directed CRNAs at $15.50 in 1991, $15.75 in 1992, $16.00 in 1993, $16.25 in 1994, $16.50 in 1995, and $16.75 in 1996. In 1997 and thereafter, the previous year's conversion factor would be adjusted by the same update as for physician anesthesia services.

The committee provision would set the conversion factor for non-medically directed CRNAs at $10.50 in 1991, $10.75 in 1992, $11.00 in 1993, $11.25 in 1994, $11.50 in 1995, and $11.70 in 1996, and apply the same update as for non-medically directed CRNAs for years thereafter.

In recognition of the fact that, in a few localities, the conversion factor for non-medically directed CRNAs is currently greater than $16.75, these conversion factors would be reduced during each year of the 5-year transition by one-fifth of the amount by which the 1990 conversion factor exceeds the ultimate conversion factor of $16.75.

In localities where the conversion factor for non-medically directed CRNAs is greater than the starting point for the phase-in ($15.50) but less than the end point ($16.75), payment would be determined on the basis of the higher of the 1990 conversion factors (updated through the year involved) or the conversion factor specified under the phase-in for that year. This will prevent payments in these localities from decreasing and then increasing during the transition.

Thus, after a 5-year phase-in, the conversion factor for non-medically directed CRNAs would attain approximately the same level as the conversion factor for physician anesthesiologists, and the conversion factor for medically directed CRNAs would be set at 70 percent of the conversion factor for their non-medically directed counterparts.

The conversion factors for both categories of CRNAs would be adjusted by the same geographic practice cost index (GPCI) that will apply to anesthesia services furnished by an anesthesiologist under the national resource-based fee schedule for physicians' services that becomes effective in 1992.

In addition, since the conversion factors for physician anesthesia services will continue to vary substantially from one locality to another through 1995, the conversion factor for CRNAs in a locality would be capped at the conversion factor for physician anesthesiology services in the same locality.

The Committee is aware that proposed regulations were issued on the CRNA fee schedule in January 1989 and have yet to be issued in final form. Although the Committee proposal is to become effective on January 1, 1991, it should not be construed as superseding or affecting in any way the issuance of a final rule for the 1989-1990 period. In addition, it is not intended to supersede those portions of the rule that treat matters other than the conversion factors for CRNA services.

RURAL HEALTH CLINICS AND FEDERALLY QUALIFIED HEALTH CENTERS

Present law

Medicare law reimburses for rural health clinic services furnished by clinics that are integral parts of a hospital, skilled nursing facility, or home health agency on the basis of their reasonable costs. It pays for services furnished by independent clinics on the basis of an all-inclusive rate that reflects projected costs.

Rural health clinic services include physicians' services (and services incident to them), similar services furnished by a physician assistant, nurse practitioner, clinical psychologist, and clinical social worker (and services incident to them), and, in the case of areas with a shortage of home health agencies, part-time and intermittent nursing care and medical supplies (other than drugs and biologicals) furnished by a registered nurse or licensed professional nurse to a homebound patient.

The services of a non-physician health care professional specified above are covered whether or not the clinic is under the full-time direction of a physician as long as the individual is legally authorized under State law to perform the services.

Current law staffing requirements specify that a rural health clinic must have a nurse practitioner, a physician assistant, or a certified nurse-midwife available to furnish patient care not less than 50 percent of the time the clinic operates. This requirement applies even if a physician is available to provide services at the clinic.

Migrant health centers, community health centers, and health care centers for the homeless are designated under sections 329, 330, and 340, respectively, of the Public Health Service Act. Although they are eligible to receive grants under the law, they are not recognized as providers under Medicare. Because of Federal funding constraints, some of these centers qualify for grants but do not receive them.

A provision of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 extends Medicaid reimbursement to these centers for care provided to Medicaid beneficiaries, but they receive no reimbursement for care provided to low-income Medicare beneficiaries.

Committee provision

Rural health clinics

The Committee provision would permit the Secretary to waive the mid-level staffing requirement for a rural health clinic for a one-year period if the clinic can demonstrate to the Secretary's satisfaction that it has been unable, despite reasonable efforts, to hire a physician assistant, nurse practitioner, or a certified nurse-midwife.

The waiver would merely permit the health clinic to receive Medicare reimbursement for services furnished by a physician, or incident to such services.

Federally Qualifed Health Centers

The Committee provision would extend Medicare reimbursement to any clinic qualifying as a migrant health center, community health center, or health center for the homeless under the Public Health Service Act, without regard to whether the clinic actually receives a grant.

Medicare would pay for the same services that are covered at a rural health clinic.

Federally qualified health center services would be reimbursed on the basis of their reasonable costs or an all-inclusive rate based upon projected costs, as are rural health clinics.

These centers would be afforded the same standing as providers before the Provider Reimbursement Review Board.

PSYCHOLOGIST TECHNICAL

Present law

Section 6113(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) eliminated existing statutory restrictions on the settings in which a clinical psychologist may furnish services that are reimbursable by Medicare.

An ambiguity in the law makes it necessary to clarify that direct reimbursement may be made for services furnished to a hospital inpatient.

The Health Care Financing Administration has recommended that similar technicals be made for the services of certified nurse-midwives and certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNAs).

Committee provision

The Committee provision would clarify that the services of a clinical psychologist, certified nurse-midwife, and certified registered nurse anesthetist are directly reimbursable when furnished to hospital inpatients.

NEW TECHNOLOGY INTRAOCULAR LENSES

Present law

Section 1833(i)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 13951(i)(2)) establishes reimbursement for ambulatory surgery centers (ASCs). The amount paid for facility services is 80 percent of the "standard overhead amount established by the Secretary . . . on the basis of the Secretary's estimate of a fair fee." The estimate must take into account costs incurred that payment will be less than would have been the case if the care were provided on an inpatient basis.

OBRA 87 added a new criterion for calculating the overhead amount in the case of cataract surgery involving implantation of an intraocular lens (IOL). It required the Secretary to incorporate an amount that is "reasonable and related to acquiring the cost of acquiring the class of lens involved."

The reference to "class of lens" was intended to reflect the fact that not all IOLs are the same, but the law did not specifically require the Secretary to evaluate IOLs based on new technologies.

In August 1989, the Secretary issued a notice of proposed rulemaking to implement the mandate. This rule proposed that ASCs be reimbursed a flat $200 per lens, regardless of the type involved. The rule became final early in 1990.

Committee provision

Require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a process under which interested parties could request review of the appropriate reimbursement for a class of new technology IOL.

Review would be restricted to IOLs that have been approved by the FDA, but such approval would not, in itself, be sufficient to qualify the lens for a special reimbursement adjustment.

In conducting a review, the Secretary would be required to consider the medical benefits of an IOL and such other factors as the Secretary determines to be relevant. The Secretary would publish in the Federal Register from time to time (but not less often than once each year) a list of the requests for review the Secretary has received.

There would be a 60-day period for public comment on the requests. The Secretary would be required to publish a notice of his determinations with respect to IOLs specified in the notice within 60 days after the close of the comment period.

RURAL NURSING INCENTIVES

Present law

Medicare will pay for health care services that are furnished "incident to" a physician's services, including the services of nonphysician health professionals such as nurses, who are employed by the physician and under his or her direct supervision.

Medicare will directly reimburse registered nurses only in limited circumstances. Direct reimbursement is authorized for the services of a certified nurse-midwife and the services of a certified registered nurse anesthetist.

Medicare also makes separate payment for the services of nurse practitioners in a rural health clinic, an HMO, and a skilled nursing facility, but payment is made to the provider.

Committee provision

The committee provision would extend direct payment under Medicare for services furnished by a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist in a rural area if the services (1) are within the scope of practice authorized by State law or regulation, and (2) would be covered as physicians' services if furnished by a physician.

Reimbursement would be limited to 75% of the prevailing charge or fee schedule amount for a comparable physicians' service. Beneficiaries would be responsible for the usual coinsurance under Medicare (i.e., 20% of the Medicare allowable amount, and payment would be made only on an assignment related basis.

ESRD COMPOSITE RATE

Present law

ESRD services are reimbursed under two methods. Under method I, hospital and free-standing dialysis facilities are paid a flat amount, known as the composite rate. There are two composite rates, one for free-standing facilities ($125 per treatment) and one for hospital-based units ($129 per treatment). While the Secretary of Health and Human Services has the authority to adjust the composite rate, the law does not provide for periodic, automatic inflation updates to the composite rates.

Under method II, the beneficiary makes his or her own arrangements to receive home dialysis equipment, supplies, and support services. The beneficiary (or supplier, if assignment is taken) is paid directly based on itemized bills and the reasonable charge methodology. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) capped method II payments at method I levels.

In 1986, HCFA proposed to reduce the composite rate by approximately $6.00 per treatment; OBRA 1986 superseded this Committee provision by reducing the composite rates by $2.00 for 1987 and FY 1988. It also established a moratorium on further reductions in the composite rate, pending an Institute of Medicine (IOM) study on the effects of reimbursement policies on the quality of care. The study is due at the end of 1990. The moratorium has been extended legislatively several times.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would extend the moratorium until October 1, 1993, and require the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (ProPAC) to study and recommend an appropriate update for FY 1993. The study, which should take into account the preliminary IOM findings, would be due on or before June 1, 1992.

COVERAGE OF ERYTHROPOIETIN WHEN SELF-ADMINISTERED

Present law

While Medicare generally does not cover outpatient prescription drugs and biologicals, the program does cover drugs and biologicals administered "incident to" a physician's services.

This coverage is limited, however, to substances that cannot be self-administered.

In May of 1989, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved recombinant erythropoietin, a biological, as safe and effective in the treatment of uremic anemia in patients with renal failure. Until FDA took this action, this condition was treated primarily with periodic blood transfusions or androgenic steroids, both of which posed substantial risks to the patient.

In June of 1989, the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) issued guidelines for coverage of erythropoietin by Medicare. Reflecting the limitation contained in current law, these guidelines extend coverage to cases in which the biological is administered at a dialysis facility or in a physician's office, but not when it is self-administered at home.

As a result, end stage renal disease (ESRD) patients who dialyze at home must travel to a dialysis facility or physician's office to receive erythropoietin treatments, pay for the treatments from their own funds, or forego treatment with erythropoietin altogether.

At the present time, erythropoietin is administered intravenously an average of three times a week, usually during maintenance dialysis treatments.

This limitation in coverage has created incentives for patients to remain at (or return to) dialysis facilities for treatment and undercut legislative and regulatory efforts to encourage home dialysis.

Under existing legislative and regulatory authority, HCFA has established reimbursement for erythropoietin at $40 per dose for doses of under 10,000 units and $70 per dose for doses of 10,000 units or more.

The Medicare program pays eighty percent of these amounts, while beneficiaries are responsible for the remaining twenty percent. In addition, Medicare will pay a $2 administration fee for each dose furnished in a physician's office. Facilities and physicians are prohibited from billing the beneficiary for additional amounts.

Committee provision

The committee provision would extend coverage of erythropoietin to self-administration at home by dialysis patients, under guidelines established by the Secretary of Health and Human Services for its safe and effective use.

It would not alter the way in which payment is made for the biological at the present time; nor would it limit the Secretary's authority under current law to modify the existing reimbursement mechanism in response to changing dosage and administration patterns, as well as other factors.

Although the committee provision specifies that payments to a "method II" supplier be determined in the same manner as payments to a dialysis facility, this should not be read as requiring coverage of erythropoietin when furnished by a supplier.

Unlike dialysis facilities, method II suppliers are not responsible for the medical supervision of the patients they serve. In light of the fact that it necessary to monitor closely a patient's response to erythropoietin, the Secretary might conclude that it is not possible to ensure safe and effective use of the biological by method II patients.

While the committee provision would permit the Secretary to establish guidelines that limit coverage to patients served by a dialysis facility, it carefully does not preclude coverage under method II—in the hope that it will be possible for the Secretary to develop guidelines that afford equal access to erythropoietin for all dialysis patients.

EXTEND ESRD SECONDARY PAYER PERIOD

Present law

Under current law, Medicare is intended to be the secondary payer, for a 12-month period, for individuals who are covered by an employer-based group health plan and entitled to Medicare benefits on the basis of end-stage renal disease (ESRD). (A technical error in the law effectively limits Medicare's secondary status to the first 9 months of an individuals's Medicare entitlement.)

Except under limited circumstances, a group health plan may not differentiate in the benefits it provides to ESRD beneficiaries and others covered by the plan.

An employer with a non-complying group health plan is subject to an excise tax equal to 25 percent of the expenses of the plan.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would clarify that the period during which Medicare is secondary to private insurance for ESRD beneficiaries begins with the month entitlement to Medicare begins, and extend the period during which employer-based health coverage is the primary payer to the first 24 months of Medicare entitlement.

The Committee provision would require the Comptroller General to report on the effect of this extension on the availability employment and employment-based health coverage for ESRD beneficiaries.

Effective for services furnished on or after February 1, 1991, and before January 1, 1996, with respect to periods of Medicare entitlement beginning on or after February 1, 1990.

STAFF-ASSISTED HOME DIALYSIS

Present law

Under current law, Medicare will pay for home dialysis treatments of en-stage renal disease (ESRD) patients in one of two ways. Under "method I" reimbursement, a dialysis facility is paid a flat amount (known as the "composite rate") for each home treatment.

Although the labor costs associated with in-facility dialysis treatments were taken into account in determining the composite rate, no separate payment is made for any additional costs associated with sending a staff assistant to the home of a patient receiving treatment there.

Medicare will pay for the costs associated with training a family member to assist the home patient with the dialysis process.

Although some dialysis facilities currently supply a staff assistant to a limited number of their patients without additional compensation, others have not done so because of the financial constraints imposed by the composite rate.

Under "method II," Medicare will pay a supplier based upon its reasonable charges, for furnishing dialysis equipment and suppliers directly to home patients.

Until February 1, 1990, there was no upper limit on charge-based reimbursement under this method of reimbursement. One supplier, Home Intensive Care (HIC), furnished a staff assistant to each of its patients and raised its charges for equipment and supplies in order to cover the costs of furnishing such assistance. According to the General Accounting Office, per patient reimbursement to HIC was nearly double the amount paid under the composite rate. As a result, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (OBRA '89) capped payments to method II suppliers at method I levels.

In response to this limitation, HIC ceased its home dialysis operations, forcing its patients to find alternative sources of dialysis treatment. While it was possible for many of these patients to travel to a dialysis facility for treatment, it was necessary to utilize ambulance services for some of them because of their medical conditions.

Under section 1881(f)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395rr(f)(2)), which gives the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) experimental authority to evaluate methods for reducing ESRD program costs, the Secretary has provided staff assistance to a limited number of former HIC patients for whom it was not possible to find alternative treatment sources.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would amend Medicare law to authorize reimbursement to a dialysis facility for staff assistance furnished to home dialysis patients who meet specified criteria.

The Committee provision would require that a patient meet all of the following criteria in order to be eligible for the benefit:

1. certified by a physician as being confined to a bed or wheelchair and unable to transfer themselves from a bed to a chair; or have a serious medical condition (as specified by the Secretary of Health and Human Services) that would be exacerbated by transportation to and from a dialysis facility; and

2. are eligible for ambulance transportation, are likely to require it for at least 6 consecutive months, and the cost of ambulance transportation is likely to exceed the cost of a staff assistant; and

3. there is no spouse or relative available to assist with the dialysis; and

4. the Secretary certifies annually that the preceding criteria continue to be met.

The provision would become effective (if at all) only after the Secretary conducts a 3-year demonstration project involving the same population and determines that it is cost-effective to provide staff assistance to this population.

In determining whether the benefit is cost-effective, the Secretary would take into account the relative costs of ambulance transportation and staff assistance, the extent to which participants in the demonstration continue to utilize ambulance services for other purposes, and the per capita Medicare expenditures for participants compared with other ESRD beneficiaries with similar diagnoses and comorbidities.

The demonstration would be limited to 550 patients at any one time, but new participants would be admitted as openings become available. While the benefit could only be provided through a dialysis facility, the demonstration could be nation-wide or limited to specific sites, as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

Individuals who are receiving staff-assistance under the Secretary's demonstration authority as of the date of the enactment of the legislation would be deemed to satisfy the criteria for participating in the demonstration.

The demonstration would begin on January 1, 1991, and continue through December 31, 1993. The Secretary would report to the Congress on or before January 15, 1993, preliminary conclusions on the cost-effectiveness of the benefit established under the demonstration project. A final report would be due on or before January 15, 1994.

Any individual participating in the demonstration as of December 31, 1993, would be eligible to receive the staff-assisted benefit after the termination of the project for as long as they continue to satisfy the criteria, even if the Secretary determines that it would not be cost-effective to implement a permanent benefit for the entire ESRD patient population.

EXTEND MEDICARE SECONDARY PAYER REQUIREMENTS

Present law

Medicare is the secondary payer to other third party insurers under specified circumstances when beneficiaries may be covered by the other insurer. Medicare may be the secondary payer to automobile, medical, no-fault and liability insurance, and to employer health plans. Requirements that employers offer primary coverage to Medicare-eligible enrollees or their dependents, and penalties for failure to comply with these requirements, vary with the basis for the individual's Medicare eligibility (age, disability or end-stage renal disease) as well as with the size of the employer. For beneficiaries eligible for Medicare on the basis that they have end-stage renal disease, however, Medicare is the secondary payer to available employer-based health insurance only for the first 12 months of eligibility. The requirement that Medicare be secondary payer for disabled beneficiaries expires.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 requires the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the Social Security Administration (SSA) to provide information to the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) to improve identification and collection of Medicare secondary payer cases. SSA provides IRS with the names and Social Security numbers of all Medicare beneficiaries. IRS then provides SSA with a file of the names and Social Security numbers of all Medicare beneficiaries who filed a tax return for the previous calendar year.

SSA provides HCFA with a listing of all Medicare beneficiaries and their spouses, and the name of the beneficiary's or spouse's employer if: 1) the beneficiary and/or spouse filed a W-2, and 2) the beneficiary and/or spouse was employed by a large employer, defined as an employer with 20 or more employees.

HCFA uses the listing provided by SSA to identify more thoroughly secondary payer cases, including Medicare beneficiaries with employer-provided health coverage through the spouse's employment. HHS's contractors use this new information to contact employers in writing to determine whether the employer provided health coverage and the date of such coverage. General restrictions on the disclosure of information under the Internal Revenue Code and the Privacy Act also apply to the information provided by SSA and IRS to HCFA.

Third party payers, such as Medicare carriers and employers, receiving taxpayers information from HHS are subject to restrictions and safeguards on disclosure similar to those restrictions, safeguards and penalties currently provided for in the Internal Revenue Code with respect to other authorized recipients of taxpayer information.

To enable HHS to verify employer-provided health coverage, employers are required to respond to HCFA inquiries within 30 days of receiving the written request. HCFA would pay as secondary payer on all claims for beneficiaries currently covered by an employer health plan. Payments would be recovered from private insurers for claims erroneously paid for beneficiaries if the claim was submitted at a time when the beneficiary was covered by an employer health plan.

The provision expires on September 30, 1991.

Committee provision

Under the Committee bill, two provisions expiring in 1992 would be extended. One would continue requirements for data matching between the IRS and the Social Security Administration to identify Medicare beneficiaries who may be covered by group health plans. The other would extend the requirement that Medicare be secondary payer for disabled beneficiaries.

MEDICARE HMO PROVISIONS

Present law

a. Actuarial Equivalence of AAPCC: The Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) must estimate in advance the average per capita amounts that Medicare would pay for beneficiaries enrolled in a Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) or Competitive Medical Plan (CMP) paid on a risk basis in a contract year if these beneficiaries were not enrolled in the organization. The per capita estimates must include administrative costs as well as costs for services covered under the Medicare program. The Secretary must base these estimates on actual experience or data and information that assures actuarial equivalence.

b. Modification of 50-50 Rule: At least 50 percent of the enrollment in an HMO or CMP that contracts with Medicare on a risk basis must be from private insurance plans. The Secretary may modify or waive this requirement only if more than half of the population in the area served by the organization are entitled to Medicare or Medicaid benefits. The requirement may also be waived for the first three years of a contract if the organization is owned and operated by a governmental entity and makes reasonable efforts to enroll non-Medicare/Medicaid individuals.

c. Temporary Waiver of Enrollment Composition Rule for Related Entities: For the duration of a Medicare contract, at least one-half of the enrolled membership of a HMO or CMP must consist of individuals who are not eligible for Medicare or Medicaid. In assessing compliance, the Secretary considers the enrolled membership of the legal entity that contracts with Medicare.

d. Physician Incentive Payments: HMOs and CMPs are permitted to make arrangements with physicians to assume all or part of the financial risk of providing services to Medicare beneficiaries. However, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (OBRA) prohibited an HMO with a Medicare risk contract from making direct or indirect payments to a physician as an inducement to reduce or limit services to enrollees. This prohibition becomes effective April 1, 1991. Organizations that violate this requirement are subject to civil monetary penalties.

e. Waiver of Certain Requirements: In order to enter into a Medicare risk contract, an organization must be a federally qualified HMO and CMP and have at least 5,000 members. The Secretary may contract with an eligible organization that has fewer members (at least 1500) if the organization primarily serves members residing outside of urbanized areas. In addition, at least one-half of the enrolled membership of an organization that enters a Medicare contract must be individuals who are not Medicare or Medicaid beneficiaries.

f. Application of National Coverage Decisions to Risk Contract Organizations: The Secretary is required to determine annually a per capita rate of payment for all Medicare covered benefits for beneficiaries who are enrolled in an HMO/CMP. Organizations with a risk contract are paid this predetermined per capita rate each month. During the course of the contract, adjustments may be made in the monthly payments only when there are changes in beneficiary enrollment or where the Secretary makes an administrative error. If Medicare covers new benefits, either by law or by Secretarial decision, effective after the Secretary announces the per capita rate for the following year (no later than September 7) the risk contracting HMO must provide the services, but the per capita rate may not be increased until the following year.

g. Retroactive Enrollments: Organizations with a risk contract are paid a prospectively determined per capita rate of payment each month. During the course of the contract, adjustments may be made in the monthly payments only when there are changes in beneficiary enrollment or where the Secretary makes an administrative error. Other administrative errors, for example when an employer submits a late Medicare enrollment to an HMO/CMP for its retirees, cannot be retroactively adjusted.

h. Extension of Social HMO Waivers: Under the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (DEFRA), the Secretary was authorized to grant waivers to permit the establishment of social health maintenance organizations. Four demonstration projects have been established under this authority.

The purpose of these projects is to provide for the integration of health and social services under the direct financial management of a provider at a fixed annual prepaid capitation rate for Medicare of 100% of the adjusted average per capita cost of treating patients in a non-HMO setting. Under the DEFRA authority, the waivers were limited to three years.

In conducting the demonstration projects under this authority, the Secretary has established a limit on the number of Medicare beneficiaries (7,500) that may be enrolled at each of the four sites. The level of enrollment has varied substantially from one site to another.

Section 4018(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 required the Secretary to extend the waivers through 1992. The Secretary is required to make a final report to the Congress on the demonstration projects established under the DEFRA authority by January 1, 1993.

i. Study of Chiropractic Services: Medicare HMOs are required to provide to Medicare beneficiaries all of the services that are covered under Medicare. They have wide latitude to determine which types of practitioners will furnish covered services.

Proposal

a. Actuarial Equivalence of the AAPCC: While national projections of total Medicare costs (the USPCC) appear reliable when compared to actual total expenditures, recent studies have suggested that the actual payment levels on an individual beneficiary basis are not as accurate. Although the individual payment is adjusted for geographic characteristics (county of residence) and demographic factors (age, sex, welfare and institutional status), the AAPCC methodology in its current form is an inadequate mechanism for estimating the variations among Medicare beneficiaries in terms of their individual use of health care resources. In fact, researchers at the Health Care Financing Administration have concluded that the current enrollee characteristics used to determine individual payment explain less than 1 percent of actual interpatient variations in utilization. This has led to payment rates that have been uneven and unpredictable. Many HMOs have found the payment levels too low, resulting in decisions to either terminate their risk contracts or to not enter a risk contract. On the other hand, reports from the General Accounting Office and research studies have suggested that in many cases, actual beneficiary service use among HMO enrollees is lower than the average of the general Medicare population, resulting in payment levels that may be too high. Thus this provision requires the Secretary, working with the industry, to develop a refined or new payment method on a priority basis. The new methodology will be applied to the January 1, 1993 rates.

Under this provision, the Secretary must submit a proposal to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committees on Ways and Means and on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives by January 1, 1992. The new methodology must be designed to modify the payment method to organizations with a risk contract to better predict the future actual service utilization and annual medical expenditures of the beneficiary population enrolled in each contracting organization. The recommendations may modify the current AAPCC formula, for example, by adding predictors of medical utilization such as health status adjustors or refined geographic adjustor, or may propose a new payment methodology as an alternative to the AAPCC. The goals of the revised payment method are to provide more appropriate payment to an individual organization for its actual enrolled Medicare beneficiaries and to reduce the effects of favorable or adverse selection. The data to support the recommended changes must show that the refined or revised payment methodology is effective in explaining 15 percent of the annual variation in health care utilization and costs among Medicare beneficiaries.

The 15 percent measure is derived from research that has been conducted on the adequacy of the AAPCC. Research conducted by the Health Care Financing Administration has identified health status adjustors that increase the predictability in explaining the variation in utilization from the current 1 percent to up to 16 percent. Studies conducted by the RAND Corporation indicate that health measures and prior use measures may explain up to 60 percent of the variance in annual medical expenses among the non-elderly. Other studies suggest that the maximum percentage of variance that one should expect to be explained ranges between 14 and 20 percent.

The American Academy of Actuaries must certify that the methodology can predict 15 percent of the estimated variation.

The Secretary is required to publish, on or before March 1, 1992, a proposed rule to implement the new payment methodology, effective for contract years beginning on or after January 1, 1993.

The Comptroller General is required to review the proposed changes in the methodology and make recommendations to the Congress on appropriate modifications in the proposal. This report is due by May 1, 1992.

The Secretary is required to issue a final rule during the period beginning August 1, 1992, and ending September 7, 1992.

b. Waiver of 50–50 rule: The Secretary of HHS may waive the 50–50 enrollment composition rule for an HMO or CMP that has (or is seeking) a risk contract if all of the following criteria are met:

1. Both the organization with (or seeking) the risk contract and any affiliated organization must demonstrate profitability for the most recent 3 consecutive years. If the plan seeking a waiver is a new organization established by an affiliated organization as part of an expansion program, the affiliate must demonstrate to the Secretary that it can ensure solvency of the new operation until profitability is achieved.

2. The plan must have been a Medicare risk contractor for at least three years. If the plan seeking the waiver is a new organization, an affiliated organization must have five years of successful experience in operating plans with Medicare risk contracts in two or more states.

3. The plan seeking a waiver (or the affiliated organization in the case of a new organization) must have a total enrollment (including non-Medicare) of at least 100,000 enrollees.

4. The plan seeking a waiver must have no significant quality problems (as determined by the Secretary identified through internal or external quality review. In addition the organization must agree to an annual quality review conducted by the Secretary. If there are any qualified problems identified after the waiver has been approved, the Secretary, after notice to the organization of the unfavorable review and an opportunity to correct any deficiencies, may suspend new enrollment or payment to the organization after the Secretary notifies the organization.

5. As a condition of the waiver, the plan must agree to fund an annual membership satisfaction survey to be conducted either by an independent survey firm or the PRO. The survey must include satisfaction measures drawn from three populations:

a. The enrolled Medicare membership;

b. Medicare members who have been discharged from a hospital within a previous 30 day period, and

c. Medicare disenrollees.

The results of these surveys must be reported to the Secretary.

6. In exchange for approval of an increased proportion of Medicare enrollees, the plan with a waiver under this section must provide, at no additional charge to the enrolled beneficiary or Medicare (i.e. within the Medicare allowed coinsurance and deductible amounts), special services that are uniquely targeted towards an elderly Medicare population and are not covered by the Medicare benefit package or routinely provided to non-Medicare enrollees in the plan. These services must include a multi-disciplinary geriatic assessment for each new beneficiary enrolled after the date that the waiver is approved (performed by a social worker, physician and a nurse, each of whom has a specialty in geriatrics or has completed a geriatric training program). This assessment will result in a plan for each beneficiary to treat or manage specific medical conditions and will identify a beneficiary's level of disability as determined by objective criteria that measure impairment of activities of daily living (ADL) in six areas (toileting, eating, mobility, bathing, continence and dressing) and objective criteria that measure cognitive impairment. Medicare enrollees who are determined to be dependent in 3 or more ADLs for at least 3 months would be eligible to receive home and community based services (defined as non-medical services provided to prevent or delay a Medicare beneficiary from entering a nursing home). The home and community based services offered by the plan must include at least one and preferably will include more than one of the following services: homemaker or chore services, personal care services, adult day health care, meals on wheels, respite care, lifeline telephone assistance, transportation, geriatric case management, rehabilitation and home adaptation, special health education programs geared to the elderly, or geriatric mental health services.

7. The waiver will be approved for a three year period. The additional benefits must be available to enrollees for at least three years. The Secretary must review the organization's compliance with the terms of the waiver on an annual basis. The waiver may be withdrawn if the plan fails to comply with any of the provisions.

8. The Secretary is required to evaluate the cost and impact of the waiver authority, including any impact on the financial viability of the plans given such waivers, after two years and recommend to Congress whether the waiver authority should be extended or whether any changes should be made in the 50/50 enrollment requirement.

c. Temporary Waiver of Enrollment Composition Rule for Related Entities: For a period of two years, the Secretary may count, for purposes of the 50/50 enrollment rule, the enrolled members of an entity that is a separate corporation but is functionally integrated with a qualified HMO through common ownership or control. The Secretary must be satisfied that the entity: meets the definition of an eligible organization; provides services in the same geographic area through essentially the same physicians and providers as the contracting HMO/CMP; uses an integrated quality assurance program; and uses common grievance procedures, claims processing, management and administrative services. If some of the providers or physicians are affiliated with the entity but not with the HMO/CMP, then only the members of the entity that use common providers and physicians may be deemed to be HMO/CMP members for purposes of 50/50 determination.

d. Physician Incentive Payments: The Secretary would be authorized to collect such information as may be necessary to identify inappropriate financial risk and incentive arrangements used by an HMO/CMP with a contract for services provided to Medicare enrollees.

The general prohibition against physician incentive plans in HMOs and CMPs with Medicare risk contracts would be repealed. A Medicare risk or cost contracting HMO/CMP would be prohibited from making any direct and specific payment or other inducement to an individual physician to withhold or limit a specific medically necessary service to an identifiable patient. If a plan violates this prohibition, it will be subject to civil monetary penalties of $25,000 for each determination or intermediate sanctions.

An HMO/CMP could not place an individual physician or physician group at substantial financial risk (as determined by the Secretary) for services that are not rendered by the physician (or group) unless the HMO/CMP provides adequate protections (as determined by the Secretary) to limit the physician's liability through measures such as stop-loss insurance or appropriate risk corridors. In addition, an HMO/CMP would be required to conduct periodic surveys of its enrollees and former enrollees to determine their satisfaction with access to, and quality, of services, as well as to have safeguards against underutilization in place under its quality assurance program. If a plan violates this prohibition, it will be subject to civil monetary penalties of $25,000 for each determination or intermediate sanctions.

e. Waiver of Certain Requirements: Managed Care, Inc., an affiliate of CHP, the medical group associated with Long Island Jewish Medical Center, may include the enrollees of a State licensed health maintenance organization with respect to whom Managed Care, Inc. has agreed to assume full financial risk for provision of hospital and physician services for purposes of meeting the Medicare risk contracting requirement that no more than 50 percent of the enrolled membership be Medicare or Medicaid beneficiaries and the requirement that there be a minimum enrollment of 5,000 persons. The waiver will be approved for two years, at the conclusion of which the Secretary will terminate its contract with CHP if it has not met the 50 percent and 5,000 member requirements. The members of the HMO with whom CHP has an agreement may not be considered for purposes of any other Medicare risk contract.

f. Application of National Coverage Decisions to Risk Contract Organizations: This provision would permit the Secretary, for a temporary period, to make fee-for-service payments to the risk HMO/CMP for new benefits authorized by statute, regulation or other Secretarial coverage policy decision, if these benefits have not been taken into account in determining the per capita rate. At the beginning of the next contract year, the monthly payment to the HMO would be adjusted to include the actuarial amount of the new benefit.

g. Retroactive Enrollments: Allow retroactive enrollment, and thus retroactive payments, of up to three months, for Medicare beneficiaries who are enrolled in a Medicare risk-contracting HMO/CMP as part of an employer group. Retroactive enrollment and payment will be permitted only if the beneficiary, on or before the intended effective date of enrollment, signs a statement indicating his or her understanding of the Medicare lock-in requirement.

h. Extension of Social HMO Waivers: Expiration of the waiver authority for the four existing sites in 1992 will make it increasingly difficult for these projects to attract and retain enrollees after 1990. Require the Secretary to extend the waivers through 1995 under the same terms and conditions as currently apply.

Although a limit on the total number of Medicare beneficiaries enrolled at the four sites may be reasonable, the Committee believes that a limit on the number of enrollees at any one site is unnecessary as long as the overall limit is observed and expects that such ceilings will be adjusted or eliminated in order to take into account varying enrollment patterns at the various sites.

i. Study of Chiropractic Services: The proposal would require the Secretary to study and report to Congress on the availability of the chiropractic benefits covered by Medicare to HMO enrollees and the arrangements and types of practitioners involved in furnishing such services.

PROVISIONS RELATING TO PEER REVIEW ORGANIZATIONS

Present law

Section 1156 of the Social Security Act imposes upon health care practitioners and providers the obligation to provide only care that is medically necessary and meets professionally recognized standards of quality.

This provision also authorizes a Peer Review Organization (PRO) to recommend that the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) sanction a practitioner or provider for a gross and flagrant violation of these obligations or for a pattern of lesser violations.

The Secretary may exclude the practitioner or provider from program participation (permanently or for a period of time), or impose a money penalty not exceeding the actual cost to the Medicare program of the unnecessary or substandard care.

The law requires that, before excluding a practitioner or provider from program participation, the Secretary must determine that there has been an "unwillingness or a lack of ability substantially to comply" with these obligations.

In some cases, administrative law judges have determined that a practitioner's decision to cooperate with a PRO corrective action plan after the initiation of exclusion proceedings is sufficient to preclude a finding that he or she is unwilling to comply with those obligations.

As a result, the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Health and Human Services, which is responsible for acting upon PRO sanction recommendations, has been reluctant to initiate exclusion proceedings.

In January of 1990 OIG declined to pursue an exclusion remedy against a California physician who had failed to respond to communications from the PRO on its findings that he had failed to provide care meeting professionally recognized standards health care. This decision was based, in part, upon a judgment that OIG could not "attach sufficient weight to that lack of response to justify a finding of unwillingness."

The Administrative Conference of the United States and the General Accounting Office urged correction of this problem.

Committee provision

The committee provision clarifies that, in determining whether a practitioner or person is "unwilling or unable", the Secretary will take into account the practitioner's or person's willingness to comply with a corrective action plan agreed to by the PRO before the Secretary reviews the PRO's recommendation for sanctions.

The statutory language indicates (by the phrase "as appropriate") that a corrective action may not be appropriate in all circumstances, and the Committee expects that the Secretary will monitor use of corrective action plans to ensure that they are not being abused.

The committee provision also clarifies that podiatrists and optometrists should be involved in reviewing services furnished by their peers.

Finally, the committee provision clarifies that PROs, as well as the individuals involved in PRO review activities, are immune from suit if they exercised due care in performing the activities.

MEDIGAP INSURANCE

Present law

Section 1882 of the Social Security Act establishes a voluntary certification program for private health insurance policies designed to supplement Medicare. These health insurance policies, known as "Medigap" insurance, may be certified in one of two ways. Individual insurers may submit their policies to the Secretary and be authorized to display a federal emblem if they are found to meet or exceed the minimum standards established under Section 1882. Or, policies sold in States with regulatory programs that meet or exceed the Federal standards may be deemed by the Secretary to meet the Federal requirements.

To be certified under this program, a Medigap insurance policy must: (1) meet or exceed the standards with respect to Medicare supplemental policies set forth in the "NAIC Model Regulation to Implement the Individual Accident and Sickness Minimum Standards Act," as amended and adopted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, and (2) be expected to pay benefits to subscribers (as estimated for the entire period for which rates are computed to provide coverage, on the basis of incurred claims experience and earned premiums for such period) equal to 75% of premiums in the case of group policies and 60% in the case of individual policies.

The law does not affect the right of a state to regulate policies marketed in that state, and approval of a policy under the voluntary certification program does not authorize the insuring organization to market a policy that does not conform to applicable state laws and regulations. Criminal penalties are set forth for fraudulent activities connected with the sale of Medigap policies. Activities proscribed include making false statements and misrepresentations; falsely claiming certification by the Secretary; selling policies that duplicate Medicare benefits; and mailing into a state Medigap policies disapproved by that state. Violation of these provisions is a felony, entailing maximum penalties of $5,000, 5 years' imprisonment, or both.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989 provided a period of 90 days for the NAIC to revise the model regulation to improve the regulation and to reflect benefit changes made under the law. The new NAIC standards applied in a state on the earlier of the date upon which the state adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the amended model regulation, or 1 year after the NAIC adopted it amended regulation (December 13, 1989). Policies sold before enactment, but still in effect on January 1, 1990 would not meet the standards unless each policy holder who is eligible for Medicare is sent a notice by January 31, 1990 explaining the changes in Medicare benefits resulting from catastrophic repeal legislation and how these changes affect the policy's benefits and premium. Special rules were established to allow for reinstitution of coverage for individuals who had terminated Medigap coverage between December 1988 and enactment of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would make a number of changes related to Medicare supplemental insurance.

Simplification: Simplification standards for limiting variation among Medicare supplemental insurance policies would be developed, either within 9 months by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), or if the NAIC fails to act, by the Secretary. These standards would require that each Medigap insurer offer a policy incorporating a core group of benefits that consists of the current NAIC minimum package without deductibles. If the NAIC chooses to develop such standards, the Committee requests that the Association report within 6 months of enactment of this provision on its progress in developing simplification standards.

The standards would further limit variation in Medigap policies in one of three ways: establish a fixed number of defined benefit packages (not to exceed 10), establish a core package with additional benefits (not to exceed 10) from which beneficiaries could choose, or establish a core package with a fixed number of defined benefits (not to exceed 4 for any insurer.)

The standards would also include a required uniform format and standard terminolgy to be used by insurers.

States would be allowed to grant exceptions for innovative benefits. Every three years the Secretary would evaluate whether the simplification standards should be changed to incorporate innovative benefits.

Each Medigap insurer would be required to provide a summary sheet which describes benefits and allows beneficiaries to directly compare benefits and prices among policies. The summary sheet will include information on the average loss ratio for the most recent three-year period in which the policy was in effect.

States with alternative simplification programs in place prior to enactment of the new requirements could apply to the Secretary for a waiver of the simplification standards.

The simplification standards would only apply to policies issued after adoption of the new standards.

With 4 years of enactment, the General Accounting Office would report to the Congress on the impact of simplification standards on consumer protection, health benefit innovation, consumer choice, and health care costs.

Renewals and Conversions: All Medigap policies would be guaranteed renewable, and that conversion options be offered when a group policy is terminated by the group, when an individual terminates membership in the group.

Preexisting Condition Limitations: Pre-existing condition limitations could not apply for more than 6 months; in the case of a replacement policy, any time period applicable to preexisting conditions or other waiting periods under the original policy would be credited to the replacement policy.

Approval for Sale in State: All Medigap policies sold through the mail would have to be approved by the State. The civil monetary penalty for sale of an unapproved policy through the mail would be increased from $5,000 to $25,000.

Duplication of Sale for Medigap: Insurers would be required to obtain a statement from the purchaser indicating whether the individual was covered by other Medigap policies or Medicaid. Sale of a policy without obtaining a signed statement, or for which the statement indicates the individual has another Medigap policy or is covered by Medicaid would be subject to penalty. The penalty would not apply to the sale of a policy to a Medicaid recipient if the premium was paid by the Medicaid program, or if the state Medicaid program does not provide complete coverage of Medicare cost sharing. The seller of the policy would not be required to verify the accuracy of the information on the applicant's written statement. The civil monetary penalty for selling a duplicative policy would be increased from $5,000 to $25,000.

Suspension of Premiums for Medicaid Recipients: Insurers would be required to suspend benefits and premiums upon request of a policy-holder who becomes a Medicaid recipient. If Medicaid eligibility is reversed, the insurer would be required to reinstate coverage if the individual notifies the insurer within 90 days after the loss of Medicaid benefits.

Increase in Other Civil Monetary Penalties: Existing civil monetary penalties which apply to misrepresentation of a policy as certified and misrepresentation of Medigap insurance as associated with the Medicare program would be increased from $5,000 to $25,000.

Refund of Premiums: To the extent that a policy in a given year did not meet loss ratio standards, insurers would be required to issue a refund to policyholders in order to come into compliance with the loss ratio standards. Refunds could be in the form of a credit against premiums due for individuals who continue to be policyholders. Policies in effect for less than 3 years would be exempted from this requirement.

Approval Process for Premium Increases: States would be required to have a process for approving and disapproving premium increases and to establish a policy for the holding of public hearings prior to approval of a premium increase.

Medicare Select: If a policy would meet the model standards except that benefits are restricted to items and services provided by certain entities, or reduced benefits are provided when services are provided by other entities, the policy will be deemed to meet the standards if benefits are provided through a contract arrangement with a network that offers sufficient access, full benefits are provided for emergency services, and the issuer of the policy provides an ongoing quality assurance program. The Secretary would be authorized to enter into a contract with an entity with a policy approved under this provision for the purpose of determining whether items and services are considered reasonable and necessary.

Treatment of HMOs: Clarify that HMOs with risk or cost contracts under Medicare would not be subject to Medigap standards.

Monitoring of State Medigap Programs: States would be required to report to the Secretary on the implementation and enforcement of the Medigap standards, including information on loss ratios of policies sold in the State, actions taken by the state to bring policies into compliance, and state programs implementing consumer protection provisions. The Secretary will determine how frequently such reports are required.

Penalty for Unapproved Policies: Policies sold in a state without an approved regulatory program, and for which the Secretary determines that the State does not provide for consumer protection at least as great as the protection provided under an approved program, would have to be certified by the Secretary or carry a disclaimer indicating that the policy has not been certified as meeting Federal standards. The disclaimer would have to be included in at least 12 point type on any advertisement for the policy, on each page of the policy's outline of coverage, and on the first page of the policy itself. Purchasers of such policies would be required to sign a statement indicating that they understand that the policy has not been certified by the Secretary. Sale of such a non-certified policy without the disclaimer, or without obtaining the signed statement would be subject to a civil monetary penalty not to exceed $25,000.

Adoption of New Standards: The NAIC would be expected to revise the Model Regulation to incorporate the new requirements within 9 months of enactment. If the NAIC failed to act, the Secretary would issue new standards. States would then have 1 year to adopt the standards. After that time, policies sold in a state that failed to adopt the standards could no longer be certified as meeting Federal standards unless certification was given directly by the Secretary.

Within two years of enactment, the Secretary would report to the Congress on the implementation of the new standards, including identification of which states have and have not adopted the standards, and any reasons for failure to adopt some or all of the new standards.

Grants to States for Consumer Counseling: The Committee bill would authorize $10 million annually from Medicare trust funds for fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 for grants to states for programs to provide health insurance information and counseling to Medicare beneficiaries.

Information by Telephone: The Secretary would establish a toll-free telephone number for providing information on Medicare, Medicaid and Medicare supplemental policies. The Secretary would be authorized to conduct demonstration projects in up to 5 states for the purpose of establishing statewide toll-free telephone numbers for providing consumer information on benefits under Medicare, Medicare supplemental insurance available in the state, and the state's Medicaid program.

HOME HEALTH WAGE INDEX

Present law

Medicare pays home health agencies the reasonable cost of covered services, subject to annual limits. The annual limits are set at 112% of the average cost agencies incur in delivering services, but are adjusted to reflect geographic variations in wage levels. The Health Care Financing Administration has adjusted the home health limits for area wage variations by applying the same wage index used to adjust hospital payments under the prospective payment system (the hospital wage index is based on a special survey of hospitals). The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 required that, effective July 1, 1988, HCFA implement a special wage index based on audited data from home health agencies to adjust the limits. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 delayed this requirement until July 1, 1989 and substituted a requirement that the data be "verified" rather than "audited." OBRA 89 further delayed the effective date until July 1, 1991 after HCFA published a home health wage index that in many cases varied widely from the hospital wage index previously used (plus or minus 60%). During this time, HCFA has continued to use a wage index based on 1982 hospital data.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would eliminate the requirement that HCFA establish a home health wage index. The wage index used to adjust payments to hospitals under the prospective payment system (PPS) would be applied to home health agency cost limits. Updates to the hospital wage index would be phased in over three years by blending wage data as follows: for portions of cost reporting periods beginning on or after July 1, 1991, one-third of the index based on 1988 data and two-thirds of the index based on 1982 data; for cost reporting periods beginning on or after July 1, 1992, two-thirds of the 1988 index and one-third of the 1982 index. For cost reporting periods beginning on or after July 1, 1993, the wage index applicable to PPS hospitals would be used.

NURSING AND ALLIED HEALTH EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Present law

Medicare pays hospitals the direct costs of approved medical education programs, including programs to train resident physicians, nurses and allied health professionals. These costs are excluded from Medicare's prospective payment system (PPS) and are reimbursed on a reasonable cost basis (for nurses and allied health professionals) or using a special formula (for resident physicians). Costs may include stipends for residents and other students, supervisory salaries of teachers and overhead costs (i.e., classroom space).

Under current Medicare regulations, hospital costs of approved medical education programs (including nursing education) are recognized as reimbursable under the pass-through only if the program is operated by the provider. (Non-provider operated programs may involve allowable costs, but the costs are assumed to be covered under the DRG payment). This policy, adopted in 1984, reversed an earlier policy under which hospital costs would be allowable by Medicare if incurred in support of joint programs conducted in the name of an educational institution but with support from one or more hospitals. Under pre-1984 policy, hospital costs were allowed as direct medical education costs as long as: a) hospital support did not constitute a redistribution of non-provider costs to the provider; b) the provider received a benefit for the support furnished; and c) the provider's support was less than what it would incur with its own program.

Based on an interpretation by the Provider Reimbursement Review Board issued in 1988, intermediaries began disallowing nursing education costs claimed by hospitals that were part of academic medical centers or which were related to nursing schools.

OBRA 89 precluded HHS from recouping alleged overpayments until October 1, 1990. The Secretary was required to publish regulations before July 1, 1990 specifying the relationship required between an approved nursing or allied health program and a hospital for the hospital's costs to be allowable, the types of costs allowable by Medicare, and the distinction between costs treated as operating costs and costs reimbursed on a pass-through basis. The Secretary has not yet published such regulations.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would permanently prohibit recoupment of the disallowances in payments made prior to October 1, 1990, and establish a payment policy effective beginning on October 1, 1990 that would reimburse hospitals on a pass-through basis for clinical costs (as defined by the Secretary) associated with training nurses and allied health professionals. For the purposes of determining the initial proportion of costs attributed to the costs of clinical training, hospitals will be subject to a special audit (or other appropriate scrutiny) so as to ensure that each hospital has not artificially or inappropriately inflated its level of support for the education program during that period.

CASE MANAGEMENT DEMONSTRATIONS

Present law

"Case management" is a system under which a designated person or organization has responsibility for overseeing health care services for individuals assigned to the person or organization. Where case management is used, an insurer usually will not pay (or will pay less) for those services that are provided without permission of the case manager. Under current law, there are no requirements for Medicare beneficiaries to receive case management services, and case management is not a covered service. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 required the Secretary of HHS to establish 4 2-year demonstration projects under which an appropriate entity agreed to provide case management services to Medicare beneficiaries with high cost health care services. $2 million per year was authorized to carry out these projects. The Secretary awarded the four projects, which were suspended when the provision authorizing the demonstrations was repealed under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would require the Secretary to resume three case management demonstration projects under the same terms and conditions established in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

BASE YEAR COST FOR GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION

Present law

Medicare pays teaching hospitals the direct costs of medical education (resident salaries, supervisory time, classroom space). Under the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, a hospital's direct medical education payments are limited in the aggregate by the number of the hospital's residents times a hospital-specific base year cost per resident indexed forward for inflation. In most cases, the Secretary of HHS is required to use 1984 as the base year for this calculation, but may choose a different year for hospitals not involved in medical education or participating in Medicare in 1984.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would allow the Secretary to use a base year other than 1984 for hospitals that were involved in medical education at the time but which have substantially upgraded their medical education program since that time, if the hospital requests the use of a different base year.

HCFA SERVICE FELLOWS PROGRAM

Present law

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) administers the Medicare and Medicaid programs. The appointment of the HCFA Administrator is subject to Senate confirmation.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would authorize the HCFA Administrator to establish the HCFA Service Fellows Program under which up to 10 individuals from the private sector or academia who have demonstrated exceptional competence or highly specialized skills or knowledge may conduct healthcare related research studies and investigations within the Health Care financing Administration. Qualified individuals would be appointed by the Administrator to serve as fellows for up to 2 years; costs of the program could not exceed $750,000 a year.

PHYSICIAN REFERRALS

Present law

Section 1877 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395nn) establishes certain penalties for the submission of claims for clinical laboratory services under Medicare by a physician who has an ownership interest in, or compensation arrangement with, the entity that furnishes the services.

Although the purpose of section 1877 was to eliminate incentives for the overutilization of clinical laboratory services, one reading of the law would preclude a physician from referring patients to a health care provider with which the physician has a financial relationship, even though that relationship is not related to the provision of clinical laboratory services.

Without further clarification, the law could be construed as prohibiting referrals to a hospital laboratory by an emergency room physician who has a compensation arrangement with, but is not employed by, the hospital. (The laws of some states prohibit the hospitals from employing physicians.)

It could also be read as precluding a physician who has invested in a particular unit of a hospital (such as a neonatal unit) from referring a patient's laboratory tests to the hospital's laboratory.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would clarify that penalties under section 1877 do not apply to clinical laboratory services furnished by a hospital pursuant to a referral by a physician who has a financial relationship with the hospital that does not involve the provision of clinical laboratory services.

LIVING WILLS AND OTHER ADVANCE DIRECTIVES

Present law

Although Medicare providers are not required under current law to have policies and procedures in place concerning decision-making on treatment alternatives, the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Health Care Organizations (JCAHO), which provides "deemed status" to many hospitals under the Medicare program, does require hospitals to have protocols for decision-making on "do not resuscitate" orders.

In addition, section 1138 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b-8) requires hospitals, as a condition of participation in the Medicare program, to establish written protocols for the identification of potential organ donors.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would require providers of health care services (hospitals, skilled nursing facilities (nursing facilities under Medicaid), hospice programs, home health agencies, and comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facilities) and Medicaid programs to maintain written policies and procedures:

(1) to provide written information to all adult patients (regardless of whether they are program beneficiaries) on their rights under State law to make decisions about their medical care (including the right to accept or refuse care and the right to formulate an advance directive) and on the policies of the provider on implementing such rights;

(2) to inquire whether an individual has executed an advance directive and document the individual's response'

(3) not to discriminate against an individual on the basis of whether the individual has executed an advance directive;

(4) to ensure compliance with State law concerning advance directives; and

(5) to provide for staff education on advance directives.

Although it requires a provider to maintain written policies and procedures to "ensure compliance with requirements of State law respecting advance directives," the Committee provison should not be read as susperseding any right recognized under State law an individual caregiver to refuse to withdraw treatment as a matter of conscience, nor should it be read as authorizing such a refusal in a State whose laws do not recognize such a right.

The Committee provision amends the provisions of Medicare law relating to provider agreements, and failure of a provider to satisfy the new requirements could lead to termination of its agreement with the Medicare program.

The Committee recognizes that providers should not be routinely placed at risk of termination of their provider agreements because of requirements that are not directly related to the health and safety of program beneficiaries or to the quality of the health care they provide.

In this case, however, the Committee believes that knowledge of the patient's wishes regarding the course of treatment can improve the quality of care furnished by providers. Making available information on the advance directives will increase the ability of patients to influence treatment decisions.

In addition, the Committee provision would require a State, as a condition of approval of its State Medicaid plan, to develop written materials on the laws of the State concerning advance directives. It is expected that these materials would be an impartial description of State law. These materials would be made available for distribution by Medicare and Medicaid providers to their patients.

The Committee provision would also require the Secretary of Health and Human Services (Secretary) to study and report to the Congress on the implementation of these requirements, ways to encourage reciprocal enforcement of advance directives by the States, and the manner in which treatment decisions are made in the absence of an advance directive.

Finally, the Committee provision would require the Secretary to conduct a public education campaign to increase awareness of the availability of advance directives.

PART B PREMIUM

Present law

Individuals entitled to benefits under part A of the Medicare program have the option of enrolling in part B of the program as well. Enrollees pay a monthly premium. The part B premium originally was set to ensure that enrollee premiums covered 50 percent of the costs of the part B program; the remainder of the funding came from general revenues.

Subsequent legislation limited the percentage increase in the part B premium for a given year to the percentage increase in Social Security cash benefits in that year. This had the effect of decreasing the share of program costs borne by enrollees.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA) and the social Security Amendments of 1983 provided for part B premiums in 1984 and 1985 to be set at a level that would cover 25 percent of program costs. If there were no cost of living adjustment (COLA) under the cash benefits program, there would be no increase in the part B premium, and the dollar value of an individual's premium increase could not exceed the dollar increase in his or her cash benefits. Subsequent legislation extended these provisions through 1990.

Committee provision

The Committee bill would require that for calendar years 1993 through 1995, part B premiums would be set to cover 25 percent of part B costs, with protections to ensure that no individual's premium increase could exceed the increase in Social Security cash benefits.

PART B DEDUCTIBLE

Present law

Beneficiaries enrolled in part B of the Medicare program must pay the first $75.00 in part B costs each year. The deductible has increased only twice since 1966, when it was established at $50.00. The deductible was increased to $60 in 1973. The most recent increase was from $60.00 to $75.00 in 1982.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would increase the Part B deductible from $75.00 to $150.00 for calendar years 1991 through 1995.

COINSURANCE ON CLINICAL LABORATORY SERVICES

Present law

Medicare currently pays 100 percent of the approved fee for clinical laboratory services provided to enrollees. The amount paid by Medicare for these services is determined under a fee schedule, and providers must accept the approved fee as payment-in-full for the service.

Medicare beneficiaries currently pay coinsurance of 20 percent for most other services provided under the supplementary medical insurance (part B) portion of Medicare, as they did for clinical laboratory services furnished before July of 1984. The part B deductible also applies to these services.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 eliminated coinsurance for clinical laboratory services as part of a comprehensive revision of payment policies regarding these services that included establishment of a fee schedule and elimination of balance billing.

Committee provision

The Committee provision would limit Medicare payments for clinical laboratory services to 80 percent of the fee schedule amount and would authorize the collection of the remaining 20 percent from Medicare beneficiaries. It would also apply the part B deductible to these services.

Medicare would continue to pay 100 percent of the fee schedule amount in the case of tests required in connection with a required second or third opinion.

MEDICAID PRESCRIPTION DRUG DISCOUNTS

Present law

Discount agreements: Federal law permits States to cover outpatient prescription drugs under their Medicaid programs and every State does so. Because Medicaid patients may have their prescriptions filled at the pharmacy of their choice, the State Medicaid programs pay for prescription drugs through reimbursement to pharmacists. Current Medicaid law and regulations (both State and Federal) place limits on the amount that the pharmacists are reimbursed. Although State Medicaid programs are free to negotiate discounts with manufacturers, there are no Federal mechanisms for receiving discounts from pharmaceutical manufacturers for the Medicaid program.

Coverage restrictions; prior authorization: About 19 States also control costs of their prescription drug programs by excluding certain drugs from coverage (i.e., they establish "restrictive formularies"). States also monitor utilization by requiring prior authorization for the prescription or dispensing of certain drugs or categories of drugs. There are no federal laws or regulations governing prior authorization programs.

Generic drug dispensing: HCFA regulations require that a generic drug product be dispensed to a Medicaid patient unless the physician has specifically indicated on the prescription that the brand name is medically necessary. HDFA establishes upper payment limits for those multiple-source drugs for which all formulations are rated as therapeutically equivalent and pharmaceutically equivalent.

Drug utilization review: States are not required to have drug utilization review programs.

Electronic claims management: A 90 percent enhanced match is available for the design, development, or installation of mechanized claims processing and information retrieval systems that the Secretary determines are likely to provide more efficient, economical and effective administration of the plan and to be compatible with the claims processing and information retrieval systems utilized in the administration of Medicare.

Pharmacist reimbursement: Pharmacists are reimbursed for the cost of drug ingredients and a reasonable amount for dispensing the product, pursuant to Federal and State guidelines. The Federal government sets upper payment limits for certain generic drug ingredients. Reimbursement for other drug ingredients is determined by the State subject to Federal guidelines. Dispensing fees are determined by the State.

Committee provision

Discount agreements: In order to have its products covered by State Medicaid programs, each manufacturer of prescription drug products would have to enter a discount agreement with the Secretary of Health and Human Services. Pursuant to such an agreement, the manufacturer would be required to give each State a rebate based on the volume of its products that were paid for by the State on behalf of Medicaid beneficiaries.

For "non-innovator multiple-source" ("generic") and over-the-counter drugs, the discount would be 12 percent of the Average Manufacturer's Price (AMP)—the average price of a drug to wholesalers that sell to the retail trade.

For "single-source" (patented) drugs and "innovator multiple-source drugs" (the brand-name product for which there is a generic equivalent) the Medicaid price from January 1, 1991 through December 31, 1993, would be the AMP minus 15 percent. From January 1, 1993 onward, the Medicaid program would receive the lower of the AMP minus 15 percent, or the manufacturer's "best price" to other U.S. purchasers.

For purposes of determining a manufacturer's "best price," the prices to certain purchasers would be excluded: the price charged to the depot component of the Veterans' Affairs Department, or the Department of Defense pharmaceutical purchasing system; "nominal" prices (such as a token price charged to certain charitable organizations); and, the Committee expects, other prices that the Secretary might deem appropriate to exclude upon a request by the manufacturer (such as prices charged to specific charitable organizations that are other than a "nominal" price). Vaccines are excluded from the discount arrangements. Hospitals and HMOs with certain drug purchasing arrangements, and that meet other requirements, also would be exempt.

In addition to the standard discount, each manufacturer entering a discount agreement would agree to added rebates if its average manufacturer price to Medicaid (based on a weighted average across its sole source and innovator multiple-source product line) rose faster than inflation in the general economy. The Secretary would be required to assure that each manufacturer's average price to Medicaid (based on a weighted average across their sole source and innovator multiple-source product line) did not rise faster than the CPI (urban rate). Annually, based on auditable information provided by manufacturers and States, the Secretary would calculate added rebates that would be paid to Medicaid programs to carry out this provision.

Under one such approach, the Secretary would calculate the WAMP (weighted average of manufacturer price), as the average of each of the manufacturer's AMPs weighted by volume of Medicaid sales for the fiscal year in question. That WAMP would be compared to the manufacturer's average price as of October 1, 1990, fixing volume weights at those for the fiscal year in question. The Secretary would calculate the percentage (if any) by which the WAMP had increased faster than inflation since October 1, 1990. That percentage would be applied to the manufacturer's sales to Medicaid for sole source and innovator multiple-source drugs (calculated using AMPs) for the fiscal year in question, and added rebates would be provided to each State in those amounts, to be included with the manufacturer's succeeding quarterly payment.

Based on utilization data supplied by the States, each manufacturer would rebate the appropriate amount to the State. Federal financial participation (FFP) to the State would reflect the discount (that is, the State and Federal government would share the discount in proportion to the State matching rate).

Coverage restrictions; prior authorization: Manufacturers that give discounts to the States would have all of their products (with limited exceptions) covered by the Medicaid program, subject to prior authorization at the State's option. New prescription drugs and biologicals would be exempt from prior authorization for one year (as explained below). Drugs or categories of drug products and their medical indications could be excluded from coverage if they appear on a statutory list (periodically updated by regulation) that represents drugs which, currently, are commonly subject to exclusion or restriction by State Medicaid programs. Examples of products on this list are: agents used for weight loss, cosmetic purposes, or smoking cessation; cough and cold remedies; over-the-counter medications; and barbiturates.

New drugs: States would be required to cover new drugs in their Medicaid programs without any restrictions. One year after the new drug is approved by the FDA, it would be treated as other drugs (i.e., subjected to permissible restrictions at State option). By requiring the coverage of new drugs, Medicaid beneficiaries will be assured access to innovative medications, and the States and the Secretary will be able to gather utilization data on which to base decisions about whether the new drug is subject to abuse or inappropriate utilization patterns.

Secretarial study of discounts and patient access: In 1993, the Secretary will be required to report and make recommendations to Congress concerning appropriate utilization controls for States to employ in their Medicaid programs, and an appropriate policy for Medicaid's payments for prescription drugs, including an evaluation of the policy established in this Act. In formulating such recommendations, the Secretary must consider whether this discount system affects patient access to medications and other medical care, and affects incentives for research and development of innovative drugs. The Secretary also must take into account the economics of pharmaceutical pricing, including factors such as volume purchased and delivery arrangements.

It is the expectation of the Committee that Congress would consider the recommendations of the Secretary and make appropriate changes in the law.

The Secretary also will be required to study and make recommendations to Congress concerning other issues, including the cost-effectiveness of reimbursing pharmacists for cognitive services, the adequacy of pharmacy reimbursement and payment rates for vaccines.

Generic drug dispensing: To encourage enforcement of generic substitution laws, the Federal Government also would be authorized to adjust Federal financial participation in cases where a brand-name product was dispensed when a less expensive generic product could have been prescribed under HCFA regulation and State law. In the study on reimbursement to pharmacists, the Secretary should review the current upper payment limit methodology with respect to multiple-source drugs, to determine whether an increase in the number of upper payment limits would additionally encourage the dispensing of generic multiple-source products. The Committee is concerned that the methodology for determining upper payment limits does not take into account the availability of the generic products throughout the country, which may lead to upper payment limits that are unreasonably low. In addition, the Secretary should review the applicability of financial incentives to encourage pharmacists to dispense generic products where appropriate to do so.

Drug utilization review: States would be required to institute drug utilization review programs providing for prospective drug utilization review (counseling of Medicaid clients) and retrospective review of claims to identify patterns of inappropriate or excessive prescribing or dispensing. A pharmacist would be required to make a "reasonable effort" to counsel and obtain information from Medicaid clients. For example, the pharmacist should ask the beneficiary about the medications that he or she currently is taking, and may, but shall not be required to call the beneficiary's physician about the client's condition and medications. There would be a temporary enhanced match of 75 percent for States to institute these programs.

Electronic claims processing: States would be encouraged to develop point-of-sale electronic claims systems by providing a temporary enhanced match of 90 percent.

MEDICAID PURCHASE OF PRIVATE INSURANCE

Present law

States are permitted to purchase private insurance for Medicaid beneficiaries, provided that the benefits are comparable to benefits provided to other Medicaid beneficiaries. Only a handful of States have taken advantage of this option, however, including, on a limited basis, New York, California, and Minnesota. According to officials of the Health Care Financing Administration, this probably is due, in part, to the requirement that all Medicaid beneficiaries receive benefits comparable in amount, duration, and scope (a requirement difficult to meet since many private policies are more generous than Medicaid, or differ somehow in their benefit packages).

Committee provision

States would be required to pay premiums, deductibles and coinsurance for Medicaid beneficiaries for private insurance policies when it is cost-effective to do so. The Secretary would establish guidelines for determining cost-effectiveness.

States would be required to ensure that the beneficiary receives benefits at least as generous as those provided by Medicaid; to the extent the private policy falls short, Medicaid would serve as a "wrap-around" policy. Beneficiaries would not be required to pay any portion of their premium or any cost-sharing required by the private policy (except, if administratively feasible) to the extent they would pay copayments under Medicaid. The comparability requirement (section 1905(a)(10) would be amended to permit beneficiaries for whom private insurance is purchased to receive benefits different in amount, duration and scope than other Medicaid beneficiaries.

Under this proposal, the State could also pay private insurance expenses for individuals not Medicaid-eligible but who would have to be covered to gain access to the employer-sponsored insurance.

COST SHARING FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

Present law

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 requires State Medicaid plans to pay Medicare cost sharing (including Part B and, where applicable, Part A premiums) for elderly individuals who are eligible to participate in the Medicare program and whose income and resources are below specified levels. These individuals are referred to as Qualified Medicare Beneficiaries (QMBs). Effective January 1, 1991, to qualify as a QMB, one's income must be under 95 percent of the Federal poverty level. Effective January 1, 1992, one's income must be under 100 percent of the Federal poverty level to qualify. In certain States (so-called "209(b)" States) the applicable income levels are 90 percent and 95 percent, respectively.

Committee provision

States (except 209(b) States) would be required to pay all cost sharing for those individuals who meet current QMB asset standards who have incomes below 100% of the Federal poverty level, effective January 1, 1991. In 209(b) States, the requirement would be to pay cost-sharing for those up to 95 percent of the Federal poverty level in 1991 and 100 percent in 1992. Also effective January 1, 1991, States would have the option of making individuals eligible for QMB status if their income does not exceed 133 percent of the Federal poverty level.

DISREGARD OF COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS IN CERTAIN MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

Present law

Whether an individual is determined to be a Qualified Medicare Beneficiary ("QMB") depends upon whether his or her income is less than a specified percentage of the Federal poverty level. Cost-of-living adjustments for cash benefits under title II of the Social Security Act become effective on January 1 of a calendar year. The Federal poverty levels for a year generally are not updated until the middle of February of that year.

As a result of this lag, individuals in these groups who were near (but below) the maximum income levels in one year may lose their Medicaid eligibility in the following year until the new poverty levels are issued. Likewise, new applicants may not be found eligible during this lag period, even though they should be.

Committee provision

The Committee-approved provision requires State Medicaid plans to disregard any increased income of Qualified Medicare Beneficiaries (QMBs) that is attributable to cost-of-living adjustments under title II that become effective during the period between January 1 and the last day of the month in which a State agency implements its annual revision of the official poverty line during that calendar year.

MEDICAID CHILD HEALTH PACKAGE

Present law

Children up to age 8: Pursuant to OBRA 1989, States are required to extend Medicaid eligibility to all pregnant women, infants, and children up to the age of 6 with family incomes up to 133% of the Federal poverty level. States also may cover children up to age seven (or, at State option, age 8) born after September 30, 1983 whose family incomes are below 100% of poverty. States also have the option of covering pregnant women and infants (under age one) up to 185% of the Federal poverty level.

Children up to age 19: Older children up to age 19 must be covered if they are AFDC recipients. States may offer Medicaid to children whose family income is within AFDC standards but who do not meet nonfinancial criteria for AFDC.

Continuous eligibility: States have the option of continuing coverage for a pregnant woman through the end of the second full month beginning after the end of the pregnancy, even if the woman would otherwise become ineligible during that period; the infant born to the woman remains eligible for the same period. Eligibility redeterminations are made periodically, at intervals determined by the State, for beneficiaries not eligible for cash assistance. When States determine that an individual is no longer eligible on one basis, the individual may be required to re-apply to get benefits on another basis by which they may be eligible.

Amount, duration and scope of services: Generally, States are permitted to determine amount, duration and scope of benefits under their Medicaid programs. Some States limit the number of hospital days covered, or the dollar amount paid for hospital services for a beneficiary, but States are not permitted to impose durational limits on medically necessary services provided to children under 1 year old in hospitals serving a disproportionate share of low-income patients with special needs. If the State pays for inpatient services on a prospective basis, the State must provide additional payment to disproportionate share hospitals for patients under 1 year old who have exceptionally long or costly stays ("outliers").

Committee provision

Children up to age 19: The Committee provision would require States to phase in Medicaid eligibility for children from age six up to age 19 in families whose income is below 100% of the Federal poverty level. The phase-in would be accomplished one year at a time.

Effective January 1, 1991, the bill would permit States to phase in coverage more quickly or to cover children up to 185% of the Federal poverty guidelines. The State could select the age groups for which it wishes to apply a faster phase-in or more generous income standard.

Effective January 1, 1991, the bill also would prohibit States from imposing: (1) day limits for children in disproportionate share hospitals, (2) day limits for infants in non-disproportionate share hospitals, and (3) dollar limits for infants in any hospital. States with prospective payment systems would be required to establish outlier payments for exceptionally costly or lengthy stays of children (up to age 19) in disproportionate share hospitals and infants in any hospital.

In addition infants born to women eligible for Medicaid due to their income level and pregnancy would remain eligible for Medicaid for one year without the need for a new application.

FRAIL ELDERLY

(Optional Home and Community-Based Care)

Present law

The Medicaid program covers nursing home services for the poor elderly, many of whom have "spent down" to certain asset and income standards to become eligible. These expenditures are often incurred when the person is in an institution, or when living at home and paying for home and community-based care out of their own pockets.

Medicaid generally does not cover home and community-based care, although States may obtain waivers to do so. In order to obtain these "2176" (section 1915(c)) waivers, States must complete a lengthy application process, and must demonstrate to HCFA that, without the waiver, the individuals to be served under the waiver program would require an institutional level of care, the cost of which would be reimbursed under the State plan, and that the average per capita expenditure for waiver services will not exceed the anticipated average per capita expenditures without the waiver.

As a result of current law, there are a number of low-income elderly people who need assistance at home but cannot get it under Medicaid because their State does not have a waiver program sufficient in scope to cover their needs. Some of these people will enter nursing homes in order to get Medicaid coverage because they cannot afford to purchase the care they need at home.

Committee provision

Permit States, at their option, to cover home and community-based care under their Medicaid programs for "functionally disabled" individuals over age 65 who receive SSI or meet the income and resource standards of their State's medically needy program.

The State would not be required to demonstrate, as it is to receive a waiver, that individuals receiving services otherwise would have required institutionalization, or show that the cost of services is no greater on average than the cost of institutional care. The Federal payments would be capped, however, at 50% of the average State per diem rate for Medicare skilled nursing home care, multiplied by the number of patient days for individuals receiving the benefit in the relevant quarter year. A "maintenance of effort" requirement would be imposed on States: failure to maintain current spending levels on home and community-based care would result in a reduction of Federal matching payments equal to the reduction in Statewide spending.

A person would be considered functionally disabled if he or she is unable to perform at least two of the following three "activities of daily living" (ADLs): toileting, transferring and eating, or has Alzheimer's Disease and meets Alzheimer's Disease-specific ADL criteria. Functional disability would be determined by an interdisciplinary team designated by the State. A qualified case manager would develop and periodically review an "individual community care plan" (ICCP) for the beneficiary and would be responsible for assuring that the specified care is provided.

The State could choose to cover any one or more of following services: homemaker/home health aide services; chore services; personal care services; nursing care services provided by or under the supervision of a registered nurse; respite care; training for family members; adult day health services; or other home and community care services approved by the Secretary.

The bill requires the Secretary to establish minimum quality standards for home and community-based care providers and for settings where long-term care services are provided, including board and care homes. The Secretary would be required to develop guidelines to, among other things, assure the safety of the beneficiaries and to protect them from abuse, neglect, financial exploitation, and inappropriate restraint.

Expenditures under the program will be capped at $200 million over five years. The funds identified for each year (1991 through 1995) will be allocated to each State in the proportion of the amount of Federal expenditures made available to the State for fiscal year 1989 (as reported in the quarterly form HCFA-64 expenditure reports) to the sum of Federal expenditures for all States, excluding territories. The statewideness requirement otherwise applicable under Medicaid would be waived for this program.

COMMUNITY SUPPORTED LIVING ARRANGEMENT SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Present law

Medicaid services designed to assist individuals with developmental disabilities are delivered in Medicaid-certified residential institutions known as ICF/MRs (Intermediate Care Facilities for the Mentally Retarded). Some Medicaid funding is also provided for community-based services for this population under the Medicaid home and community-based waiver program, but is relatively limited.

Committee provision

Adds a new optional service called Community Supported Living Arrangements (CSLA) under Medicaid. This provision recognizes the needs of those individuals with disabilities and their families, who wish to receive services in a community based setting rather than in an ICF/MR. This new service is designed to assist individuals with developmental disabilities and their families by providing services necessary to permit such an individual to live in an integrated environment, and to achieve increased independence and productivity. The Committee further intends this provision not limit in any way services provided through present and future Medicaid waivers in any state.

No fewer than four and no more than eight states will be permitted to adopt this new Medicaid optional service in the first five years. The Committee intends that any funds used in conjunction with this new option will be in addition to funds expended for any existing Medicaid services, including any waiver services, for which an individual receiving services under this program is already eligible. States desiring to provide this optional service must apply to the Secretary and must identify the services it will provide, the categories of individuals and families to whom it will provide such services, and the per capita cost of providing such services. In addition the state must outline a quality assurance system applicable to this new service, including program and provider certification, staff training, consumer grievance procedures, and community monitoring boards. For the purpose of this new option, the Secretary may allow states to waive comparability, statewideness, and freedom of choice under Medicaid.
